A New York telegram: "John Roach's assets are said to be about $4,000,000. His liabilities have not been ascertained, but it is thought he will be able to pay them in full, and have a handsome fortune left. His legal representatives will soon have a conference with Secretary Whitney, after which it is probable that he may resume business. All his employes have been paid in full. Only a sufficient force will be retained at his yards to fulfill existing contracts."

The only son of Mrs. Paran Stevens, a leader of New York society, died at Newport.

Barnum's elephant Albert, which killed his keeper, was taken to the Keene (N. H.) suburbs and shot, thirty-three members of a militia company firing at the beast at the same time. The remains will be sent to the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.

The exports of produce for the last week from the port of New York were valued at over $6,100,000.

The special commission sitting at Philadelphia returned a verdict that John McCullough, the tragedian, has been a lunatic for six months; but enjoys some lucid intervals. The value of his estate is placed at $44,534.

The captain of a schooner which arrived at Portland, Me., reports the capture alive of a veritable sea-serpent which weighs about 1,200 pounds and looks something like a turtle.

WESTERN.

The reports of ravages by grasshoppers in Colorado have been investigated by an agent of the Department of Agriculture, and found to be grossly exaggerated. No traces of the migratory species were found.

In a hard glove-fight near St. Paul, between Thompson, of Cleveland, and Hadley, colored, of St. Paul, five rounds were fought, when the referee gave the fight to Hadley because of Thompson's unfair work.

There will be no exposition at Cincinnati this year, the merchants of that city having determined to hold a monster bazaar, patterned after the famous fair at Nijni Novgorod Russia.

The Governor of Minnesota issued an appeal to formulate a petition to Congress to take action looking to opening up the mines of the Northwest to tide-water navigation as the surest means to avoid the present exorbitant transportation charges.

The Dakota Central Railroad Company will begin work at once on an extension from Centerville to Pierre via Yankton. The Mineral Narrow-Gauge Railroad, extending from Hancock to Calumet, Mich., has been sold to a New York syndicate for $200,000.

Gov. Dawes, of Nebraska, has issued a proclamation declaring a ten days' quarantine against cattle from Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, and the District of Columbia.

SOUTHERN.

David Ackles, colored, was hanged at Helena, Ark., for the murder of Frank Burrell and Relida Flanagan. At Halifax, N. C., Eaton Mills, a notorious colored desperado, was hanged in the presence of five thousand people.

J. J. Howard & Son, bankers, Cartersville, Ga., made an assignment. Their liabilities amount to $40,000.

Thomas J. Boasso, an aid on the Governor's staff, was shot at New Orleans by Miss Mary C. Kuhn, aged eighteen, who claims that Boasso deceived her by means of a forged marriage certificate.

There is great excitement in the village of Stepstone, Kentucky, over the killing of three men by Marshal Jerry Oakley. Oakley represents the local option party, and his victim were identified with the liquor interest. Friends of both sides are arming, and further bloodshed is apprehended.

An El Paso, (Texas) dispatch states that an east-bound Santa Fe passenger train was wrecked near Wallace, Texas, by striking a culvert which had been washed out by a rain-storm. Engineer Wilson, two firemen, and an extra fireman were killed, and one passenger, name unknown, had his leg broken.

Indians are raiding the frontier in Kinney County, Texas, and are reported to have killed thirty Mexicans.

WASHINGTON.

Ex-Senator Francis Kernan, of New York, has declined the appointment of Government Director of the Union Pacific Railroad lately offered him by the President.

At present there are 327 distilleries in operation in the United States, producing daily 101,424 gallons of spirits.

Secretary Manning has addressed a circular to manufacturers and others interested in the industrial arts, asking their views as to the feasibility of simplifying the tariff and substituting specific for ad-valorem duties. The results of the inquiry will be laid before Congress.

The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics just issued shows that the number of immigrants arrived in the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, was 387,821, being 122,013 less than the immigration during the preceding fiscal year, and 401,171 less than during the year ending June 30, 1882, the year of the greatest immigration.

The Director of the Mint has authorized the employment of supernumeraries to relieve the ladies in the Adjusters' office of the Philadelphia Mint, eighty-four in number, from overwork. These ladies have been working from twelve to fourteen hours daily for the sake of the extra pay, but at the expense of their health.

Maj. Heuer, of the corps of engineers, has submitted his report of the progress of work on the improvement of the south pass of the Mississippi river for the past fiscal year to Gen. Newton, chief of engineers. He says: "One of the interesting facts connected with the improvement is that the full depths and widths of the channels required by law have been maintained throughout the year by Mr. Eads, and that no dredging of any kind has been required on any of this work since February, 1883. No work has been done in the pass or at the head of the passes during the year."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Five families who arrived at New York from Bremen were sent back as paupers.

The American Association of Photographers, in session at Buffalo, elected W. H. Potter, of Indianapolis, President for the ensuing year, and determined to hold its next annual convention at St. Louis.

A resolution of thanks to the officers and men engaged in the suppression of the half-breed rebellion has been adopted by the Dominion House of Commons. Twenty thousand dollars were also voted to Gen. Middleton.

Business failures throughout the country for the week were 225, as compared with a total of 185 for the week preceding, and 204 for the week before. The general trade situation as reported by special telegrams to Bradstreet's, is characterized by the customary dullness observable in this season of the year. The plethora of money reported from the leading financial centers is as heavy as ever. The general tenor of the breadstuffs movement has been downward. The visible supply decline and the momentary Afghan war scare promised a revival, but the influence thereof soon died away. In the spring wheat country, harvesting is but two weeks away, which has stimulated the receipts of old wheat at primary markets. No gain in general business is promised until the crops begin to move. Indian corn and provision prices have followed in the wake of those of wheat.

Clearing-house returns for the week make a favorable showing both as compared with the week previous and the corresponding week in 1881. The great trade centers, including Chicago, manifest large gains.

In the contest for the League baseball championship, the Chicago nine still maintains the lead, with the New York, Providence, Philadelphia, and St. Louis clubs following in the order named. The Boston and Detroit clubs are tied for the next place, and the Buffalos are at the foot of the class. Chicago has won 45 games, New York 42, Providence 34, Philadelphia 27, and Detroit and Boston 20 each.

In the recent battle between the Colombian revolutionists under Gen. Camargo and the Government forces the losses exceeded five hundred on each side. The insurgents will, it is thought, confine their operations to the Magdalena River and the interior. Political matters on the Isthmus are settled and good order prevails. Yellow fever is epidemic at Aspinwall and all over the Isthmus. The crews of the American vessels are much enervated by the climate.

The weather was very hot throughout the country last week, the thermometer registering from 90 to 100 degrees in the shade. Many prostrations from heat were reported.

FOREIGN.

M. Olivier Pain, the French journalist who gained notoriety as the adviser of El Mehdi, and who was recently reported to have been killed by the Arabs, is now said to be alive and well at Berber.

An explosion in a gunpowder and petroleum warehouse at Arles, France, caused a heavy loss of life.

An attack by the Soudanese rebels upon Kassala was repulsed, the assailants losing 3,000 men killed and wounded. The garrison afterward captured the rebel camp with 2,000 oxen and sheep and 700 rifles.

It is said that the King of Dahomey has massacred most of the French residing in villages near his capital, and has 1,000 prisoners who are to be killed and eaten.

The latest rumor concerning the Mehdi is that he died of small-pox at Gobra June 29.

Prince Hohenlohe has been appointed Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, and will be succeeded as Ambassador to Paris by Lieut. Gen. von Schweinitz, who now represents Germany at the Russian Court.

It is announced that the Russian Government has made fresh proposals to England respecting the Afghan frontier. Meantime it has been decided to add fifty torpedo-boats to the Russian fleet in the Black Sea.

Aristocratic circles in London are excited over a personal encounter in Rotten Row between Lord Lonsdale and Sir George Chetwynd, which is said to have grown out of their rivalry for the favor of Mrs. Langtry.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The sad tidings of the demise of Gen. Grant, though not unexpected, were received throughout the country with universal manifestations of grief and sympathy. In London flags were placed at half-mast on the American Exchange and American Consulate. Mr. Gladstone and Mr. John Bright were much affected on receiving the news. President Cleveland sent the following dispatch to Mrs. Grant at Mount MacGregor: "Accept this expression of my heartfelt sympathy in this hour of your great affliction. The people of the nation mourn with you, and would reach, if they could, with kindly comfort, the depths of the sorrow which is yours alone, and which only the pity of God can heal." Immediately upon receiving the news of the death of the General, the President directed that the flag on the White House should be placed at half-mast. The lowering of the flag was the first intimation that the citizens of Washington had of the death of the distinguished man. A few minutes after the White House flag was placed at half-mast the flags on all the public buildings and for many private ones were placed in like position. A Cabinet meeting was called, and the following proclamation was issued by President Cleveland:

The President of the United States has just received the sad tidings of the death of that illustrious citizen and ex-President of the United States, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, at Mount MacGregor, in the State of New York, to which place he had lately been removed in the endeavor to prolong his life.

In making this announcement to the people of the United States the President is impressed with the magnitude of the public loss of a great military leader, who was in the hour of victory magnanimous; amid disaster serene and self-sustained; who in every station, whether as a soldier or as a Chief Magistrate twice called to power by his fellow-countrymen, trod unswervingly the pathway of duty, undeterred by doubts, single-minded and straightforward. The entire country has witnessed with deep emotion his prolonged and patient struggle with painful disease and has watched by his couch of suffering with tearful sympathy.

The destined end has come at last, and his spirit has returned to the Creator who sent it forth. The great heart of the nation, that followed him when living with love and pride, bows now in sorrow above him dead, tenderly mindful of his virtues, his great patriotic services, and of the loss occasioned by his death. In testimony of respect to the memory of Gen. Grant it is ordered that the Executive Mansion and the several departments at Washington be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, and that all public business shall on the day of the funeral be suspended; and the Secretaries of War and of the Navy will cause orders to be issued for appropriate military and naval honors to be rendered on that day.

The death-bed scene at Mount MacGregor is thus described by an eye-witness:

With one last weary opening and closing of the eyes and a little gasp, so faint that it was but a gentle sigh, Gen. Grant expired this morning as peacefully and painlessly as a tired child might drop into a quiet sleep. Death could hardly come to any man in form freer from terror than it came to him. All who were dearest to him were at his side. His hand was fast clasped in that of his faithful wife; his daughter looked over her mother's shoulder into his face, and his brow was gently pressed by the hand of his oldest son, Frederick, who through all the painful months of the illness has been so devotedly at the sufferer's side. His three physicians, grave to him more like near personal friends than mere professional attendants, stood a little back from the family group. The devoted Harrison leaned dejectedly by the door, and Henry, the nurse, sat in a distant corner. The little grandchildren had not been called and were fast asleep in their beds. It was eight minutes past eight by the clock. It was Dr. Shrady who first spoke after the soul had taken its flight. Seeing the fluttering breath had ceased to come, he bent his head and said: "At last." Dr. Douglas—haggard-worn with anxiety—chokingly murmured: "All is over." There was a silence for several moments, broken occasionally by a subdued sob, as the family bent their heads with handkerchiefs to their eyes. There were no excessive demonstrations of grief. The event had been so long hanging over the heads of all as inevitable that its advent was calmly received. No one who had witnessed the dead man's long agony could wish to see it hopelessly prolonged. Of all, none was calmer than Mrs. Grant, though it was feared she would be most prostrated. She went but little, and soon raised her head and walked quietly, escorted by Dr. Newman, to the sofa. Then the physicians and the family crept one by one from the room, and the end of Grant's brave struggle for life had indeed come at last. The General's death was, as it had been predicted by his physicians it would be, through sheer exhaustion. When he died he weighed much less than one hundred pounds—a mere skeleton. In his moments he was conscious during this last relapse he knew that death was near at hand, but he did not fear it in the least. He had not, in fact, from the first shown any dread of death, his only apprehension being that the end would be accompanied by extreme pain. His doctor assured him that he should not suffer, and thereby took measures that he did not. His dissolution was absolutely painless. From midnight until the moment of his death he never made a motion, except in opening his eyes and in now and then faintly stirring his lips, when moisture was applied to them.

FAILURE OF JOHN ROACH.

The Famous Builder of Ships Compelled to Make an Assignment.

Preferences Given for an Aggregate Amount of Over One Hundred Thousand Dollars.

[New York telegram.]

Saturday afternoon a notice of assignment was filed in the County Clerk's office by John Roach, the well-known ship-builder. About the same time notice was posted at the iron-works on East 9th street to the effect that employes would be paid on Monday by Mr Mooney, Roach's book-keeper, and that the works would be closed till further notice. George M. Quintard and George E. Weed are named assignees, and preferences are given to the amount of $122,217.78. The preferred creditors are William Rowland, of New Brunswick, N. J., $62,217.18; the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of Brooklyn, $20,000, and P. W. Gallaudet & Co., $40,000. Shortly after the notice was posted at the works Mr. Roach, accompanied by his two sons, Garrett and Stephen, left for the ship-builder's place on the Sound. Mr. Garrett Roach said in answer to questions that the complications arising from the recent decisions of Attorney General Garland had induced his father to place all his property in the hands of trustees, so that the interests of all creditors might be guarded. Mr. Quintard, one of the assignees, said the assignment had been a surprise to him. There was no doubt as to its being due to Secretary Whitney's action in the case of the Dolphin, and he (Quintard) thought Mr. Roach feared similar action on the part of the Secretary in regard to other contracts. There was $69,000 owing to Mr. Roach for repairs on the double-turret monitor Puritan, besides money on the three cruisers, the Atlanta, the Boston, and the Chicago. He believed there was $223,000 due on the Chicago, and $6,000 each on the Atlanta and Boston, and uncertainty as to payment of these amounts was the cause of the assignment. Mr. Quintard thought Mr. Roach's property was sufficient to pay all claims. He added that Mr. Roach was completely broken down physically. Mr. Aaron J. Vanderpoel, one of the great shipbuilder's lawyers, said his client was a very sick man, but he was sure every creditor would be paid in full, as Mr. Roach could pay $2 for every $1 he owed.

[Chester (Pa.) dispatch.]

The news of the failure of John Roach caused considerable excitement here, where his solvency had never been questioned. Up to within a year ago his weekly pay-roll was never less than $15,000. Now it is about $7,000, but this will be reduced to-morrow, when 400 men will be laid off. Only enough workmen will be kept to finish the Mallory ship Comal. Representatives of the Winchester Company say the ship-yard was a separate corporation and was not included in the assignment. The yard will be affected, however, and as Mr. Roach is a large stockholder in the Chester rolling mills, blast furnace, and Combination Iron and Steel Company, located here, it is difficult to foretell the result on these places. Work on the cruisers Boston and Chicago and the monitor Puritan will virtually be suspended.

Secretary Whitney on the Failure.

[Newport (R. I.) special.]

Secretary of the Navy Whitney, speaking of the assignment of John Roach & Sons, said to-night: "I must admit that I was very much surprised to learn of the assignment of Mr. Roach, and I am sorry for it, yet I do not see how the Navy Department of the Government is in any way responsible. As a matter of fact there is only $15,000 or $20,000 difference between the Government and Mr. Roach. All he could connect the Government with in the matter is this: He would say: 'The Dolphin is ready and the Government refuses to receive her, and I cannot get my $15,000 or $20,000.' Now whether that would cause the suspension of a man like that, I cannot tell you. In the matter of the assignment, and the individuals preferred, it is clear that the Government is protected, for the reason that we hold the bondsmen whom Mr. Roach has given the preference." The Secretary said there was no reason why the other contracts should not be proceeded with.

Roach on the Disaster.

"As to the causes which have led up to my assignment, strictly speaking, it is not a failure," said John Roach to a New York reporter; "that is to say, my assignees will be able to pay $2 for every $1 of liabilities if they realize anything like the real value of my property. I cannot say what the exact amount of my liabilities is, nor what the sum of the assets will be to meet them. If the people understood this matter, if the mendacious free-trader had not so extensively deceived them, the failure of John Roach would be looked upon from ocean to ocean as a national calamity. This is not a party question. I have been a Republican, but above that I have first, last, and ever been an American. It was my great ambition that our nation should recover its glory and prosperity on the seas. I incorporated companies to sail vessels, and, despite the fact that the Government lent me scant encouragement, while foreign Governments practically supported their ship-builders, I have proved that it is possible for us to secure an immense foreign trade and to become, if the Government would but lift its consenting finger, the greatest sea-trading nation of the earth. Business became stagnant about a year ago when the Presidential nominations were being made. The 'free ship' movement was strong, for it has a catchy sound. The Democratic party is supposed to favor free ships, and when the election excitement began and people saw the possibility of Democratic success and of the passage of a law that would mean the annihilation of American shipbuilding there was no business. All the work, therefore, that I have on hand has been the construction of the new dispatch-boat and the three new vessels. In the meantime the Democracy had come into power, and prepared to prove their prophecy that the appropriation was not honestly spent. The Dolphin, a strong, substantial, excellent vessel, was condemned on the most puerile technicalities, and to add to this injustice, Mr. Garland has repudiated the contracts and practically said that there exists no binding agreement between me and the Government. That beyond the climax."

EATON RAPIDS JOURNAL.

A more lovely or picturesque spot in nature is seldom found. With railroad advantages it would rival any of the towns in Northern Michigan as a resort, or a business point. We were only too sorry to leave so charming a place so soon. * * * At this point we found a former citizen of Eaton Rapids, Chas. J. Strang, of the Charlevoix Journal, who received the rudiments of his profession in the Journal office, under the management of J. B. TenEyck, nearly twenty years ago.

GRAND HAVEN HERALD.

Charlevoix is pleasantly located on Lake Michigan with two beautiful inland lakes within sight. On these lakes are located the two great summer resorts of the Chicago Club and Kalamazoo people. The town has 1800 population, two newspapers, the Sentinel and Journal. Of all places we visited while on this trip we take pleasure in saying that Charlevoix is the best summer resort on the great lakes—except Grand Haven.

ST. CLAIR REPUBLICAN.

Charlevoix lays claim to being the best adapted by nature for a summer resort of any place in this region, owing to the fact that it enjoys the advantage of two lakes, on one or the other of which the water is always still. The cottages, many of them very artistic in appearance, are arranged in terraces on the banks which rise to a height of about one hundred feet, and the whole forms a beautiful picture.

Notes and News.

The Detroit Evening Journal has a new dress and a new head,—a marked improvement.

On our inside pages will be found a rather full biographical sketch of Gen. Grant, with portraits, etc.

The Michigan State Democrat, published at Detroit, is a new candidate for public favor, and judging by the style and tone of the first number it will prove a formidable rival to some older and more pretentious journals. It contains four pages of seven columns each, and is furnished at the low price of one dollar per year.

Missionary Work.

A reverend gentleman in Washington lately called on Secretary Manning, and that officer was disposed to be facetious.

"We can't do anything more toward making a minister of you, can we?" he inquired.

"No, I presume not, as my commission comes from a higher power. I'll tell you what I would like, though."

"Name it," said the urbane ex-editor.

"I'd like to be appointed as a sort of missionary to the heathen."

"That's a little out of our line; but where do you want to go? We may give you some help."

"It isn't very far. I'd like to be made chaplain of the house of representatives."

"And the house isn't republican, either," said the secretary the next day, when he was telling a friend about the interview."—Merchant Traveler.

Why Her Lover Enlisted.

The mystery of George S. Carter's disappearance last September, says an Uxbridge, Mass., telegram to the New York World, has been cleared up by the publication of a little love story with a romantic sequel in which Carter figures as the live hero. Young Carter was engaged to a young lady living here, and preparations had been made for the nuptials. On the evening of the second day before the appointed time young Carter drove to the home of his affianced and asked her to take a ride. She made some excuse for preferring to stay at home that evening, and Carter drove off alone in a sad and dejected frame of mind. He was not satisfied with her treatment of him, and this dissatisfaction was rather heightened an hour or so later when he saw his young lady riding with another young man with whom he had not been on very good terms, and of whom he was rather jealous. He followed the young couple to know where they intended to go and learn how late they would remain together. He was satisfied that his betrothed was not true to him, and he drew his savings, amounting to $1,000, from the bank and started for New York, where he enlisted in the regular army. His departure caused a sensation, and for a long time no one could tell the cause of Carter's departure nor his destination. At length a letter came from New Mexico telling his parents that their son was a soldier. He wrote again, asking their help in getting a discharge from the army, and his anxiety was no doubt increased when he learned that his parents had been left $30,000 by the death of a relative. The war secretary has not yet replied favorably and is rather inclined to deny the petition on the ground that enlistments are very scarce.

An almanac 3,000 years old, found in Egypt, is in the British Museum. It is supposed to be the oldest in the world. It was found on the body of an Egyptian, who had, doubtless, regarded it with as much reverence as he did the Egyptian Bible—"The Book of the Dead"—and, indeed, it is strongly religious in character. The days are written in red ink, and under each is a figure, followed by three characters signifying the probable state of the weather for that day. Like the other Egyptian manuscripts it is written on papyrus. It is written in columns. It is not in its entirety, but was evidently torn before its owner died. It clearly established the date of the reign of Rameses the Great, but contains nothing else of value.

The Household.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Headache seem to take the place of the three graces in many households. How sad is the condition of such a family. The kidneys and liver often get deranged and perhaps the parents or even children may be suffering from diabetes, bright's disease or some kindred disease. As a preventive and also a cure for all the diseased conditions of the human family no preparation equals Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure. Only $1.00 for large bottles.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Nature Cleanses

The system, if given an opportunity, but very few persons find time to give nature a chance and so the blood, which is the great drain for carrying away impurities, becomes so clogged with disease that unless some help is given it, the person will be afflicted by blood poisoning and suffer with pimples, boils, carbuncles, cancers, scrofula, &c., and often die without help. Save yourself from all this suffering and loss of time by using Parmelee's Blood Purifier which prevents all diseases in the system. Large bottles $1.00.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

GRANT DEAD.

The Old Hero of Appomattox, After Life's Fitful Fever, Sleeps Well.

Surrounded by His Family, the Grim Old Soldier Passed Peacefully Away.

His Life Prolonged Many Hours by Hypodermic Injections of Brandy.

A decided change for the worse took place in the condition of Gen. Grant on the afternoon of Tuesday, July 21, and it dawned upon the physician and family that the illustrious and long-suffering patient was surely sinking. Shortly after one o'clock on the morning of the 22d, a hypodermic injection of brandy was administered, which had the effect of brightening him up. The weakness continued throughout Wednesday, the sufferer's nourishment consisting wholly of two glasses of milk. The hypodermic injections of brandy were repeated at intervals.

Once during the morning the General attempted to write, but succeeded only in writing the date, the effort being greater than warranted by the little remaining strength. He spoke at intervals, but his voice was very feeble. At 2:15 the members of the family and Dr. Newman were grouped in the darkened room near Gen. Grant. Observing their evidence of fear ing the General said: "I do not want anybody to be distressed on my account." At 5 p. m. the pulse was 156. At 6:50 p. m. the bulletin was sent out that the General was sinking. At 7:40 U. S. Grant, Jr., and Drs. Shrady and Sands reached Mount MacGregor by special train, and Dr. Douglas said that Gen. Grant could live but a few hours. Dr. Newman also said that the General had almost reached the end. Telegrams came from all parts of the country inquiring about the dying chieftain's condition. At 9:05 p. m. he was unconscious, and fruitless efforts were made to arouse him. It was then believed that the beginning of the end was at hand. At 10 o'clock his respiration was 45. His arms were cold up to his elbows. The General could only speak in a faint, husky whisper. The General was fully aware of his condition. At times he lay with his eyes closed, and while everybody around him thought he was sleeping he was fully aware of all that was taking place about him. His faithful servants were with him nearly all the time. At midnight bottles of hot water were placed at Gen. Grant's feet to induce warmth, and mustard draughts were applied upon the stomach and breast to preserve the flagging circulation. At one o'clock on the morning of Thursday, the 23d, the General remained in the same quiet condition. Hypodermies of brandy were being used. At two o'clock in the morning the family were astir, and the whole house was lighted up with the exception of the reception-room. Here the General lay in bed, and a dim light was burning on a table near the window. The physicians were still near him, as was also Col. Grant, while the ladies were in an adjoining room. His condition remained comparatively unchanged.

At 3 o'clock Gen. Grant was in a somnolent condition. The respirations had grown shallow and the General was no longer able to expectorate because of the weakness, which was increasing. At 3:35 a. m. Dr. Shrady was walking in front of the cottage for the purpose of obtaining some fresh air. Col. Grant appeared suddenly and beckoned to him, when the Doctor ascended the piazza and entered the sick-room. A moment later the whole household were grouped about the General. Day was dawning over the eastern hills, and it was feared that the rising of the sun would mark the close of the long struggle. At 4 a. m. the respirations were 50, the pulse so rapid as not to be counted, and hypodermies, which had been quite freely administered through the night, had no longer any marked effect. At 4:30 a. m. Dr. Douglas said: "Gen. Grant is just alive, and is liable to pass away at any moment." At 4:50 o'clock the breathing was quickened and reached 50 to the minute.

At 5 o'clock Dr. Douglas remarked that the General's brain, heart, and lungs were alive, and that was about all he could say. At 5:25 the respirations had increased to sixty, and the death-rattle, occasioned by the filling of the lungs and throat with mucus, was plainly heard by the loving and devoted ones at his bedside. He then recognized his friends by opening his eyes. At a few minutes before 8 o'clock Gen. Grant breathed his last. The end was peaceful and without evident pain. He was surrounded by all the members of his family, and all were prepared for the final moment when it arrived. For over an hour before the General's death he had drawn his breath only with the utmost difficulty, the respirations coming in long, gurgling gasps, the throat being clogged with mucus. At the last moment the General was, it seemed, conscious, and for a brief space it seemed that the group of watchers could not realize that the General was at last beyond their care.

—And thus passes from earth the most illustrious soldier of his time. The insidious disease to which he at last succumbed has long been in progress, and he has faced the end which he knew was near with the same quiet courage that has faced every disaster with which he has been confronted. The life of the old hero has had few more impressive scenes than this last one of struggle against the common enemy of mankind—a struggle prompted by no selfish motives and by no trace of fear, but solely that he might perform yet one more service for his country, and complete with the pen the task that was begun with the sword. The end of his hard-working life found him still at work with untiring purpose and with energies unabated save by physical weakness. When he could no longer maintain the strife he surrendered with the dignity of those alone who have never given in to anything less than the inevitable, and passed "out of reach of time, out of sight of love, out of hearing of hatred," from the circle of friends and relatives who mourned him, from the country of which he had deserved so well, from the world of which his is one of the foremost names.

Now that the record of this man's life is completed, remarks a contemporary, it is surely best that we forget whatever there may have been of the inglorious about his later years, in sight of the glorious years which won for him a high place forever in the hearts of the American people. Nor is it any real discredit to the man who has once done so much for his country that he was at last caught in the world's great snare, but rather a sign to set more sharply in relief that simplicity and straightforwardness of character which met and triumphed over all open dangers and difficulties, and was only found unfit to be pitted against the practices of the trickster. All great men cannot be Napoleons or Cæsars, and history emphasizes no fact more strongly than that the qualities which led to victory on the battle-field are not those most needed in the larger field of life. For the services of Grant as a military leader we may be profoundly, reverently thankful. That as a statesman and a private citizen he was at times misled or at fault should not make us for one moment forget how great those services were. On this day of sorrow our one thought should be of those deeds which have made their doer one of the great historic Americans. The English hero whose name is one with that of Waterloo lived to make his after years one great mistake, but men no longer remember this against him, and the words which the laureate sang in his praise we may with peculiar fitness apply to our own lost hero:

Our greatest, yet with least pretense,
Great in council and great in war,
Foremost captain of his time,
Rich in saving common sense,
And, as the greatest only are,
In his simplicity sublime.

AWAITING THE FINAL SUMMONS.

Scenes In and Abont the House of Death a Few Hours Before the End.

About and around the cottage, says a special from Mount MacGregor, all was still and quiet, except for the occasional twitter of some belated bird in the birches or pines. Mrs. Grant, attired in a loose gown of white, came out upon the veranda and seated herself in one of the many deserted willow chairs that were scattered in groups about the piazza. Ten minutes she sat motionless, gazing away to the east, where the gray tint of another day had grown to a full promise. Her face rested against one hand, and she was evidently wrapped in thought. Suddenly there came the sound of a rattling, laboring cough from within. It was the General clearing the affected parts of his throat of mucus. Mrs. Grant left the piazza quickly and seated herself by the General's side, slowly fanning the sick man's face. The coughing was not severe, but only incidental. Col. Fred Grant entered the room while the nurse was aiding the General, and took a place at the side and behind his father. The nurse fetched a lamp and held it at the sick man's shoulder, and at the moment the General turned his face toward the light and upward to bid the nurse bring his pad and pencil. His wish was not at the instant understood, and, turning a trifle further, the General repeated his wish. The scene at the moment was a picture in shadows. As the flickering rays fell across the face of the General, it became a grim Rembrandt, with strong, rugged lines broken down by suffering and pain.

On his head was the skull-cap that at all times lends a startling effect to the sick man's appearance, and from beneath it straggled the hair that clung in sweat-moistened locks about the emaciated neck. A crimson scarf had been thrown over the back of the General's chair, but as he leaned forward it drew across his shoulders, one end being gathered under his arm. A dark dressing-gown covered the patient's attenuated form, and a handkerchief encircled his neck. The gray of the close-cut beard seemed white, and the lines on cheek and forehead were deepened, and when the face was turned upward to speak the eyes seemed grayer, too, and abnormally large. They were clear and steady, showing that the General's reason was clearly at his command, but there was a wistful and yearning expression in them. The General's face, as he spoke, appeared strained and drawn, but its color and fullness were not such as would be expected after such suffering and care. The lips moved heavily and the whisper was husky and low, but the nurse understood, and the pad and pencil were brought. Then, while the red light of the lamp fell on his downcast face, he wrote, but only briefly. The slip was handed to Dr. Douglas, who at once turned it over to Col. Grant, who had arisen and stood beside his mother at the General's side. It was a private family communication, and when finished the sick man resumed his half-reclining position, with his head slightly inclined forward and his elbows on the sides of the chair, while the fingers of either hand were interlocked, each with the other, beneath his chin.

The family were all gathered at the side of the sick man, and again Dr. Newman, at about the same hour as last night, and at Mrs. Grant's request, knelt beside the General and prayed. Heads were bowed and silent tears were on the cheeks of men as well as women. After an hour death seemed a little less rapidly gaining on the man it has pursued just nine months today, for it is just nine months ago to-day that Gen. Grant walked into Dr. Douglas' office to seek his professional aid for the cancer that has done what foes and war could not. Then the doctors and clergyman strolled out upon the piazza and sat near the parlor window, and Jesse Grant joined them at times, but the other members of the family remained in the sick-room and watched and waited, while the General answered "yes" and "no" to several questions.

HIS SICKNESS.

An Account of the Dead General's Illness—His Fortitude.

The decline of Gen. Grant's health may really be said to date from his severe fall upon the sidewalk over a year ago, when he received the injury to his hip. Last September, while the General was at Long Branch with his family, he spoke for the first time of a swelling and soreness of the tongue. He refused to see a physician about it, and preferred to treat it as a joke. Later on, however, the trouble increased so that it interfered with his speech and the taking of food. At the earnest solicitation of his family and friends he consulted the physicians. The latter decided that he was suffering from a cancerous affliction of the mouth, that this, together with the trouble of the tongue, was aggravated by the patient's excessive smoking. Gen. Grant, there ore, reduced his quota of cigars one-half. The real condition of the General's health was not made public, however, until Jan. 11, when his throat trouble had increased to an alarming point and took on a more violent form. From this time on his condition varied, at times allowing him to ride out, and at others confining him to his bed and causing great alarm in the family. He was attended by Dr. Fordyce Barker and other of the most eminent physicians and surgeons. During the latter part of January, however, the rumor gained credence that the reports of the medical journals upon his case had been decidedly rose-colored to allay the fears of the public. It was made known, also, that his physical condition was completely shattered, and that the affection of the tongue had developed into a malignant and fatal disease. From this time on he was only able to take liquid nourishment, with a few exceptional days, and he was unable to sleep save in naps. Besides the ulceration of the throat the tongue was painfully swollen and inflamed, and the patient suffered so from neuralgia in the head that most of his teeth had to be extracted. During all this time the General had been patient and uncomplaining, and had worked every day upon his military autobiography, scarcely stopping to revise his "copy," for fear he would not live to finish the work.

After April 20 Gen. Grant greatly improved. He was able to take frequent drives in the park, which did him great good. About this time it was announced that if the improvement continued he would go away to the mountains, and also that he would, if possible, take a trip to California. April 27 he celebrated his 63d birthday by a drive, and his physicians were jubilant over his improved condition. In May he resumed work on his book, dictating to his stenographer. He suffered considerably from the effort, but with frequent interruptions he continued the work. May 10, he was able to walk several blocks with the assistance of a cane, but three days later he was much worse, and it was feared the end was at hand. He again rallied, however, and in the beginning of June the drives were decided not to be beneficial and they were discontinued. It was decided about the middle of June to remove the patient to Mount MacGregor, and on June 16 he went there in a special train, accompanied by his family. The General stood the trip fairly well, and the succeeding day astonished his physician by walking to the top of a steep knoll. But the effort was too much, and he suffered a relapse. At Mount MacGregor he has lived ever since, with some days of suffering, but on the whole being better than if he had remained in the stifling city.

The Fatal Lump at the Roof of the Mouth.

Gen. Grant's disease first made itself apparent in June, 1884, while he was at his cottage at Long Branch. While eating fruit at lunch he felt a lump in the roof of his mouth. He mentioned the fact to Mr. George W. Childs, whose cottage adjoins his, the lawns being in common. Dr. Da Costa, whose brother-in-law was chief of Grant's medical staff, was visiting Mr. Childs, and at the latter's suggestion he called on the General. Having examined the throat, he advised Gen. Grant to consult Dr. Fordyce Barker, his family physician, at once. The General made little complaint about the matter after that until autumn. One day in September, however, the General inquired of Mr. Childs: "What did Dr. Da Costa say about my throat?" Then, for the first time, Mr. Childs, who, like all the other friends of the General at Long Branch, thought that the ailment had disappeared, had his suspicions aroused. Dr. Da Costa was seen again by Mr. Childs and asked whether the disease could be incipient cancer. The physician avoided a direct answer, but repeated that the General should see his family physician immediately. It was not until almost the last week in October that the old soldier thought it necessary to consult Dr. Barker.

One of the first intimations that the public had of Gen. Grant's illness was when Mr. Childs invited him to Philadelphia to a series of public receptions some months later. The General declined on the advice of his physicians, and wrote in an explanatory letter dated Feb. 2: "I am feeling quite well, except a soreness at the root of the tongue and the tonsil over it, which causes me great pain in talking, and especially when I attempt to swallow water. I have not smoked a cigar since the 20th of November."

On Feb. 25 a telegram from New York, based on reliable medical authority, created general alarm among Gen. Grant's friends. It said: "It is a fact that should no longer be concealed from the country that Gen. Grant is rapidly breaking down, and apparently without hope of reaction, and unless there should be some unexpected relief he will not be long among the living. He is wonderfully patient and uncomplaining, and he profoundly appreciates the expressions of sympathy which have been called out by his recent appalling misfortunes."

VARIOUS MATTERS.

The Chicago Syndicate's Conditions at Last Accepted for Building the Texas Capitol.

A Rich Man Goes Begging for a Burial Place—Explosion Caused by a Toothpick—Etc., Etc.

Texas' Big Capitol.

The Building Commissioners and Capitol Board met on Tuesday, says a dispatch from Austin, Texas. The board consists of Governor Ireland, Controller Swain, State Treasurer Lubbock, Attorney General Templeton, and Land Commissioner Walsh. The Building Commissioners are Messrs. Lee and McLaurin and Supervising Architect Walker. The board, with one dissenting voice (that of Treasurer Lubbock), voted to accept the proposition of Colonel Abner Taylor, of the Chicago syndicate, to build the State House of red granite, from the mountains of Burnet County, sixty miles northwest of Austin. Under the new agreement, the building will cost the contractor $500,000 extra, but the State agrees to omit two porticos and furnish the granite and 500 convicts to work it. Col. Taylor was present at the meeting, and says he will immediately put a large force at work. A railroad fifteen miles long has to be built before the granite is reached. A dispatch from a convention of Knights of Labor was laid before the meeting, solemnly protesting against the employment of convicts. Col. Taylor says he will employ every granite cutter in Texas at union prices. The Texas State House is to be finished according to the new contract in two years. The Texans are much pleased with the magnanimous and honorable bearing and conduct of Col. Taylor throughout the negotiations, which have extended over a week and involved millions. Both sides made concessions, and Col. Taylor showed Gov. Ireland he was not to be outdone.

A Book-Keeper Wrecks a Bank.

A Sedalia (Mo.) special says that "an examination of the books of the Sedalia Saving Bank, from which R. E. King, the bookkeeper, embezzled $10,000 on July 3 and absconded, revealed that there had been systematic defalcations during the last five years, amounting to about $38,000, besides the $10,000 returned, making $48,000, or nearly the capital stock of $50,000. King was arrested on a warrant sworn out by one of the directors and placed under bond of $1,500, which was to-day raised to $5,000. Officers of the bank have published a card saying that on account of serious loss by having their funds abstracted it would be necessary to suspend, but arrangements had been made to pay every dollar of the deposits with interest, and all depositors could call and get their money at pleasure. The matter had been kept quiet by the bank, which had denied the reports that had gotten out, and the announcement created quite a sensation. Nearly all concerned censure the bank officers for retaining King when his bad habits were well known."

Buried Like a Pauper.

The funeral of Edward Gillan, who shot his wife and killed himself at Cleveland, Ohio, was a strange one. A telegram from that city says: "The man was a Roman Catholic, but some years ago he was excommunicated, and no priest would consent to conduct the funeral services. His daughter refused to allow a Protestant minister to officiate, and consequently no service was performed and no hymn was sung. The remains lay in a rich casket with silver ornaments. A large number called to see the corpse. The funeral was attended only by a few old people, who sat by the coffin smoking pipes. There was considerable trouble securing pall-bearers, but finally six men consented to act. The body was then taken to the Catholic cemetery, but as Gillan had been excommunicated it was refused burial there, and thus the remains of the man who left $50,000 worth of property were buried in the potter's field."

A Plucky Woman.

A Lafayette (Ind.) dispatch says that "a rough-looking man entered the kitchen door of one of our prominent houses and inquired for the lady of the house. Being informed by the hired girl that she was not at home he became very loquacious, and wound up by making love to the girl. Pretending not to be opposed to his advances, she watched her opportunity and when he approached her she seized a large dipper and from a wash-boiler on the stove hurled a quantity of boiling suds into his face, scalding his eyes in a terrible manner. As he groped his way out of the house he was heard to exclaim: "Oh, sheol," but in the language of the old version. As he retreated the girl followed up her advantage by administering another hot bath about the head and neck until he was well off the premises. If the fellow retains his eyesight he will doubtless give that kitchen a wide berth in the future."

A Tooth-Pick Explosion.

A most singular occurrence, that, by a miracle, did not prove a fatal one, happened at a grocery in Richmond, Ind., says a dispatch from that city. Billy Stump had sharpened the clean end of a match for a tooth-pick when a customer called for a can of gasoline, and while filling it, with the match held firmly between his teeth, he raised his head and it was ignited in coming in contact with the counter. Simultaneously a flame shot from the can and he was ablaze, but hurrying to the street some parties, after failing to quench the blaze by pumping water on him, rolled him in the dust until they accomplished it.

A Proclamation Against Cattle.

Gov. Martin of Kansas, a Topeka telegram says, has issued a proclamation against the importation of infectious cattle into the State. The Governor directs all Sheriffs and deputies to promptly take charge of and restrain any cattle sought to be driven across any county in violation of law and report the same to the Live Stock Sanitary Commission. The Governor also directs the Sanitary Commission to adopt effective regulations for the enforcement of the act.

Three Men Killed by an Explosion.

A frightful explosion occurred on the South Pennsylvania Railroad, near Fort Littleton, Fulton County, Pa., instantly killing one Hungarian and two Italians, and probably fatally injuring John Martin, the foreman, and an unknown negro. The bodies of those killed were horribly mutilated.

A PLEA FOR REMOVALS.

An Open Letter to the Postmaster General.

Hon. William F. Vilas, Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR—It is now almost four months since we have had a Democratic administration, and still no Democratic Postmaster has yet been appointed in this county, except one in a little village to succeed one who had been removed by death.

Our people are getting impatient, and begin to feel dissatisfied. I do not blame them for it. If such are to be the results and fruits of victory, it is foolish to exert ourselves and vain to conquer. We did not fight for the postoffices, but, after defeating our adversaries, we do not want them to rule over us any longer. The patriotism of the Democrats and their adherence to principle have been sufficiently demonstrated. Through many long years they fought and suffered for opinion's sake, even without the expectation of success, bore defeat serenely, and after it prepared for the next combat. It can not be said of them that they were mere spoils hunters trying to get at the flesh-pots. Keeping an undaunted courage through many a weary struggle, their perseverance finally brought about success. The people, tired of the party so long in power, declared that they wanted a change—reform in all the branches of the Government, in the system and in the personnel.

Under our political system the officers are not only servants of the Government, they are a part of it. If there is a change in the head, there must be a change in the members also. There is no need of going very slow in making it. The business interests of the country will not be injured by proceeding with dispatch. All they require is that persons equally competent should be put in the places of the officers removed. That can be done now. We have the men at hand. There is no probation required for us to get used to our new clothes, the robes of the victors. We need not bind out our intelligent Democrats as apprentices to Republican officeholders to learn the trade of carrying on the Government.

The Republicans now occupying the offices were not appointed by reason of their special fitness or qualifications, but for their work for the party. This is a notorious fact. It requires no proof. A court would take judicial notice of it. You, all your colleagues, I, and every one that has observed what was going on around him, have seen it done, time and again. These partisan appointees have made themselves as useful to their party after being placed in office as before. This again is notorious. Every postoffice was the Republican council chamber for the place, every postmaster the head of the gang.

Why should we be required to charge these matters against individual officers, when everybody knows that they apply to all, jointly and severally? The presumption is against all; let them prove the exceptions, if any there are, instead of requiring us to prove patent facts. It is hateful to make charges, anyhow. It creates personal enmity, while a removal without such would be taken with the calmness and good grace with which men otherwise submit to political defeat. I believe that we Democrats have a right to expect of a Democratic administration that it should remove such Republican officeholders as are liable to removal at pleasure, and such as are not so liable should be requested to resign. If they then refuse, show that all their pretentions to political principles are fraudulent; that the essence of their political faith is to stick to the offices like the leech to his victim, then we will file charges against them, and prove enough of them to rid the service of that kind of employes. Our people expect this much of the administration. A different policy will be injurious to the party. The Democrats want to know that we have a Democratic Government. The postmaster is its representative nearest to and immediately with the people. A dozen cabinet officers and a hundred ministers abroad do not have the impertance, as far as making votes is concerned, of one good postmaster in a good-sized town. The people see him and transact business with him every day. Our postmaster must teach the masses that we are competent to carry on the business of the Government as well as the Republicans. To leave the postoffice in the hands of the Republicans conveys the impression to the people that a Democratic President can not trust the Democrats. A Democrat getting his mail from a Democratic postmaster feels that his party, that is himself, is "in power." A Republican postmaster reminds him of his former subjection, and that his efforts to "get on top" have thus far been unavailing.

Our county gave 1,900 Democratic votes at the last election. As things are now I would not count on 1,000 were an election to take place. You must do something for us. There are proper applications on file for ———. Have them acted upon. If your First Assistant cannot do the work of his office by reason of ill-health, make him resign and let a man of vigor succeed him. I wrote you about Postmaster ——— a long time ago. He is the worst Republican bulldozer imaginable. Why has he not been put out yet? If we must bear with that class of men, it would have been better for us to have folded our arms, and let Blaine be elected.

The views I express are universal here. I hope you will pay some attention to them. Very respectfully,

J. KOPELKE,
Chairman Democratic Central Committee and late Elector Tenth District, Indiana.

MICHIGAN BOARD OF HEALTH.

Abstract of a Paper on Poisonous Cheese Read by Professor V. C. Vaughan, M. D., Ph. D.

At the last meeting of the Michigan State Board of Health, Dr. Vaughan presented a report of his investigations on poisonous cheese. It is well known that cases of severe illness follow the eating of some cheese. Such instances are of frequent occurrence in the North German countries and in the United States. In England they are less frequently observed; while in France, where much cheese is made and eaten, these cases are said to occur very rarely. A few years ago, the reputation of a large cheese factory in Northern Ohio was destroyed by the great number of cases of alarming illness arising from eating its cheese. Dairymen know this cheese as "sick" cheese.

KINDS OF CHEESE THAT ARE POISONOUS.

A German author says: "The numerous kinds of soft cheese, prepared in small families, or on small farms, are generally the cause of the symptoms; while it is quite exceptional to hear of symptoms arising from the use of cheese prepared in large quantities." Some two years ago a family in Alpena, Mich., was poisoned by eating of cottage cheese; but the cheese, which poisoned so many in this State last year was made at one of the largest factories in the State, and by a thoroughly experienced cheese-maker. The old foul-smelling cheese, such as Limburger and Schweitzer, have never been known to be poisonous.

EFFECTS OF THE CHEESE.

The symptoms produced by "sick" cheese, as reported by German and American physicians, agree quite closely, and are as follows: Dryness of the mouth and throat, with a sense of constriction, nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, headache, sometimes double vision, and marked nervous prostration. In rare instances the sufferer dies from collapse. As a rule, recovery occurs in a few hours, or at most after a few days. The symptoms of cheese-poisoning and those of sausage, canned meats, and fish poisoning are very similar, though death results more frequently from the others mentioned than from cheese-poisoning.

APPEARANCE OF THE CHEESE.

The samples of cheese examined had no peculiarities of appearance, odor, or taste, by which it could be distinguished from good cheese. It is true that if two pieces of cheese—one poisonous and the other wholesome—were offered to a dog or a cat, the animal would select the good cheese; but this was probably due to an acuteness of the sense of smell possessed by the animal and not belonging to man. Indeed, if a person tasted a cheese, knowing that it was poisonous, he might detect a sharpness of taste which would not ordinarily be noticed.

RECOGNIZING POISONOUS CHEESE.

There is no certain means, aside from a chemical examination, by which a poisonous cheese can be distinguished from a wholesome one. The most reliable ready method is probably that proposed by Dr. Vaughan a year ago, and it is as follows: Press a small strip of blue litmus paper (which can be obtained at any drug store) against a freshly cut surface of the cheese, if the paper is reddened instantly and intensely, the cheese may be regarded with suspicion. When treated in this way any green cheese will redden the litmus paper, but ordinarily the reddening will be produced slowly and will be slight. If the piece of cheese be dry, a small bit should be rubbed up with an equal volume of water, and the paper should then be dipped in the water. Dr. Vaughan does not regard the above test as free from error, but as the most reliable ready means now known. Every groceryman should apply this test to each fresh cheese which he cuts. The depth of the reddening of the paper may be compared with that produced by cheese which is known to be wholesome.

EFFECTS ON THE LOWER ANIMALS.

Dogs and cats, at least, are not affected by eating poisonous cheese. This is probably due to the fact that they do not get enough of the poison from the amount of cheese which they eat. The pure isolated poison in sufficient doses would undoubtedly produce upon the lower animals effects similar to those produced on man.

NATURE OF THE POISON.

Dr. Vaughan has succeeded in isolating the poison, to which he has given the name Tyrotoxicon (from two Greek words, which mean cheese and poison). It is a product of slight putrefaction in the cheese which probably occurs in the vat, as the curd has been known to poison a person. By this slight putrefaction, or excessive fermentation as it may be called, a large amount of butyric acid is formed, and this in the presence of the casein of the cheese is capable of developing a poison. Different samples of poisonous cheese contain different amounts of the poison. The same weight of cheese from one cake furnished three times as much poison as that from another cake. The poison was obtained in long, needle-shaped crystals, which are freely soluble in water, chloroform, alcohol, and ether. The smallest visible fragment of a crystal placed upon the end of the tongue causes a sharp, stinging pain at the point of application, and in a few minutes, dryness and constriction of the throat. A slightly larger amount produced nausea, vomiting and diarrhea. The poison is volatile at the temperature of boiling water, and for this reason even poisonous cheese may be eaten with impunity after being cooked. The substance has also a marked pungent odor, and through the nose one can obtain sufficient of the volatile poison to produce dryness of the throat. This is true, however, only of the isolated poison. In the cheese the taste and odor of the poison are both modified to such an extent that they would not be recognized, as has already been stated.

The first step in the study of cheese-poisoning has now been taken, by finding out what the poison is. Efforts will be made to ascertain the means for preventing its formation.

Our people generally and especially those who have the care of children, cannot be too careful about the spread of contagious diseases like scarlet fever, etc. If you have occasion to go into a sick-room, be sure to thoroughly disinfect your clothing before going into the presence of, or having any contact with children.

The Friant will give an excursion to the camp-meeting at Petoskey tomorrow, leaving here at 9.30, tickets 50 cents; and another on Sunday from East Jordan, stopping at Dwight's Landing, Stripp's dock, Ironton, and Charlevoix. Tickets from Charlevoix 50 cents, other places 75 cents. Will leave East Jordan at 7 o'clock, and Charlevoix at 8.30.

J. Milo Eaton today received a letter from Mr. Riffenburg, stating that he was ready to come here and begin the erection of the flouring mill as soon as the specifications could be returned from Indianapolis. Instructions were also given to engage two residences for the families of Mr. Riffenburg and his son. The letter also contained suggestions in regard to the purchase of material, stating that everything that could be obtained here would be.

The Daily Resorter is out again, and a neat little sheet it is,—not so little, either. It is a six column folio, well-printed on tinted paper, full of spicy items and choice bits of information, besides the arrivals and personals for all the leading hotels of this region. Bro. Hampton, abuse us if you will; we can't possibly stop to credit all the good things we shall clip from your columns.

The Grand Traverse Herald, after having published a very large number of the press notices favorable to that town, breaks down and compares the job to that of Mrs. Partington laboring with her broom to sweep out the waves of the rising Atlantic tide as it poured into her back kitchen, and gives a list of papers with favorable notices which must be omitted, closing with, "Charge the expenses of the press excursion up to advertising account, please." It looks as if we should have to do the same thing.

Grant Memorial Service.

At the Congregational church last Sunday morning, Rev. C. F. Van Auken conducted a memorial service and addressed an audience filling the church to its full capacity.

On the wall behind the pulpit hung a large portrait of General Grant, over which was suspended two large national flags. The walls, pulpit, and furniture were heavily draped in mourning.

Several front rows of pews were filled with a delegation from Baxter post, G. A. R.

Interspersed with the prayers, readings, etc. were several memorial hymns by the choir.

Mr. Van Auken discussed Gen. Grant's life from a purely unpartisan standpoint, briefly reviewing his life and dwelling on those actions and military successes which brought him so prominently before the American people. He followed him through his service as president, in his trip around the world, and to his home and private life, closing with a glowing eulogy of those elements of character, which, more than all else, seemed to give Grant his success in every undertaking when in the service of the people, and more than all else stamped him as a representative American.

Rev. Mr. Dinsmore, of Bloomington, Ills., followed with some personal reminiscence, elaborating the points made by Mr. Van Auken as to his personal characteristics. Mr. Dinsmore had been with Grant in the field and in the camp, in the zenith of his political success and in private life, and knew him thoroughly. In his opinion, no man in the history of the United States had overcome so many obstacles and achieved so great successes as had Grant, and no man would live longer in the hearts of the American people.

The services were listened to with marked attention throughout.

Contagious Diseases.

We desire once again to call the attention of the people to the law guarding against the spread of contagious diseases. This law has been frequently violated, causing much suffering among many who would otherwise escape. It provides that every case of any contagious disease dangerous to the public health shall be reported to the health officer, either by the house holder or physician, (with a penalty of not exceeding $100 for failure;) and the board of health shall use all possible care to prevent the spread of the disease, by giving public notice of infected places, and by isolating the patient whenever deemed necessary. The utmost care should be taken to prevent the contact of patient or nurse with children, or those having charge of children, or others liable to take the disease. On a salary of ten dollars a year the health officer cannot be everywhere present, but he will furnish circular instructions for the care of the sick and the disinfection of rooms to all who apply.

Death of Mrs. Graves.

Mrs. Dr. S. C. Graves died yesterday morning at 8 o'clock, of pneumonia. She had but recently recovered from her prostration of last winter, and had come here to spend the summer quietly, hoping to get thoroughly recovered before winter, but took a severe cold on the journey to this place, which was the cause of the fatal illness. She was attended almost constantly by her father, Judge Dryden, of St. Louis, and by her husband, Dr. S. C. Graves, of Grand Rapids. At her request, the remains were taken to St. Louis for burial by the side of her mother who died last year. She leaves a father, husband, sister and little baby to mourn her death.

A WORD FROM DR. GRAVES.

PARKER HOUSE,
Charlevoix, Mich., July 30, 1885.

It is a pleasure as well as a duty for me to express, thus publicly, to my friends in Charlevoix, my deep and tender thanks for all the favors and kindnesses which they have showered upon me and mine during the late fatal illness of my wife.

Mrs. Graves was in truth, a Charlevoix lady, for some of the most important scenes in the brief but eventful drama of her young life have been enacted here and she would willingly have done for you, what you have done for her. I know that were she able, she would quickly endorse this declaration and I have no doubt but that even at this moment, from the pearly gates of Paradise, she is smiling a sweet and welcome assent to my action.

Like a meadow-lily, before the scythe of the mower, she has been cut down in her youth and beauty, and another tender, pure, steadfast and uncommonly promising bud of womanhood has rendered the earth poorer and more desolate by her departure hence. Our loss is the gain of Heaven and the angels.

May God bless you all and keep your hearts free from sorrow and full of joy for many years to come.

S. C. GRAVES.

A Pleasant Anniversary.

Last Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Harsha celebrated the first anniversary of their marriage, at their residence, corner Clinton street and the park. The rooms were tastefully decorated with monograms, evergreen, etc., and were well filled with a lively party of relatives and friends. An hour was passed with social games, music, and pleasant chat, after which refreshments were served. A large number of appropriate presents, useful and ornamental, were given. The company unite in their congratulations and the wish that future anniversaries may be observed with as much success and pleasure as this.

Prof. Harvey, Legerdemain.

At opera house, Friday evening, July 31st. Read what is said of him:

Prof. Harvey is a first-class magician.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

He produced many new and wonderful feats in legerdemain in so rapid a manner as to entirely daze his audience.—Manistee Democrat.

Prof. Harvey is master of his art. We are glad to commend him as one who does all he advertises.—Bangor Reflector.

Prof. Harvey gives a good, honest entertainment, worth more than the admission price asked.—Brooklyn Exponent.

Ice Cream Social.

Last Friday evening the ladies of the Congregational society gave an ice cream social at their church, which was quite well patronized, and netted a good profit. Next Wednesday evening it is to be repeated, at which time additional tables will be provided so as to increase the accommodations when the crowd is largest.

It is worthy of note in this connection that the people of the resorts are very liberal in their patronage of this society, all of which is appreciated by the ladies.

Two Runaways—Nobody Hurt.

Last Friday evening a horse attached to a milk wagon ran down Bridge street from Wm. Ferguson's to the bridge, scattering cans and portions of the wagon along the street.

On Wednesday evening, a horse attached to Mr. Holden's road cart, containing two young ladies, became unmanageable and ran away, throwing the ladies out, and scattering the cart in small pieces along the road.

Fortunately no one was injured.

The McGibeny Family.

This famous musical company gave one of their unrivaled entertainments at the opera house Tuesday evening. Every chair was filled, and to say that all were delighted is putting it mild. Every child is a natural musician and the performance of every member of the company will bear the severest criticism.

The Great Commander's Military Campaigns, from Belmont to Appomattox.

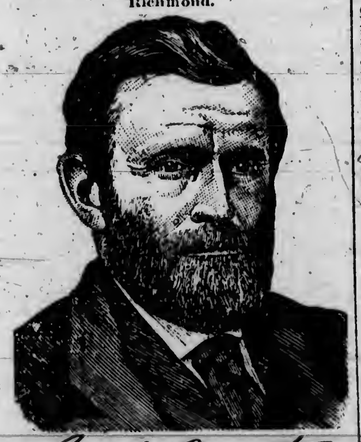
BIOGRAPHICAL.

From the Cradle to the Breaking Out of the Rebellion.

Ulysses Simpson Grant was born at Point Pleasant, Ohio, April 27, 1822. His ancestors were Scotch. In 1823 his parents removed to the village of Georgetown, Ohio, where his boyhood was passed. He entered West Point Military Academy in 1839, appointed by the Hon. Thomas L. Hamer, member of Congress. His name originally was Hiram Ulysses; but the appointment was blunderingly made out for Ulysses S., and so it had to remain. The study in which he showed most proficiency during his course at the academy was mathematics. He graduated in 1843, ranking twenty-first in a class of thirty-nine, and was made a brevet Second Lieutenant of infantry, and attached as a supernumerary Lieutenant to the Fourth Regiment, which was stationed on the Missouri frontier. In the summer of 1845 the regiment was ordered to Texas, to join the army of Gen. Taylor. On Sept. 30 Grant was commissioned as a full Lieutenant. He first saw blood shed at Palo Alto, May 8, 1846, and took part also in the battles of Resaca de la Palma and Monterey, and the siege of Vera Cruz. In April, 1847, he was made Quartermaster of his regiment, but still participated in all active operations; and after the battle of Molino del Rey, Sept. 8, 1847, he was appointed on the field a First Lieutenant for his gallantry. In his report of the battle of Chapultepec (Sept. 13, 1847), Col. Garland, commanding the First Brigade, said: "The rear of the enemy had made a stand behind a breastwork, from which they were driven by detachments of the Second Artillery under Capt. Brooks and the Fourth Infantry under Lieut. Grant, supported by other regiments of the division, after a short but sharp conflict." "I must not omit to call attention to Lieut. Grant, Fourth Infantry, who acquitted himself most nobly, upon several occasions, under my own observation." Grant was brevetted Captain for his conduct at Chapultepec, to date from the battle. After the capture of the city of Mexico he returned with his regiment and was stationed first at Detroit, and then at Sackett's Harbor. In 1848 he married Miss Julia T. Dent, of St. Louis, sister of one of his classmates. In 1852 he accompanied his regiment to California and Oregon, and while at Fort Vancouver, Aug. 5, 1853, was commissioned full Captain. On July 31, 1854, he resigned, and removed to St. Louis, cultivating a farm near that city and engaging in business as a real estate agent. In 1859 he was employed by his father in the leather trade at Galena, Ill.

GRANT AS A SOLDIER.

His Military Campaigns from Springfield to Richmond.



U. S. Grant

President Lincoln's call for troops to aid in suppressing the rebellion was made April 15, 1861, and April 19 U. S. Grant was drilling a company of volunteers at Galena, with whom he went four days later to Springfield, Ill. In May Gov. Yates offered him the Colonelcy of the Twenty-first Illinois Regiment, of which he took command early in June and marched at once to Missouri, reporting to Gen. Pope, by whom he was stationed at Mexico, about fifty miles north of the Missouri River. Aug. 7 he was commissioned by the President as Brigadier General of Volunteers. Aug. 8 he was transferred by Fremont to Ironton, Mo., and a fortnight later to Jefferson City. Sep. 1, by direction of Fremont, he took command of the District of Southeast Missouri, and Sept. 4 made his headquarters at Cairo, at the mouth of the Ohio. His first movement was to seize Paducah, at the mouth of the Tennessee River, Sep. 6, and Smithland, at the mouth of the Cumberland, Sep. 25. On Nov. 7 he made a vigorous attack on the Confederate camp at Belmont. He drove the rebels down to the river bank and burned their camps and stores, but re-enforcements having been sent by Gen. Polk across the river, and the guns of Columbus brought to bear on the Union position, Grant was forced to retire. For the following two months he was employed in disciplining his troops, making no movement save a reconnoissance toward Columbus in January. Preparations were now set on foot for an attack upon Forts Henry and Donelson, the former of which commanded the Tennessee River, and the latter the Cumberland, near the dividing line between Kentucky and Tennessee. With this object Grant started from Paducah Feb. 3 with a force of 15,000 men, to be aided by a fleet of gunboats under Commodore Foote. Fort Henry was captured Feb. 6, its batteries having been silenced by the fire of the boats before the land forces arrived. The most of the Confederate troops escaped across the country to Fort Donelson, twelve miles distant. Gen. Grant promptly ordered his forces over the same road, surrounded that fort, and Feb. 14, as soon as the gunboats had come up the river to co-operate with him, began the attack upon the rebel works. The battle was severe, and ended Feb. 16 in the unconditional surrender of the Confederate forces under Gen. Buckner. Grant was commissioned Major General of Volunteers from the date of that victory, and immediately achieved national fame. Gen. Halleck, however, was prejudiced against him at this time, and used his utmost endeavor to deprive Grant of the honors of the Donelson victory, giving the credit of it in his report to Gen. C. F. Smith. Grant's second in command. The Government, however, had perception enough to understand the truth and to give Grant his well-deserved promotion. Whether from irritation at this act of the Secretary of War or other motive is not known, but Gen. Halleck immediately began preparations for an expedition into Tennessee, the command of which was given to Gen. Smith, and Gen. Grant for alleged disregard of orders was placed under arrest. After a few days, however, he was freed from this restraint, and again joined his command, which had encamped at Savanna, Tenn. Gen. Smith had camped with the troops at the point where the battle of Shiloh was afterward fought, near Pittsburg Landing, on the west bank of the Tennessee River, some miles above Savanna. There Gen. Smith was taken ill with a sickness from which he never recovered, and Gen. Grant was placed in chief command. At daybreak of April 6 the camp at Pittsburg Landing was attacked by a large force under Gen. A. S. Johnston, and driven back with heavy loss. Gen. Grant speedily arrived on the field of battle and reformed the lines. Re-enforcements under Gen. Buell coming up in the night, the battle was renewed the next morning, and the Confederates were defeated and forced to retreat to Corinth. Gen. Grant was slightly wounded in this battle. It was one of the most hotly contested fights of the war, and the losses on both sides were terrible. False reports concerning Grant's conduct in this battle were circulated, and for a time the great General—whose military genius, however, had not yet been fully shown—was under a cloud. Halleck joined the army a few days after the fight at Shiloh, and took personal supervision of the siege of Corinth. During the fighting in that locality the next two months Grant was left in camp, though still retaining nominal command of the District of West Tennessee. In June he transferred his headquarters to Memphis. July 11 Halleck was summoned to Washington to supersede McClellan, and Grant succeeded him in command, and transferred his headquarters to Corinth. Sep. 17 he ordered an advance against the Confederate Gen. Price, then stationed with a large force at Iuka. There a battle was fought Sept. 19, and a complete victory gained by Gen. Rosecrans. As Bragg's force was pushing toward the Ohio River, Grant now removed his headquarters to Jackson. The Confederates, under Gens. Price and Van Dorn, then attacked the camp at Corinth, where Rosecrans was in command, and after a desperate fight, Oct. 3-4, were repulsed with heavy loss and pursued beyond the Hatchie River. Though not present in person at either of these battles, Grant directed the movements in both by telegraph. Buell had moved eastward to intercept Bragg, and met and defeated him at Perryville, Oct. 8, driving him back into East Tennessee. Oct. 16, Grant's department was extended by the addition of a part of Mississippi, as far south as Vicksburg, and he now began to lay plans for a movement against that city. Nov. 1 he began a movement toward the river, seized LaGrange and Grand Junction Nov. 4; on Nov. 13 the cavalry took Holly Springs, driving the enemy south of the Tallahatchie River, and Grant followed, taking possession of that point Nov. 29, and Dec. 5 he entered Oxford. While he was at this point Van Dorn's cavalry made a dash at the camp of stores in his rear at Holly Springs, took 1,500 prisoners, and destroyed ordnance and supplies amounting in value to nearly $1,000,000. The army was now moved back to LaGrange, but headquarters were transferred no further than Holly Springs. Jan 10 headquarters were moved to Memphis, Grant having resolved to reorganize his entire force for a campaign against Vicksburg, to co-operate in which forces under Sherman and McClernand were now coming down the Mississippi. Jan. 30 Grant assumed immediate command of the expedition against Vicksburg. Much time was lost at first in the attempt to cut a canal through the peninsula before Vicksburg, a plan which had been suggested by President Lincoln, but which, after an immense expenditure of labor, was found to be impracticable. An effort was also made to cut through the Yazoo pass, so as to hem in the enemy. But these attempts were found to result only in failure, and finally Grant undertook to carry out his own plan, which was to move the army down the west bank of the river, and cross to the east side below the city. April 30, 1863, he crossed the river, took Port Gibson and Grand Gulf, and began his march into the interior, defeating the enemy in the actions of Raymond, Jackson, Champion's Hill, and Big Black, kept J. E. Johnston from joining his forces with those of Pemberton at Vicksburg, and finally laid siege to that city May 18. After a great deal of hard fighting, Vicksburg was forced to surrender, with 27,000 prisoners, July 4, 1863. Grant was immediately made a Major General of the regular army. He remained at Vicksburg till Aug. 30, when he made a visit to New Orleans. While there he was thrown from his horse at a review and so much injured that he was not able to return to his post until Sept. 16. Oct. 19, under instructions from Washington, he came northward, meeting Mr. Stanton, the Secretary of War, at Indianapolis. That official notified him that all the military departments of the West were now to be under his supervision, with the exception of the Department of the Gulf. At Louisville, word was received by Mr. Stanton that Rosecrans, whose campaign in East Tennessee had been so disastrous, was now about to abandon Chattanooga. Grant, therefore, with the full sanction of his superior, immediately relieved Rosecrans of his command, assigning Gen. Thomas to his position, and Oct. 19 started by rail for Chattanooga, to take personal direction of the operations there. The army here was nearly surrounded by Confederates, and greatly weakened by sickness and losses, but Grant's presence put new hope into their drooping hearts. He there concentrated troops from other points, attacked Bragg's army, strongly intrenched on Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, and carried both points by assault Nov. 24 and 25. Bragg's forces were now driven back to Dalton, Ga. Sherman being sent to the relief of Burnside, who was besieged by Longstreet at Knoxville, drove back the Confederates from that point, and by these successes the Confederate communication between the Atlantic and the Mississippi was broken. Dec. 7 President Lincoln ordered a thanksgiving in all the churches for the victories of the Union cause. Dec. 17 Congress passed a resolution ordering that a gold medal should be struck for Gen. Grant, and returning thanks to him and his army. About Christmas Grant went in person to Knoxville to inspect the command there, and Jan. 13 went by way of Cumberland Gap to Nashville, where he now placed his headquarters. Jan. 24, 1864, he went to St. Louis to visit his eldest son, who was very ill. Feb. 5 he was back at Nashville. March 1 President Lincoln signed a bill passed by Congress reviving the grade of Lieutenant General of the Army, and immediately nominated Gen. Grant for the position, and March 3 the General received the order summoning him to Washington. He reached that city March 9, received his commission at the hands of the President, and March 17 issued his first general order, dated at Nashville, assuming command of the armies of the United States, and announcing that his headquarters would be in the field, and until further orders with the Army of the Potomac. March 23 he arrived at Washington again, and immediately began his preparations for the grand campaign which were to terminate the war. At midnight, May 3, Grant began the movement against Richmond, crossing the Rapidan with the Army of the Potomac. His force now numbered 140,000 men. His first battle was that of the Wilderness, fought May 5, 6, 7. The losses were terrible on both sides, but the results were indecisive. Lee retired within his intrenchments, and Grant made a flank movement on the left in the direction of Spottsylvania Court House. Here followed from the morning of May 9 to the night of May 12 one of the bloodiest struggles of the war, in which the Union forces gained some ground, and captured one division, but made no impression on the defenses of the enemy. Grant now made another movement to the left, crossed the Pamunkey and brought his army before the utmost impregnable rifle-pits of Cold Harbor. These he attacked on June 1, but was repulsed with terrible loss. The assault was renewed June 3, with even more frightful loss of life, and the gaining of no advantage. Grant's losses in the campaign from the Rapidan to the James (May 3 to June 15) aggregated a total of 54,557; those of Gen. Lee were about 32,000. June 15, Gen. Grant joined Gen. Butler's army at Bermuda Hundred and the combined force moved again on Petersburg. On June 17 and 18 assaults were made on the Confederate intrenchments without effect. Lee's army retired behind the defenses, and by the latter part of June Petersburg was regularly besieged. Previous to this Grant had ordered flanking movements by Gens. Sigel and McCook, both of which had failed. In the hope of drawing Grant away from his position before Petersburg, Lee sent an army under Gen. Early to raid Maryland and Pennsylvania. That invasion caused such alarm that in August Gen. Sheridan was sent against Early, and in a series of fights, closing with that of Oct. 19 at Middletown, completely defeated him and laid waste the entire valley of the Shenandoah. During the summer, fall, and following winter, Grant pressed the siege of Petersburg with varying success. July 30 a mine was exploded under one of the forts, and an assault was made, only to be repulsed with great loss. Aug. 18 a division of Grant's army seized the Weldon Railroad and held it against several fierce assaults by the Confederates, in which both armies lost thousands of men. After a hard-fought battle on the road south of Petersburg the army went into winter quarters there, postponing active operations until spring. Feb. 27, 1865, Gen. Sheridan again assaulted and defeated Gen. Early's forces at Waynesboro, and then joined his commander-in-chief with his army. The battle of Hatcher's Run and Five Forks was fought from March 29 to April 1, resulting in the defeat of the Confederates and the capture of 6,000 prisoners. On the following day Grant ordered a general assault on the lines of Petersburg and the works were carried. On that night the army of Lee evacuated Petersburg, and the members of the Confederate Government also fled from Richmond, and April 3 that city, as well as Petersburg, was taken possession of by the Union army. The war lasted but a few days longer. Lee retreated as rapidly as he could to the Southwest, hoping to join the army of Johnston. Grant and Sheridan pursued and intercepted him, and, after making one or two ineffectual efforts to rally his broken and demoralized army against the victorious forces of the Federals, on April 9 he surrendered to Grant at Appomattox Court House, Va.

GRANT'S POLITICAL CAREER.

The Chief Events of His Two Terms as President.

At the Republican National Convention held in Chicago May 21, 1868, Gen. Grant on the first ballot was unanimously nominated for President, with Schuyler Colfax for Vice President. Their Democratic competitors were Horatio Seymour and Francis P. Blair. Grant and Colfax carried twenty-six States, and received 214 electoral votes, against 80 for Seymour and Blair. Grant was inaugurated President on March 4, 1869, and on the next day sent in to the Senate the following nominations for Cabinet officers: Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois, Secretary of State; Alexander T. Stewart, of New York, Secretary of the Treasury; Jacob D. Cox, of Ohio, Secretary of the Interior; Adolph E. Borie, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of the Navy; John M. Schofield, of Illinois, Secretary of War; John A. J. Cresswell, of Maryland, Postmaster General; E. Rockwood Hoar, of Massachusetts, Attorney General. These nominations were at once confirmed, but it was discovered that Mr. Stewart was disqualified by an act of 1789, which provided that no person should hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury who was "directly or indirectly concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce." The President, in a brief message, thereupon suggested to Congress that Mr. Stewart be exempted by joint resolution from the action of the law. This was objected to, and Mr. Stewart declined, and George S. Boutwell of Massachusetts was appointed in his stead. Soon afterward Mr. Washburne gave up the office of Secretary of State, being appointed Minister to France, and was succeeded by Hamilton Fish, of New York; while Secretary Schofield retired from the War Department, and was succeeded by John A. Rawlins, of Illinois, who died in September, when the vacancy was filled by the appointment of William W. Belknap, of Iowa. Mr. Borie resigned in June, and was succeeded by George M. Robeson, of New Jersey. Mr. Hoar resigned in July, 1870, and was succeeded by A. T. Akerman, of Georgia, who resigned in December, 1871, and was succeeded by George H. Williams, of Oregon. Mr. Cox resigned in November, 1870, and was succeeded by Columbus Delano, of Ohio. As President Grant was in political harmony with the majority in Congress, the reconstruction of the lately rebellious States, which had been delayed by the lack of such harmony during the previous administration, now went on. A proclamation by President Grant, dated May 19, directed that there should be no reduction of the wages paid to Government employes in consequence of the reduction in the hours of labor which Congress had enacted. In 1871 President Grant urged the annexation of Santo Domingo as a territory of the United States. A treaty to effect this, and also one by which the peninsula and Bay of Samana were ceded to the United States for fifty years, at an annual rental of $150,000 in gold, had been signed Nov. 29, 1869, on behalf of President Grant and President Baez. Early in 1870 these treaties were confirmed by a popular vote in Santo Domingo; but it was believed that a free election had not been held, and it was said that, in anticipation of annexation, the Dominican Government had granted to private individuals every valuable franchise or piece of property in its possession. In conformity with a resolution of Congress, President Grant appointed B. F. Wade of Ohio, A. D. White of New York, and S. G. Howe of Massachusetts, as commissioners to visit Santo Domingo, accompanied by several scientific men, and report upon the condition of the country, the Government, and the people. Their report, submitted in April, 1871, was favorable to annexation, but the Senate withheld its approval of the treaties. A "joint high commission" of five British and five American members met at Washington Feb. 27, 1871, and on May 8 signed a treaty on the subject of the coast fisheries, river navigation, and the "Alabama claims." The last named question was submitted to a court of arbitration to meet at Geneva, Switzerland, which, on Sept. 14, 1872, awarded the gross sum of $15,500,000 to be paid by the British Government to the United States for damages to American commerce by Confederate cruisers fitted out in British ports. The act to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, popularly known as the Ku-Klux bill, was followed by a Presidential proclamation exhorting obedience to it; and on Oct. 17, 1871, the President suspended the privilege of habeas corpus in the northern counties of South Carolina. Under the provisions of an act of Congress of March 3, 1871, President Grant appointed a board of seven commissioners to inquire into the condition of the civil service, and devise a plan for rendering it more efficient. The Chairman of the Board, George William Curtis, resigned in March, 1873, because of essential differences between his views and the President's on the enforcement of the rules. At the National Republican Convention held in Philadelphia, June 5, 1872, President Grant was renominated by acclamation, and Henry Wilson of Massachusetts received the nomination for Vice President; while Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown were the candidates of both the Liberal Republicans and the Democrats. Grant and Wilson received 268 votes in the Electoral College, against 80 for other candidates. Grant's popular majority over Greeley was 762,991. During the last session of the Forty-second Congress the salary of the President was doubled, and those of the Vice President, Speaker of the House, Justices of the Supreme Court, and heads of departments increased 25 per cent.

AS A CITIZEN.

The Last Eight Years of the Old Soldier's Life.

U. S. Grant

Gen. Grant retired from the Presidency upon the accession of Rutherford B. Hayes, on the 4th of March, 1877. His career since that date, which has been in the main a quiet and uneventful one, is too familiar to the reading world to require any extended notice. Every one knows of his trip around the world, and the enthusiastic receptions that met him in every city, town, and village through which he passed upon his return journey across the continent; of his candidacy for a third term of the Presidency, and the heroic devotion with which his adherents in the Chicago Republican Convention of 1880 stood by him as long as there was hope; of his unfortunate connection with the banker Ward, and how the honest old hero was used as a stool-pigeon by that wily rascal; and, finally, of his fall upon an icy pavement, resulting in a fracture of one of his hips, which was followed soon after by the development of a cancerous growth near the roots of the tongue. For a time the public was kept in ignorance—possibly the doctors were in the same blissful state—regarding the nature of the distinguished patient's malady, and in some features, such as the unreliable or purposely colored reports of his condition, the case bears a strong resemblance to that of the lamented Garfield.

EARLY DAYS.

Grant's Boyhood—The House Where He Was Born.

The life of Ulysses S. Grant is a romance as eventful, wonderful, and interesting as anything ever evolved from the brain of a novelist. He lived in a time of extraordinary activity in the development of this country, and figured in its history more conspicuously than any other man of his time.

The boyhood of Grant was not more remarkable than that of any child in the same circumstances. Indeed, the anecdotes of his childhood in no way convey the idea that he manifested any precocity. He was the eldest of six children. His early surroundings were severely plain, his father, who was of Scotch descent, being a dealer in leather, neither rich nor poor, but ranking among the hard workers of a young and growing State. The humble home where Grant was born is not unknown to the public through the engraver's skill.

HIS BIRTHPLACE AT POINT PLEASANT, O.

At the age of 17 Grant entered the Military Academy at West Point. Those who believe that a name has much to do with the destiny of its owner will find confirmation of their theory in the accident which gave him the name he has made famous. He had been christened Hiram Ulysses, but the Congressman who procured his appointment by mistake wrote him down as Ulysses S. Grant. The authorities at West Point and the Secretary of War were petitioned by the young cadet to correct the blunder, but no notice was taken of the request. Ulysses S. Grant he had been recorded and Ulysses S. Grant he remained, the name now so world-wide in its fame having been bestowed through a Congressman's defect of memory. The initials U. S. suggested "Uncle Sam" to his comrades, a nickname he never lost, and one peculiarly prophetic in view of his extraordinary career. During the war he was not infrequently nicknamed "United States Grant" and "Unconditional Surrender Grant," the U. S. seeming to have special significance in those days which "tried men's souls."

REMINISCENT.

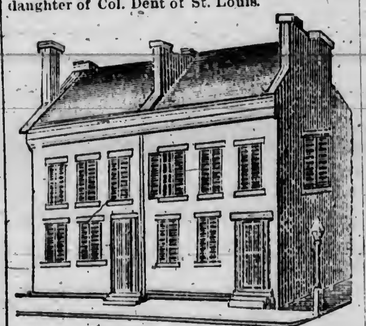
Gen. Grant's Early Life in St. Louis—His Marriage to Miss Dent.

The happiest days and the darkest days in the long life of Gen. Grant were spent in St. Louis.

Lieut. Grant and Fred Dent had become friends in the military school at West Point, and when young Dent invited his chum to come with him on a visit to his St. Louis home, he did much toward shaping the destiny of Grant and possibly of the nation. The two young men, after Grant's visit, went to participate in the Mexican war, and when young Dent fell with a bullet in his groin while leading his company to a charge, Grant picked him up and carried him in his arms to a place of safety. The affection between the young men increased, and the affection between the beautiful Miss Dent and her brother's friend, with whom she corresponded, more than kept pace with it. After the war, the wedding. The elite of St. Louis were there, the officers from the barracks attended in full uniform, and it was the social event of the year 1848.

The journals of that day were not given to making mention of social events, and the only newspaper reference to the wedding that has been discovered consists of the following notice that appeared in the Republican of Aug. 24, 1848, two days after it occurred:

Married—On the 22d inst., by Rev. J. H. Linn, Lieut. Ulysses S. Grant, U. S. A., to Miss Julia, daughter of Col. Dent of St. Louis.



HOUSE IN WHICH GRANT WAS MARRIED.

The house where Col. Dent lived, and in which the marriage was celebrated, now stands on the southwest corner of Fourth and Cerre streets, St. Louis.

There is very little now in the grimy and dilapidated exterior of the house to suggest the elegance that characterized it in the days when it was the city residence of the Dents. The lime dust and coal smoke of forty years have coated its walls to an extent that discourages renovation, and vandal hands have knocked the corners off the bricks and defaced the elaborate carvings which gave distinction to the front door. As though to emphasize its degradation, the following legend, tacked up against the door frame, invites the attention of all who pass:

ROOMS,
$4-$5 per Week.
TABLE BOARD, $3.00.
Single Meals, 25c.
5 TICKETS, $1.00.

Mrs. Putcher, a very obliging lady, answers the old-style bell and admits the caller to a spacious hall, from which a very precise stairway leads to the floor above, with one abrupt and uncompromising turn at the middle of the ascent. The stairway affords the first strong trace of the old-time richness. Its balusters are exceedingly plain and straight, and its sharp-cornered newel post is innocent of carving, but all the parts are of mahogany and the top of the post is inlaid with pearl. The double parlors in which the wedding occurred open off the hall to the left. They are commodious rooms of about 16x18 feet in dimensions, and separated by very heavy sliding doors. The door facings and window facings are very broad, but without carving or molding, and are painted white just as they were in their days of glory. The knobs of the doors, are of solid brass, and perfectly smooth, as was the fashion when the house was built. The fireplace is surmounted by a wooden mantel, and is faced by an ornamented "sheet-iron front," which has escaped any serious defacement or injury all these years. The most notable feature, however, is the chandelier, which is the same that lighted the memorable bridal festival. It is a very unique affair in bronze, with three burners and three supporting rods, between which latter is a handsome knightly figure. The wonder is that such a souvenir as this has remained safely through all the mutations to which the house has been subjected. The front room is now a sleeping-room; the back parlor is a dining-room. There is nothing in the general plan of the house to call for special mention, as it is an ordinary dwelling place, with three large rooms on each of the three floors, and a hall-room additional on the second floor.

It would appear that the days of this relic are already numbered, as it lies directly in the line of the proposed route of the elevated road which is to connect the Iron Mountain Road with the Union Depot.

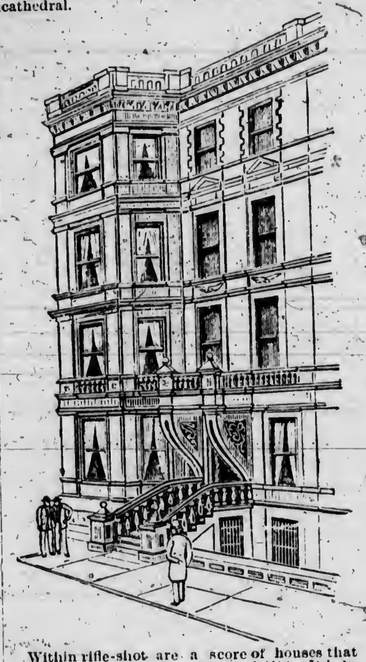
The bridal couple did not make this house their home, but after a wedding trip they returned to St. Louis, and lived for some time with Mrs. Grant's parents out at the farm, on the Gravois road. Young Grant resigned his army commission in 1853, and located with his family out on the Dent farm, Mr. Dent having made his daughter a present of eighty acres and four slaves. They lived there very nicely, but Grant did not find the life congenial. The chief farming he did was to haul cordwood to town and sell it, on which occasion the very familiar costume which clad his gaunt form was a jeans pants, gray woolen shirt, one or two "galluses," a pair of raw-hide boots, a slouch hat, and an untrimmed beard. A blacksnake whip made him complete.

Tiring completely of farm life, he moved into town, and at first occupied for a time a house at the southeast corner of Seventh and Lynch streets, and then moved to a little house which is now numbered 1068 Barton street. His employment was the real estate business, but he did not prosper, and in 1857 moved to Galena, Ill., where he went into business with his father as a tanner. Soon afterward the war broke out, and Grant was not long in discovering that there was at least one way in which he could earn a living, and earn it nobly.

THE NEW YORK RESIDENCE.

The Mansion In Which Gen. Grant Lived Before His Removal to Mount MacGregor.

The house in which Gen. Grant has of late years resided is in the most fashionable part of New York City. It is near the beautiful mansion of the Vanderbilts and the house that Henry Villard erected, and not far from the new cathedral.



Within rifle-shot are a score of houses that cost more than $75,000 each to build. It is in Sixty-sixth street, just off Fifth avenue and close by Central Park. The tide of fashion set to that neighborhood ten years ago, and the finest mansions in New York City have been built there since.

It is a neat brown-stone-front house of a shade less than the average width of city houses, four stories high, and with ornamented window casings. A bay window looks out from the parlor floor. The front faces the south, and the view from the rear window commands part of Central Park.

ANECDOTAL.

Didn't Mean to Be Beaten.

After the battle of Pittsburgh Landing, Gen. Buell began criticising in a friendly way the impolicy of his having fought a battle with the Tennessee River behind his men. "Where, if beaten, could you have retreated, General?" asked Buell. "I didn't mean to be beaten," was Grant's sententious reply. "But suppose you had been defeated, despite all your exertions?" "Well, there were all the transports to carry the remains of the command across the river." "But, General," urged Buell, "your whole transports could not contain even ten thousand men, and it would be impossible for them to make more than one trip in the face of the enemy." "Well, if I had been beaten," said Gen. Grant, pausing to light another cigar as he spoke, "transportation for ten thousand men would have been abundant for all that would have been left of us."

They Have a General Now.

There is a story that upon the next morning after the first day's struggle in those tangled and all but impassable woods of the Wilderness, Lee and his officers came out, as aforetime, to see the Union forces going back again over the river, and that when he saw, instead, signs of their resuming the attack, he remarked to his companions: "They have a General now. It is all up with us!" The story may not be true; but its facts were. It was after six days of battle that Grant sent to Washington the dispatch which ended with the grim remark: "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." Spottsylvania followed, and Cold Harbor; the investment of Petersburg, and that long series of assaults, forays, intrenchments, and battles which ended with the surrender of Lee and the explosion of the rebellion.

Grant's Coolness.

An incident occurred one morning at Spottsylvania that illustrates Grant's coolness and self-possession. While the heaviest artillery firing was in progress, Gen. Grant was standing, in company with Gen. Meade, near a fire, talking and endeavoring to keep themselves dry, when a rebel shell struck within a few feet of the twain. A disposition to move was manifested on the part of a number of officers standing around, when Gen. Grant, looking slowly around and fixing his eye on the spot where the shell struck, asked at once for a pocket compass, which being furnished, he examined the course of the shell, found out the location of the battery, and it was not long before shells were thick among the men working said battery.

Taming Leather.

A party of Illinois politicians visited the headquarters of Gen. Grant when they were located near Vicksburg, and endeavored to obtain his views on the political questions of the day. One of their number was especially earnest in his efforts, and while in the midst of what he considered a very persuasive speech, was interrupted by Gen. Grant, who quietly remarked:

"There is no use of talking politics to me. I know nothing about that subject, and, furthermore, I don't know of any person among my acquaintances who does. But," continued he, "there is one subject with which I am perfectly acquainted; talk of that, and I am your man."

"What is that, General?" asked the politician, in surprise.

"Tanning leather," replied Gen. Grant.

An Obstinate Man.

In the early days of the campaign, Mrs. Grant gave an opinion about Richmond, which was as well founded as that of the General's father about Vicksburg. Somebody was so good as to express to her a hope that her husband would take Richmond. Mrs. Grant observed, with a dry simplicity of phrase that sounded as if she had gone to school to her husband as well as married him: "Well, I don't know. I think he may. Mr. Grant always was a very obstinate man!"

My Watch.

When I was unmarried and could do as I pleased I never carried a watch. I never could understand the value of a watch except as an article that might be hypothecated in a pecuniary emergency. I could always ascertain the time, because every church and sample-room boasted a clock, and what was the use of purchasing what could be had for nothing?

By my system of consulting these public time-pieces, I always managed to make my connections right. I never entered a theater after the curtain had risen, or reached the station at the moment when the train was vanishing.

I was made happy in more ways than one by not having a watch. I didn't have to tell fifty people the hour every day, and I never worried about the safety of the contents of my vest-pockets in a crowded horse-car.

One night I was awakened rather suddenly. I felt a strange hand under my pillow. It was a burglar's, feeling for my watch.

"I have no watch," I remarked, as politely as I could; "but you'll find a dollar brass clock in the kitchen, if you want to know the time."

In his great hurry he passed through the window, and I shuddered as I heard him trickling down through the arbor below.

But after marriage it was different. I was told that I should wear a watch, in order not to appear poverty-stricken in the eyes of the world. I argued that it would place me on a par with weasel-headed clerks whose bangs and eyebrows meet. I was told that if I wore no watch every one would think I had one drawing interest for an avuncular relative.

This seemed to be a very subtle argument in favor of having a watch. And, besides, it completely upset me. I imagined on the same basis people would fancy I had all sorts of things in pawn that I didn't wear, such as a sealskin overcoat, diamond rings, etc.

As a tentative measure, I got what I call to this day a "patent-medicine watch," because I bought it in a drug store. It was an advertising scheme to attract people to the patent medicine. I should much prefer to swallow the contents of a drug store than carry one of those watches a week. It had to be wound up every night, and took nearly all night to wind it. It didn't keep very good time, but I continued to wear it, that I might wind it for exercise. It superseded my dumb-bells until the stem wore the skin off my thumb and forefinger. When buried in profound meditation, it was my custom to take the watch out and wind it in an abstracted manner, just as others, in a similar mood pick their teeth or whittle. I stated at home that I merely purchased the patent-medicine watch to learn how to take care of and manipulate one before getting a more expensive specimen.

This bit of news gave great satisfaction. I was looked upon as a good-natured, self-sacrificing being, who would soon wear a long watch-chain stretching all the way across the chest, and emptying into two pockets. As a reward I was presented with a watch.

The first day I wore it I was told I was wrong by a man who had just set his watch at some jeweler's. So I changed mine to make it agree with his. It seems it lost time, and I missed my train that night, a thing I had never done when I did not possess a time-piece.

Every few minutes I was asked the hour, to get me accustomed to pulling it out, and inside of a week I had acquired an artistic negligence and indifference of manner that was pronounced beautiful.

But the watch became eccentric. The eggs that were timed two minutes by it came out as hard as cobble-stones, and, trying to regulate it by tapping it against my boot-heel, I thoroughly disorganized it, and was obliged to leave it for a week with a jeweler, who lent me, in its stead, a great silver machine that I was ashamed to take out of my pocket in daylight.

In short, when I got it back I did nothing but miss trains. It was never right. It was either too fast or too slow. Sometimes I would start for the cars thinking I had ample time, and reach the station after their departure, or else I would start on a run and half kill myself to get there in time, only to ascertain that I had arrived half an hour too soon.

It would take too much ink to tell how many sorrows and tribulations that watch brought upon me. I protested against wearing it many a time, but my protests were in vain. Finally, I concluded that I would allow myself to be martyred, so I still carry it, but not for use. I wind it up about once a month, and never look at it. I go by the clocks I see around me, as I did before, and catch my trains and make all other time connections right. I don't like to say anything harsh of it, because it is a nice watch, and it would be simply perfect if it could only keep the right time.—Puck.

The Electricity of Rain.

The suggestion having been made that the ignition of petroleum tanks may sometimes be caused by sparks from the rain of thunder clouds, some interesting results obtained with an old piece of apparatus have been called to mind. In these experiments an electrometer showed that the drops of occasional showers are almost always more or less charged with electricity, and that it is only totally absent during foggy, moist days, and long storms. The strongest charges were obtained during thunder-storms; but the air even has given indications occasionally of an electric charge without any fall of rain.

"Crossest Man in Alabama."

"De crossest man in Alabama lives dar," said the driver as we approached a wayside home, near Selma, Ala., to ask accommodations for the night. At supper, and after it, "mine host" scowled at every one, found fault with everything earthly, and I was wondering if he would not growl if the heavenly halo didn't fit him, when incidental mention being made of the comet of 1882, he said: "I didn't like its form; its tail should have been fan shaped!"

But, next morning, he appeared half-offended at our offering pay for his hospitality! My companion, however, made him accept as a present a sample from his case of goods.

Six weeks later, I drew up at the same house. The planter stepped lithely from the porch, and greeted me cordially. I could scarcely believe that this clear-complexioned, bright-eyed, animated fellow, and the morose being of a few weeks back, were the same. He inquired after my companion of the former visit, and regretted he was not with me. "Yes," said his wife; "we are both much indebted to him."

"How?" I asked, in surprise.

"For this wonderful change in my husband. Your friend when leaving handed him a bottle of Warner's safe cure. He took it, and two other bottles, and now——" "And now," he broke in, "from an ill-feeling, growling old bear, I am healthy and so cheerful my wife declares she has fallen in love with me again!"

It has made over again a thousand love matches, and keeps sweet the tempers of the family circle everywhere.—Copyrighted. Used by permission of American Rural Home.

The Vision and Hearing of Fish.

But little has been written on the development of vision and hearing in fish, and that little has been theory rather than deduction from actual experiment. My own experiments as to the effects that sound produces on trout (and I assume that all fishes are more or less alike in this respect) have been confined to this: Frequently, when able to observe a trout while myself unseen, I have screamed and shouted at the top of my voice. These demonstrations have invariably been without the slightest effect; but when varied by a concussion which would communicate itself to the water this has no longer been the case, and evidence of alarm, or at least that the concussion was felt, has been apparent. In an English work, the name of which I in vain endeavor to recall, an account of some very interesting and more decisive experiments are given. The writer caused a building to be erected over the water, and made his observations through small apertures constructed for the purpose, so that he was quite concealed. His trout were well accustomed to the wiles of the angler and timid. Sending a man out of sight behind the building, the firing of a gun by him produced not the slightest effect on the trout, who rose freely during the experiment to flies blown toward them through a tube. I am, therefore, convinced that no sound is injurious which does not communicate its vibration to the water. But concussion upon the side or bottom of a boat, or jumping from rock to rock, or blows upon the hard bottom with the wading-staff or with hob-nailed shoes, I think are so invaded through and by the water as to be in some measure perceptible to the fish and alarm them. That fish possess the sense of hearing their anatomical structure goes far to prove, while that they are not insensible to sounds produced in the air must be admitted, unless the doubter is prepared to call in question the numerous accounts by alleged eye-witnesses of their coming to be fed at the sound of a bell, etc. This I, for one, hesitate to do, notwithstanding I have never been able to make a sound in the air which seemed to produce the slightest effect on trout in water, to which fish my experiments have been confined. It may, however, well be that the sound was perceived, while the fish were so habituated to the roar of the waterfall and similar noises, without any ill consequences ensuing, that sound alone was not regarded by them as an indication of danger.—*Fly Rods and Fly Tackle, H. Brought Home in a Wagon.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

Equal to the Occasion.

A new story is told about the well-known lawyer and wit, Joseph H. Choate. He was sitting in his law office, when a young man very well known in New York society—who is always extremely well dressed, takes great pride in his family connections, and has a pretty high opinion of himself generally—entered and introduced himself as follows:

"I am Mr. J. Van Rensselaer Jones."

"Ah!" replied Mr. Choate, "take a chair."

"Yes," continued the young man, bent upon pressing his importance upon the lawyer, "I am—er—the son-in-law, you know, of Gov. Smith."

"Indeed!" rejoined Choate; "take two chairs."—Rochester Herald.

The Coming Woman.

Some one was speaking of the end of the world.

"Do you think it will come soon?" asked eight-year-old Ellie, eagerly.

"No, I guess not," was the reply.

"Oh! I hope it won't," said the wee girl; "it would be too mean if it did—before I got a chance to be married."

A BOY in Pittsfield, Mass., swallowed the bulb of a thermometer. He now has a mercurial temperament.

Every Meal Is a Trial

To the dyspeptic. Flatulence, heartburn, oppressive fullness of the stomach, are the inevitable sequences of his use of the knife and fork. To say of him that he gratifies the cravings of appetite would be a genuine satire. He only appeases them. Is relief attainable? Certainly, and by the use of a pleasant as well as thorough remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Will it cure immediately? Certainly not—it does not effect miracles. But it does give prompt and unspeakable relief, and it will, if persisted in, produce an ultimate cure. Not only does it impart relish to the food, but promotes its conversion by the stomach into rich, health and strength-sustaining blood. Super-sensitiveness of the nerves, mental depression, and unquiet slumber, produced by interruption of the digestive functions, are also remedied by it. It is the finest preventive and curative of malarial disorders, and relieves constipation, rheumatism, kidney and bladder ailments and liver complaint.

Matrimonia.

Maud—I intend to marry a banker, when I marry, and then I'll wear a sealskin sacque for every month in the year, and my toilets will be the admiration and envy of the feminine world.

Belle—I intend to marry a plumber. Then I will not have any anxiety about the bursting of banks and other corporations. The water-pipes will have to do the bursting for my husband. And you can depend on it that my toilets will be bang up.

Blanche—You're just terribly off, girls. I intend to marry an editor. Then I won't need any nice toilets. But you'll see me appear in the paper next morning resplendent as Solomon in all his glory. And your poor earthly raiment will just crawl into a corner and hide its diminished head. You're welcome to your bankers and plumbers, but I'm looking around for a nice eligible editor, and when I get him you can wager a six-button pair of gloves that I'll make my female acquaintances just weep with envy.

Maud—Oh, how awfully nice! I'm going to marry an editor, too.

Belle—And so am I.—Whitehall Times.

Years Teach More than Books.

Among other valuable lessons imparted by this teacher, is the fact that, for a very long time, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, has been the prince of liver correctives, as a blood purifier, being the household physician of the poor man, and the able consulting physician to the rich patient, and praised by all for its magnificent service and efficacy in all diseases of a chronic nature, as malarial poisoning, ailments of the respiratory and digestive systems, liver disease, and in all cases where the use of an alterative remedy is indicated.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot; 600 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union than at any first-class hotel in the city.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take Pair of Shears from Her Child.

PARENTS, BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W— applied to the well-known and skillful Surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But owing to pain and mental distress her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the Doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the Liver and Kidneys, cures Constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to Females. It is for sale by all our druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle.

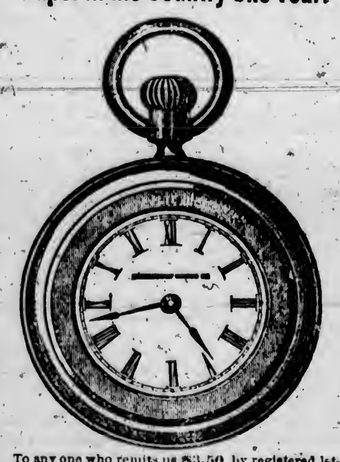
For an ELEGANT WATCH and the Best

HUMOROUS and STORY

Paper in the Country One Year.



To any one who remits us $3.50 by registered letter, express or post-office money order, or bank draft, we will send by registered mail an elegant Waterbury stem-winding watch with nickel-plated chain and charm, and will mail to his address every week for one year The Chicago Ledger FREE. These watches are first-class time-keepers, seldom get out of order, and are substantially and handsomely made.

The Chicago Ledger is now in its thirteenth year and is the best story and humorous paper in the country. Each issue contains at least a page of original humorous articles, from the pen of one of the most racy writers of the present day, which feature alone is worth more than the price charged for the watch above described.

If you wish to see a really handsome and decidedly interesting paper, send a 2-cent stamp for a sample copy. You cannot fail to be pleased with the investment.

Write the name, town, county and State plainly, and address your letter to The Chicago Ledger, 321 Franklin street, Chicago, Ill.

Program for Grant Memorial Service, August 8th.

Recommended by Baxter Post G. A. R.

Your committee respectfully submit the following program for your adoption and execution on the day of burial:

1. That all the flags of the village, and on the shipping in the harbor be displayed at half mast.

2. That the bell be tolled for half an hour commencing with the services at 3 o'clock.

3. That arrangements be made for the firing of 13 guns to commence with the ringing of the bells, then one gun every half hour until sunset.

4. That the post form at the city hall, and with reversed arms march to the park for the holding of the services, that the public be invited to join in the procession, to be under the direction of Marshal Berdan.

Order of exercises at park: 1, music by the band. 2, prayer by Rev. C. F. Van Auken. 3, music by the choir. 4, eulogy by the Hon. E. H. Green. 5, music by the choir. 6, presentation of resolutions of respect. 7, volunteer remarks by citizens. 8, music by the band. 9, benediction by Rev. J. T. Iddings. After which the post will reform and with arms at a right shoulder shift and preceded by the band playing a march will return to the city hall and be disbanded.

It is further recommended that the business men of the place be requested to close their places of business during the ceremonies, and that they drape their business places on that day, and that so far as possible all labor be suspended during the ceremonies.

Base Ball Questions.

In view of the disputes arising out of the recent tournament, and to get authority on some points, Mr. H. Hull wrote to the Mirror of American Sports, acknowledged authority on base ball, which letter and reply we publish in full:

Where I am stopping there is a base ball club, and they with three other clubs have been contesting for a prize. The Fourth of July was the day appointed for the tournament, and on that day a Mr. Glen Allen, one of the Kalamazoo boys, played with the Charlevoix team. At first he was strongly opposed by the other clubs, but was allowed to play. They ended Fourth each club a tie, one won and one lost, so that the 16th of July was set for a time to decide the honors, and each club agreed to play the same men on that day as on the Fourth. Now, in violation of this, Boyne City hired two men from Grand Rapids (the battery) and came to Charlevoix, when the C. B.-B. C. objected and wanted those men thrown out, which Boyne City would not allow, claiming that Allen was an outside man, and that he must be thrown out with their men. Charlevoix of course objected, and then a general dispute arose and lasted over an hour after the time of calling game, when rain came on and the crowd dispersed. Allen is a resorter here, and spends two or three months of the year in this place; he organized the club three years ago, and his father owns property and pays taxes in this town; while the Grand Rapids men are strangers at Boyne and have no connection whatever with that town. Now, an umpire with the least particle of sand ought to have called game at the appointed hour. Even as he did not had not the game ought to be declared in favor of Charlevoix 9 to 0? Am I right or not? ANSWER: The agreement to play the same team was binding on both sides, and under that agreement Allen was eligible to play with Charlevoix, but the two players imported by Boyne City were not eligible. The game should be declared in favor of Charlevoix 9 to 0. No questions answered by mail.

Ironton.

Last Saturday afternoon William Morehouse was drowned in Pine lake. Mr. Morehouse, J. M. Harris, and Wm. Robertson had gone in to bathe, neither of them being able to swim. Morehouse got over the channel bank into deep water, and the others being unable to help him, he was drowned before assistance could be obtained from the shore. The body was recovered, a jury summoned, an inquest held, and a verdict returned in accordance with the above facts. The funeral was held at the M. E. church Sunday afternoon, the services conducted by Rev. C. F. Van Auken, of Charlevoix.

The schooner Narragansett arrived Sunday morning, with a cargo of ore for the furnace.

The mason's work is finished, and the men returned to Chicago on Monday. The furnace will start next week.

Haying is about finished. Winter wheat will soon be ready for the harvest.

Of the twenty or more men present when Mr. Morehouse's body was recovered, only four could swim, and Thomas Mackey was the only one who could dive down and secure the body.

New potatoes are plenty in Ironton, with light demand.

After ten months the furnace whistle is again heard.

A Challenge and Reply.

Charlevoix, July 27, 1885.

A. L. DEUEL, Esq., Captain Harbor Springs Base Ball Club,—Dear Sir: The Charlevoix Base Ball Club hereby challenges the Harbor Springs Base Ball Club to play a game of base ball for the championship of the Grand Traverse region and the gold medal donated by Charlevoix and won by you at the recent tournament at Charlevoix, on your grounds, July 29th, 1885, at one o'clock p. m.; said game to be played under the rules governing the tournament. Please reply by bearer.

Yours &c.,
R. A. EMREY,
Capt. C. B. B. C.

Harbor Springs, July 27, 1885.

R. A. EMREY, Capt. B. B. C., Charlevoix, Mich.,—Dear Sir: We have never seen any rules governing the tournament, except such as expounded to us by Norton of Boyne City, and acquiesced in by your member of the committee, Emrey. According to the rules of said tournament, we had to play four games, and beat one club twice, to win the medal. Now our proposition is this and no other: If you want to play us a series of three games for the medal, best two in three, on our grounds, all right, and come on the 29th for first game. We can settle afterwards as to games with Boyne City.

Yours respectfully,
A. L. DEUEL,
Capt. B. B. C.

In the light of the last game between Charlevoix and Harbor Springs this looks like a cowardly transaction on the part of the latter club. They are evidently afraid to play Charlevoix on anything like an equal footing. On July 16th Charlevoix wasted the forenoon in a wrangle with Boyne City, and after dinner defeated them, 23 to 9; and then, without any rest, without even a change of catcher or pitcher, played Harbor Springs (who were fresh, not having played Bellaire) and kept well ahead of them until the seventh inning, when Harbor Springs passed Charlevoix and took the medal by only one score, the Charlevoix pitcher's arm giving out so that he could not deliver the ball with his usual skill. The Harbor Springs club claim privately, we understand, that they were dictated to here, and now that they have the medal, propose to dictate all the games until they lose it. They evidently propose to make all the trouble and expense possible for the club that tries to win it.

From what we can learn, Harbor Springs dare not play Charlevoix again for the medal, but are doing all that is possible to comply with the terms of the tournament by first defeating two other clubs, and thus hold the medal by virtue of having won it three times in succession.

EASTERN.

Memorial services in honor of Gen. Grant were held in many cities and towns last Sunday. At Galena, the First Methodist Episcopal Church, in which the General formerly worshiped, and the pew which he used for many years were elaborately draped. ——It is proposed to erect a monument to the memory of Gen. Grant in Lincoln Park, Chicago, at a cost of $40,000, of which amount Potter Palmer offers to contribute $5,000. ——The first profits of Gen. Grant's book will, it is thought, exceed those of any other book ever issued. The publishers estimate that from $150,000 to $200,000 will be paid to Mrs. Grant for the first edition, and that she may receive nearly $500,000 altogether.——Rochester (N. Y.) dispatch: "The casket for Gen. Grant's remains was shipped from this city to Saratoga last Sunday. It is an elaborate coffin, and was built from entirely original designs at an expense of over $1,000. At the solicitation of the public the manufacturers permitted it to be seen at their warerooms by such as desired. It is estimated that 20,000 people visited the spot where it was exhibited, and there were many who shed tears at the sight of the receptacle for the dead hero's remains."——Dr. Douglas has in his possession the following remarkable document, which was written by Gen. Grant in the doctor's presence on Thursday, July 2:

I ask you not to show this to any one, unless the physicians you consult with, until the end. Particularly, I want it kept from my family. If known to one man the papers will get it, and they (the family) will get it. It would only distress them almost beyond endurance to know it, said, by rettex, would distress me. I have not changed my mind materially since I wrote you before in the same strain; now, however, I know that I gain strength some days, but when I do go back it is beyond where I started to improve. I think the chances are very decidedly in favor of your being able to keep me alive until the change of weather toward winter. Of course there are contingencies that might arise at any time that might carry me off very suddenly. The most probable of these is choking. Under the circumstances life is not worth the living. I am very thankful (for thankful glad was written, but scratched out and thankful substituted,) to have been spared this long, because it has enabled me to practically complete the work in which I took so much interest. I can not stir up strength enough to review it and make additions and subtractions that would suggest themselves to me and are not likely to suggest themselves to any one else. Under the above circumstances I will be the happiest—the most pain I can avoid. If there is to be any extraordinary cure, such as some people believe there is to be, it will develop itself. I would say, therefore, to you and your colleagues to make me as comfortable as you can. If it is within God's providence that I should go now, I am ready to obey His call without a murmur. I should prefer to go now to enduring my present suffering for a single day without hope of recovery. As I have stated, I am thankful for the providential extension of my time to enable me to continue my work. I am further thankful, and in a much greater degree thankful, because it has enabled me to see for myself the happy harmony which so suddenly sprang up between those engaged, but a few short years ago in deadly conflict. It has been an inestimable blessing to me to hear the kind expressions toward me in person from all parts of our country from people of all nationalities; of all religions and of no religion; of Confederates and of national troops alike, of soldier organizations; of mechanical, scientific, religious, and other societies, embracing almost every citizen in the land. They have brought joy to my heart if they have not effected a cure. So to you and your colleagues I acknowledge my indebtedness for having brought me through the valley of the shadow of death to enable me to witness these things. U. S. GRANT.

Mount MacGregor, N. Y., July 2, 1885.

A Saratoga special says: One reason Mrs. Grant does not give to the public the letter the General left for her is that it mentions the names of a number of men now living, telling how the General had been deceived by those he supposed to be his friends, and explaining how he was drawn into the meshes of Ward. The letter would make fully eight pages, closely written, of large-size writing paper. About the first labor of Colonel Grant after all is over and the family is settled down will be to begin a biography of his father. Of course, no one else has such ample material for giving a picture of General Grant's character and habits of thought. Speaking of books, it may be said that the reports as to the profits the family expect to derive from the General's memoirs have been exaggerated. All that can be expected from the guaranteed sales up to date is $42,000. Probably the very most that will come to them will not exceed $100,000. Colonel Grant himself is left without anything whatever.

The books of the Manufacturers and Traders' Bank of Buffalo show discrepancies. The assistant cashier, who died recently, was a trifle short, and Thomas Emerson, the bookkeeper, is a defaulter and has fled to Canada.

It is reported at New York that Chas. Scribner's Sons intend to publish a new magazine, bearing the title Scribner's Monthly.

Dodge & Co.'s flint-glass factory at Pittsburgh, Pa., was destroyed by fire. Other buildings were damaged, making the total loss $150,000.

The New York sub-committee of the Grant Monument fund has organized by electing Chester A. Arthur President, Mayor Grace and Hamilton Fish Vice Presidents, and Drexel, Morgan & Co. Treasurers.

It is reported that the selection of Riverside Park for Grant's tomb was probably brought about by the influence of millionaire holders of real estate in that vicinity.

A lady made the first contribution to the Grant national monument fund at New York—50 cents.

WESTERN.

News of a fight between four Americans, one Mexican, and a band of hostile Indians, is telegraphed from Tombstone, Arizona. The fight occurred twenty miles south of the Arizona line, near Canania Copper Camp, the mines of which are owned by an Eastern company. Two of the white men and three of the Indians were killed. Fifty Indians, pursued by Mexicans, passed near Castle, Arizona. It is believed that Geronimo and his band are making for the mountains, but are being pushed closely by American troops.

A band of fifteen men attempted to regain possession of a lot of liquor that had been confiscated under warrants taken out by the Temperance League at What Cheer, Iowa. The liquor was stored in the basement of the postoffice. Postmaster Brainard fired at the party, killing John Dey.

The number of deaths in Chicago last week was 396, as compared with 382 for the corresponding week in 1884.

Development of the Ropes Mine in Michigan, it is alleged, shows free gold in large quantities. In the gold range a four-foot vein of $8,030 rock has been discovered.

Fifteen hundred bucks attended the Sioux Indian council at Pine Ridge Agency. Red Cloud's followers numbered three hundred, and all had knives and revolvers concealed beneath their blankets. It is believed among the settlers in Northern Nebraska that excellent results will follow the council and the visit of the Holman Committee.

Tombstone (Arizona) dispatch: "Parties just arrived from Sonora state that a company of Mexican citizens, led by the Prefect of the town of Artzpi, discovered a squaw camp in the Pinati Mountains. The camp was attacked and a number of squaws and a few old bucks were killed. Many of the former escaped by taking refuge in the mountains."

A stage conveying the United States mails was robbed near Harshaw, Arizona, and F. M. Peterton, a passenger, was killed.

A dispatch from Portland, Oregon, says the County Jail at Baker City, in that State, was destroyed by fire, and five prisoners were burned to death and a sixth severely scorched.

Extensive ravages are being committed by grasshoppers in out and corn fields in Southern Illinois.

Henry A. Pierce, ex-Minister to the Hawaiian Islands, and later Premier of the Cabinet of the King of those islands, died at San Francisco. He was 77 years old.

In a wreck on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railroad, near Delphi, Ind., the baggagemaster was seriously hurt, eight head of cattle killed, and $40,000 worth of rolling stock destroyed.

SOUTHERN.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at Richmond, Va.:

That R. E. Lee Camp of Confederate Veterans, with profound sorrow and sincere regret, receive the announcement of the death of U. S. Grant, and that the people of Virginia will ever cherish and revere the memory of Ulysses S. Grant as an American soldier and citizen; that the people of the South, and especially the people of Virginia, will always hold in grateful memory his uniform and unvarying kindness of purpose toward this people and the constancy with which he maintained the inviolability of the parole which he had granted to Gen. Robert E. Lee and his soldiers at the termination of the late civil strife.

Stonewall Jackson Camp of Confederate Veterans adopted resolutions of similar import.

A dispatch from Atlanta, Ga., says that at Suwanee, on the Richmond and Danville Railroad, a ditch train ran over a cow, throwing one car from the track. In the car were fifteen negro train hands and six bars of iron. The car turned on its side and the iron fell on the negroes, killing seven and wounding three more. The track has been cleared.

By the collapse of a rolling-mill at Wilmington, Del., two men were killed and a number wounded.

Thomas J. Brantly, of Bainbridge, Georgia, recently arrested for indecent brutality toward his wife, was taken from the jail at that place by a mob, and hanged to a tree.

The Hon. C. B. Stewart, one of the signers of Texas' declaration of independence, was interred at Montgomery, Texas, aged eighty-one. But one signer of the declaration now survives.

WASHINGTON.

It is rumored at Washington that Chief Justice Waite, of the Supreme Bench, will soon retire, and that ex-Senator McDonald of Indiana, will be appointed his successor.

Secretary Manning has answered an inquiry from the Federation of Labor Unions regarding the letting of contracts to employers of public labor, stating that the Government is governed solely by the bids, having in view the greatest economy, and beyond this there was no thought of defining the policy of the Government in relation to contracts for public work.

Friends of ex-Senator Conkling in Washington, especially the colored people, are gratified at the prospect of his delivering a eulogy of Gen. Grant in the House of Representatives.

Gen. Hazen has preferred charges against Sergeant Michael McGarey, of the signal corps at Pensacola, Florida, and asked that he be tried by court-martial, for refusing to receive a colored soldier who was detailed to assist him.

Washington telegram: Immediately after the funeral of Gen. Grant, President Cleveland, accompanied by two or three friends, will leave Washington for Northern New York, to be absent a month. After this week no official appointments will be made until October.

The following order was sent out from Washington on the 30th ult.:

In recognition of the nation's loss in the death of Ulysses S. Grant, and in participation of the lamentation and expression of reverence for his honored memory, all postoffices in the several States and Territories of the Union are ordered to be closed between the hours of 1 and 5 p. m. on Saturday, the 8th day of August, appointed for the celebration of his funeral obsequies. By order of the Postmastmaster General.

A. E. STEVENSON,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

The committee appointed to represent the United States Senate at the funeral of Gen. Grant consists of Messrs. Morrill, Sherman, Logan, Ransom, Ingalls, Cockrell, Hampton, Brown, and Manderson.

Gen. Burdett, Grand Army Commander, declined to serve on the committee appointed at Washington to present resolutions of protest against the interment of Gen. Grant at Riverside Park.

MISCELLANEOUS.

New York telegram: The remains of Gen. Grant will be interred in Riverside Park, New York, instead of in Central Park, as at first proposed. The site chosen for the tomb is a high plateau overlooking the Hudson River. A detail from Company E., of the Twelfth Infantry, has arrived at the mountain, accompanied by Col. Roger Jones, who has assumed control under orders from Gen. Hancock. Messrs. Carlisle, Randall, Morrison, Tucker, Singleton, Hiscock, Reed, Browne of Indiana, and Butterworth will constitute the delegation from the House of Representatives attending the final obsequies.——A meeting of citizens at Washington protested against the interment of General Grant in Riverside Park, and appointed Generals Beale, J. A. Cresswell, and Burdette (Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R.) to proceed to Mount MacGregor and present the resolutions to the family. The meeting suggested the Soldiers' Home in Washington as the more fitting place for the tomb.——About $20,000 has already been pledged to the fund for the erection of a statue of Gen. Grant in Lincoln Park, Chicago. The newspapers of the city have been requested to open subscription-lists in their respective offices. At Springfield, Ill., the Grant Monument Association organized by the election of Senator Cullom as President, and appointed a committee to prepare an address to the public.

The United Labor League of America adopted the following resolutions upon the death of Gen. Grant:

Resolved, By the Labor League, that we deeply deplore the death of Gen. Grant, and send condolence to his wife and children.

Resolved, That in his proclamation of the eight-hour law, to shorten the hours of toil, he gave the honest laborer an opportunity to improve his own condition and educate and elevate his family, in accordance with the increasing wants of emancipation and human civilization.

Resolved, That as the leader of the armies of the Republic he struck the shackles from the limbs of 3,000,000 men, and struck a blow for liberty which resounded throughout the world.

Resolved, That his name is inseparably linked with the cause of human freedom; that his fame belongs to no nation, but it is the property of all the people of the world.

The remains of Gen. Grant were dressed and placed in the casket on Wednesday evening, the 29th ult., and the formal transfer of the body to the custody of U. S. Grant Post was made at 9 o'clock p. m. A Mount MacGregor dispatch says:

The casket was inclosed in a heavy oaken box, with nickel-plated protectors at the corners. Upon the top was a gold-plated inscription plate, upon which was engraved:

U. S. GRANT,
Died July 23, 1885.

The suit the General is to be buried in is of black broadcloth. He wears a low standing collar, with a black necktie tied in a plain bow-knot. In the shirt bosom is a single plain gold stud. On the feet are white stockings and patent-leather slippers. The hands rest easily across the breast, with the right a little above the left. On the little finger of the left hand is a plain gold ring, which the General wore for many years. The casket, as soon as the remains were finally bestowed in it, was closed up with the two heavy plate-glass covers, and it will not be disturbed again. The copper cover rests over it, and is removed whenever the body is shown. When it is closed it is with sixty screws. The reason the General will not be buried in his uniform is because he had none. His uniform of Lieutenant General was sent to Washington with the other relics of his career, last spring, and was transferred to the Government, and all his swords went at the same time, and when Mrs. Grant saw a picture the other day representing a coffin with a sword resting upon it she was much affected. The General felt the parting with the swords which he had worn in the army more keenly than that with all his other trophies, and it touched Mrs. Grant deeply that now he was dead there was not one of the swords he cherished so much to rest upon his coffin.

POLITICAL.

In well-informed Democratic circles at Washington it is believed that bills for the admission of Dakota and Montana will be among the earliest measures to be considered by Congress when it reassembles in December.

The Virginia Democratic State Convention, in session in Richmond, nominated General Fitz Hugh Lee for Governor on the first ballot.

FOREIGN.

Sir Moses Montefiore died on the 29th inst. He was the well-known Hebrew philanthropist who celebrated his 100th birthday Oct. 24, 1884.

The report that the Ameer of Afghanistan had assented to the establishment of a British cantonment at Candahar is pronounced untrue. At a recent durbar the Ameer advised his people to cultivate the friendship of England, and warned them against submitting to the tyrannical rule of Russia.

Dispatches from Madrid state that the cholera has broken out on the French frontier, and that the disease is increasing in Madrid.

Senor Castelar, the Republican leader in Spain, is "swinging round the circle," and meeting with enthusiastic receptions everywhere.

Mr. Davitt says he will agitate the land question until landlords become extinct in Ireland.

In Huesca, capital of the Spanish province of that name, the people are in revolt against the enforcement of the excise laws, and have burned the office of the Excise Collector to the ground.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Cardinal Manning, the Bishop of London, and Messrs. Morley and Reid, comprising the committee recently appointed to investigate the charges made by a London journal as to the existence of certain forms of vice in that city, have completed their inquiry, and report that the statements of the newspaper in question are "substantially true."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Intensely warm weather prevailed throughout the West and Northwest last week, the mercury ranging between 90 and 105 degrees at various points in Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Dakota, Minnesota, and Michigan. For sixteen days the thermometer at Louisville, Kentucky, averaged 96 degrees in the shade, between sunrise and sundown, and about two hundred cases of sun-stroke were reported, of which twenty proved fatal. St. Louis and Cincinnati also suffered terribly from the heat.

A severe electric storm prevailed on Mount MacGregor on the evening of the 30th ult. One bolt followed the electric light wires into the Grant cottage and extinguished the lamp immediately over the casket containing the dead soldier. A portion of the plastering was torn away. Four persons were stunned by the third, but revived upon the application of restoratives. In the afternoon the cottage was thrown open, and people on the Mount availed themselves of the opportunity to gaze upon the revered remains. Mrs. Grant visited the room twice during the day, and a letter from her, hoping to meet her husband in a better land, was placed in the casket. A telegram of condolence from the Duke of Argyll was received. President Cleveland selected the following pall bearers for the funeral: General W. T. Sherman, Lieutenant General P. H. Sheridan, Admiral D. D. Porter, Vice Admiral S. C. Rowan, General Joseph E. Johnston, General Simon B. Buckner, Hamilton Fish, George S. Boutwell, George W. Childs, General John A. Logan, George Jones, of the New York Times, and Oliver Hoyt, of New York.

A dispatch from Mount MacGregor says: The letter from Mrs. Grant put in the General's pocket when he was laid in his coffin simply read: "Farewell, we meet again in a better world." It also contained a lock of Mrs. Grant's hair. Mrs. Grant visited the remains Thursday morning, and remained alone with them seven or eight minutes. Then she went to her room and remained there until evening, when she again visited the remains.

Dr. George F. Shrady, one of Gen. Grant's medical advisers, publishes in the Medical Record of Aug. 1 an extended review of the "surgical and pathological aspects of Gen. Grant's case." He believes that the disease had its inception in the month of June, 1884, and gives a succinct history of the progress and treatment of the case from the day in October last when Genera. Grant first called on Dr. Fordyce Barker, his family physician, up to its fatal termination. It suggests no new theories in regard to the case, and is rather intended to be a connected narrative for the benefit of the medical profession, being largely couched in terms familiar only to that body.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The ten-year-old son of Eugene Mongan, of Ishpeming, was drowned while fishing.

—Mose Wingert, a jeweler of Fife Lake, was drowned in the lake at that place while bathing.

—Miss Mary Patrick has been elected School Trustee at Midland, receiving 92 votes to her male opponent's 83.

—William C. Bennett, for thirty-one years a clerk in the office of the Auditor General of Michigan, committed suicide last week.

—With the troops removed from the Saginaw Valley, the adjustment of the differences between the mill-owners and the workingmen seems to be making very fair progress.—Exchange.

—The Michigan Central Company is about to erect a "crystal palace" at "Falls View," from which passengers by its line can view Niagara Falls in comfort, no matter how inclement the weather.

—A farmer's wife, living near Owosso, is the mother of seventeen children, and yet has health and strength enough left to help the unfortunate father of so much humanity every day in the harvest field.

—The story of a monster serpent in Lake Michigan has been started again, but it is poor newspaper work. The sea-serpent will do very well, but the lake-serpent is a dismal failure in every way.—Chicago Tribune.

—Some one having insinuated that the editor of the Union City Register didn't know much about water, that individual comes to the defense in a statement that "in this vicinity it is a fluid in which we keep our fish."

—A. L. Carter, a business man of Medina, Lenawee County, detected a leak in a barrel of gasoline in his cellar. He heedlessly lit a match to get its exact location, when an explosion occurred, wrecking the lower portion of the house, and fatally burning himself. The other inmates escaped.

—A little 4-year old is said to have died at Sebewaing last week as the result of a snakebite. The child was struck in the ankle, while at play, and, running to his mother, informed her that he had been pierced by a stick of wood. The limb soon began to swell, and shortly afterward his entire body was terribly swollen. Great agony was endured until death.

—W. L. Jones, an assayer of this city, says a letter from Ishpeming, made an assay of quartz from a vein several miles north of the Ropes gold range, which gave $6,000 to the ton in free gold. This is the best assay that has been made here. The Coon Gold Mining Company, recently formed here, has commenced work again at the mine, which is in the old silver-lead district. The Ropes assessment of $8,000 will be devoted to purchasing new milling machinery. The mills to be put in are the Wiswell pulverizers and amalgamators, which are a new invention and used in only four or five places besides the Ropes.

—Charles Kendall Adams, the new President of Cornell University, is fifty years old, and belongs to the New England family of Adamses. He was born in Vermont in 1835, but when a boy he moved with his parents to Iowa. His pursuit was farming, but during his spare hours he prepared for college, and in 1861 he was graduated from Michigan University. He was immediately made instructor in Latin and history, and, upon the resignation of Prof. Andrew D. White, he was made Professor of History and given a year's leave of absence to travel in Europe. On his return, he settled down to his duty in Michigan University, where he has been up to the present time.

Michigan Harbors.

[Washington telegram.]

Lieut. Col. Poe, having in charge the improvements of rivers and harbors in Michigan, has made his annual report to the Chief of Engineers. He recommends that the channel at Limekiln Crossing be made 400 feet wide instead of 300, as at first contemplated. In the Saginaw River it is proposed to secure a channel of 200 feet in width, with a depth of 14 feet from Saginaw Bay to Bay City, and 12 feet thence to the head of the river, a distance of about twenty-three miles. Hay Lake channel in the Sault Ste. Marie River, Col. Poe says, should be deepened to 20 feet. He thinks fully seven years will be occupied in accomplishing the results, "and it will be well to remember that the improvement will not become available until the whole is completed." A large appropriation is recommended for the improvement of St. Mary's Falls, Canal, and River, between Lakes Superior and Huron. The increase in tonnage urges in the strongest way that the work of preparing to take care of a commerce greater than the present canal and lockage system could accommodate shall be entered upon without delay. The St. Clair Flats Ship Canal is used by nearly 40,000 vessels a year, carrying nearly 20,000,000 tons. It is proposed to widen and deepen the channel. Appended is a tabulated statement showing the amount of money available, the amount asked for the next fiscal year, and the amount required to complete the work:

REMINISCENCES OF GRANT.

Gen. Horace Porter's Recollections.

[Mount MacGregor special.]

Gen. Porter said he felt keenly for Mrs. Grant, for he knew how very strong was the bond of affection between her and her late husband. They were always together, except when the General was in the field, and there always existed between them the utmost harmony.

Speaking of Gen. Grant's disposition, Gen. Porter said: "It was one of the happiest dispositions I ever knew. I was with him for nine consecutive years, never leaving his side but for a few hours at a time, and I never knew him to be angry. The nearest approach to it was once when he saw a teamster unmercifully beating a poor horse. The General dashed up to him and said: 'You scoundrel! you ought to be ashamed of yourself.' The teamster made some impertinent reply, and the General ordered him tied up by the hands. Gen. Grant never in his life uttered an oath. I never heard him even utter the mildest form of an imprecation, which is a most unusual thing in the free-and-easy atmosphere of army life. This same happy disposition was one of the reasons why all those who were immediately about him, from the humblest dependent up, were so devotedly attached to him. An instance of this is shown in the case of Albert Hawkins, the coal-black coachman, who has asked permission to drive the hearse at the General's funeral. I don't know where the General got Albert, but it was before he was made President the first time. Gen. Grant was pre-eminently a man of the people. His heart warmed to them, and he liked to mingle in throngs. In his journeys by rail he loved to leave his private car and go out into the smoker and sit down in the seat with somebody and chat. Yet he could very effectually crush undue familiarity. I remember once coming up with him from Long Branch. We were in the smoking-car, and a rough-looking fellow who sat in the seat in front of us glanced around and recognized the General. Tipping a wink to those about him, he turned around to the General, and said: 'Say, Cap, give us a light, will ye?' Gen. Grant looked calmly over him with that imperturbable face of his, and then, taking out his match-box, he handed the man two matches. There was that about this simple little action which definitely checked any further advances, and the man who had tried it, from that time on, was very much interested in the passing landscape.

"I never in my life saw but one man so cool under fire as was Gen. Grant," continued Gen. Porter, "and that was a bugler in the Fourth Cavalry. Both the General and this man could look right in the face of the heaviest fire without even so much as winking. Not one man out of thousands can be found who will not involuntarily move when bullets whistle by his ear, but Gen. Grant never moved a muscle. He was also a wonderfully ready man. I remember that second day's fight at the Wilderness, when in the evening word came in that Shaler had been captured, that Seymour had been captured, and Sedgwick's command driven back. Gen. Grant coolly and swiftly gave his orders, moving thousands of men here and thousands there. It was as though he had known the situation for days instead of a few minutes, and was basing his movements on carefully matured plans. He was also equally quick in expressing his opinions when suddenly called upon to do so, and when people requested his views on certain points, and asked him to write them down when he had thought them over, he would say: 'I can write them down now for you.' Then he would take pen and paper, and quickly write page after page so clearly and concisely that not an interlineation would be required. He wrote his message vetoing the inflation of the currency in just this way. He sat down at a little round table in his bed-room and wrote rapidly on until he had finished, and the message contained one of the most exhaustive analyses of our currency system that have ever been published.

"In the field the General usually wore a common blue army blouse and a slouch hat. He had two horses, one called Jeff Davis and the other Cincinnati. Jeff Davis was captured down on Davis' plantation, I believe. It was a brown pony, and a very easy-riding animal. Gen. Grant rode this horse when I accompanied him to the front at the time the mine was exploded in front of Petersburg. There was some bungling about the work, and the General pushed on to the front. The men did not recognize him as he hurried through their ranks. Dismounting from his horse, he leaped over the works, crawled through the abattis, and pushed on to the extreme front. Gen. Grant was one of the best horsemen I ever saw. He could ride easily on any horse, no matter how awkward his gait was, and he had the knack of getting out of his horse all there was in him, too. I remember once when Mr. Bonner asked him if he did not want to drive one of his horses. The General replied that he did, and drove the horse over the course, getting out of him the second fastest time he had ever made. He had a strong, friendly way of handling a horse that at once won his confidence, just as a little child feels confidence in the nurse who holds him gently and securely."

Grant at Vicksburg—His Kindness to Those About Him.

[Dr. E. A. Duncan, in Louisville Courier-Journal.]

"How did General Grant appear before Vicksburg?"

"As plain as an old stove. It was hard to make the new troops believe that it was him as he rode over the field. He wore a common soldier's blouse frizzled out at the bottom, and cavalry pants stuffed in his boots. He wore a low-crowned, black hat, without so much as a gold cord. The simplest Major General's straps were the only thing about his dress that told his rank. He always rode a splendid horse, however, and the trappings of the steed were always in full uniform. But that was due to his orderly more than anything else. He delighted in a good horse. He usually kept six of them on hand—two or three in the field at the same time. His favorite war horse was of the noted Lexington of Kentucky stock, and I think he called him Lexington."

"Was the General a luxurious liver?"

"By no means. He enjoyed a good meal as much as any one, but never complained of what was set before him. He would have been satisfied with hard-tack and sow-belly. He did not drink a drop of liquor during the siege of Vicksburg. He had promised General Rawlins, afterward his Chief of Staff and Secretary of War, at Shiloh, to abstain. He never broke over but once from that day to the close of the war, and that was accidental. A banquet was given to him and General Banks after the fall of Vicksburg, at New Orleans, and in the conviviality of the hour he took a few glasses of wine."

"How did the General treat those about him?"

"With the greatest kindness and respect. He had less egotism than any great man I ever saw. He was eager to give every man a full measure of praise and appreciation for what he did. He would even hunt out what each man merited. One element of his greatness was his desire to pull up his friends with him. It never occurred to him to claim the glory of any campaign. He always spoke of his victories as due to this, that, and the other General. He was the best balanced man I ever saw. I never once saw him exalted by the most glowing success nor depressed by failure. He took things as they came. He had more of the qualities that inspire hero worship than any one I ever came in contact with. Such a man does not appear but once in an age. He rarely ever used a profane word. When angry, which was rare, he was the opposite of other men. He would then knit his brows, compress his lips, and speak slowly."

"What day did he enter Vicksburg?"

"The 4th of July. Gen. Pemberton wanted him to enter the day before, but he replied: 'No, I have been waiting to celebrate the 4th.' The first thing he did was to issue abundant rations and parole the prisoners. That was a master stroke to parole them, for had he sent them North they would have been a tremendous expense to the Government, and as soon as exchanged they would have returned to the rebel ranks. As it was they were glad to go home and remain on their parole."

"You say Gen. Sherman was in full sympathy with Gen. Grant?"

"Assuredly. I remember to have heard Gen. Sherman use a remarkable sentence in speaking of his chief. Said he: 'The thing that makes Gen. Grant so great is, that it is impossible to incumber him with men or responsibilities. He could command a million men if you could get a field big enough. Gen. Grant commanded the longest line of battle ever fought in the history of the world—that is Mission Ridge, seven miles. Fighting was going on that entire length at once. The General sat quietly by a little telegraph instrument and ordered commander after commander to develop what was in front of him. He always knew what he was doing. He once ordered a certain general, whose name I will not give, to make an assault. The general, who did not want him to succeed, replied: "I fully comprehend your order, but to carry it out is the destruction of my army." Gen. Grant instantly sat down and wrote: "I am glad you 'comprehend my order;' obey it." Victory was the result.'

"Gen. Grant was the first one to discover the brilliant fighting and commanding qualities of John A. Logan. It is a mistake that any of Gen. Logan's preferment came from political centers—he won it all on the field with his sword under Gen. Grant's eye. They had absolute faith in each other, and were as affectionate as brothers. There was no man worth of Mason and Dixon's line that so quickly forgot the bitterness engendered by the war. No one had a higher appreciation of the valor and brilliancy of the Southern soldiers. He said Lee's Army of Northern Virginia had never been excelled on earth."

"Where did you first see Gen. Grant?"

"At Galena, Ill., before the war. He was sitting in front of his father's tannery whittling and smoking a small pipe. He cared nothing for business. He had no idea of its details. He would not have known a piece of bank paper from a Chinese wash bill. Capt. Grant, as he was then called, looked about as old then as he did four years ago, when I saw him last."

"Did you live in Illinois?"

"Yes; I practiced medicine within twenty miles of the General."

A Generous Offer.

"Gen. Grant has received the most delicate and heartfelt sympathy in his illness and misfortunes from some of the Confederate officers and soldiers who had known him in the old army," said an intimate friend of his the other day. "And apropos of this is an incident which occurred last year. When the news of his complete pecuniary collapse became public there was a very general expression of regret all over the country, and many offers of assistance were tendered, none of which, however, he accepted. I was sitting with him at his residence in New York one morning while he was going over his daily mail, when he looked up with a curious expression, and said: 'I want you to listen to this,' and then he proceeded to read. It was a letter from an old officer in the United States army whom Grant had known in Mexico, who left the service about the same time Grant did, and subsequently became a distinguished Confederate General. The letter, as well as I can remember, ran this way:

"MY DEAR GRANT: You and I have known each other for many years; and because of that long, and, in its early days, intimate acquaintance and friendship, I venture to ask you to do me a favor. I have read in the papers that, by reason of circumstances beyond your control, you have lost the means you relied upon as a maintenance during the balance of your life. The favor I wish to ask is that you will allow me to send you $10,000, to be considered as a loan and repaid at your own convenience. I know you will receive this request in the spirit I make it, and the only condition I compel with it is that the matter shall be kept a secret between us. Upon a notice of your acceptance I will send the amount to you in the shape of my personal check on the Bank of New York. Be assured, my dear Grant, that you will confer a personal favor on me by permitting me to be of this slight service to you."

"Do you know who it was?" was asked of the speaker.

"Yes," he replied, "but I cannot give his name. He is a man of large fortune and could easily have done it, but, respecting his friend's wish, Grant desired that his name should not be made public. I have never seen Gen. Grant show so much emotion and appreciation as he did in this instance. Shortly after that Congress passed the bill empowering the President to retire a former General officer of the army on full pay, and Grant was at once nominated and confirmed, and thus was put beyond the need of availing himself of the generous liberality of his friends."

There is reason to believe that the person who wrote Gen. Grant the letter mentioned was Gen. S. B. Buckner, of Kentucky.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

Miss Rose E. Cleveland.

Miss Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, sister of President Cleveland, and mistress of the White House, is, by virtue of that relationship and position, the first lady of the land. She has, however, a celebrity entirely independent of these accidents, one due to a circumstance never before occurring to any person in the world. Her book, "George Eliot's Essays and Other Studies," went to the sixth edition before it was published—an honor hitherto unknown in the history of literature. The seventh edition was issued within a week after the first publication. Miss Cleveland is the youngest of nine children. She was born in Fayetteville, N. Y. She was carefully educated, graduating at Houghton Seminary. Then she became a teacher in that institution; then Principal of Lafayette Collegiate Institution, Indiana, and then taught a private school in Pennsylvania, after which she commenced lecturing before classes. After her mother's death, which occurred in 1882, she resided at the old homestead at Holland Patent, which she purchased out of the earnings of her own labor, and continued the work of lecturing until called upon by her brother to assume the duties of mistress of the White House.

Hon. A. E. Stevenson.

Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, the newly appointed First Assistant Postmaster General, was born in Kentucky in 1835, and removed to Bloomington, Ill., when sixteen years of age, where he studied law. He held various State judicial offices, and was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the McClellan ticket in 1864. In 1874 he was elected to Congress, serving one term. He is a man of stalwart health, under fifty years of age, with business habits, and is a thorough-going Democrat. He is a great personal friend of Postmaster General Vilas. He is an eloquent orator, a fine lawyer, and an accomplished gentleman. He is a worthy descendant of the best Kentucky stock, possessing frank and cheery manners which ever win and make friends. Persons coming before him on department business will always feel easy in his presence.

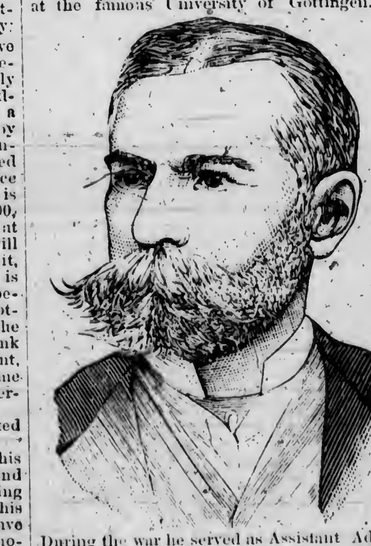
James B. Kimball.

James B. Kimball, the newly appointed Director of the Mint, was born in Salem, Mass., in 1836. He graduated at Harvard University and at the Mining School of Freiburg, Saxony, and in 1857 graduated with the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the famous University of Gottingen.



During the war he served as Assistant Adjutant General on the staffs of Generals Patrick, McClellan, Burnside, Hooker, and Meade, respectively. His reputation as a mining engineer and metallurgist is established and widespread. At one time Dr. Kimball was Vice President of the American Institute of Mining Engineers. When he received his present appointment he was Professor of Economic Geology at Lehigh University, Bethlehem, Pa. He is President of the Everitt Iron Company, Pennsylvania.

MECHANICAL.

AN important process has recently been initiated, viz., that of casting steel tires for locomotives and car wheels by running the metal directly from the furnaces into cast-iron molds, and ready, when cooled, to be fitted and shrunk on. If the hopes in regard to this process are realized, the ordinary process of casting in sand molds will be dispensed with, at much saving of labor and cost.

THE Neues Jahrbuch fuer Pharmacie details the conclusion of Herr Reinsch, derived from experiments with various salts, that impregnating timber with a concentrated solution of rock-salt is as good a preservative against its bursting into flame as is silicate of soda, while the price of the former salt is, of course, a mere trifle. Moreover, rock-salt thus applied to timber is a preservative against dry rot and noxious insects.

THE white brick now made in France from the immense accumulations of waste sand at glass factories is likely to prove a valuable industry. The process of production consists in subjecting the sand to an immense hydraulic pressure and then baking in furnaces at a high temperature, so as to produce blocks of various forms and dimensions, of a uniform white color, and of almost pure silex. The product is unaffected by the heaviest frosts or by the sun or rain.

The old gentleman with his spectacles, the "Lord Dundreary" with his "glasss," the myopic reader, and short-sighted persons generally, who carefully wipe the dimness from their spectacles and eye-glasses with silk handkerchiefs, are, perhaps, not aware that a piece of paper will do the service much better. No matter how fine the silk may be, it will not leave the surface of the glass so well polished as the paper will. If pains are taken to lightly brush off any particles of gritty dust that may be on the glasses before rubbing them, the paper will never injure their surface with the slightest scratch. Dampen the glasses with vapor or water, or, when possible, with the breath, and the paper will absorb all the moisture and whatever else is deposited on the glass, now in a much softened condition. The best paper is unsized and quite porous, like the paper used by newspapers. Blotting paper leaves short fibers on the glass and is not desirable.

A NEW tanning agent has been discovered, if the Arizona Gazette is correctly informed. The statement is made that a tanner at Tempe, Arizona, two or three years ago discovered a plant which carried a large proportion of tannin, and which, when used in the manufacture of leather, gave extra weight to the product. The plant is of annual growth, indigenous to the deserts and dry uplands, and is known to the Mexicans and Indians as "gonagra." It has a root somewhat longer and more scraggy than the cultivated beet, though resembling it in appearance.

THE use of water in connection with blasting is rapidly extending in this country and Europe. A tube filled with water is inserted in the bore hole next to the power cartridge, the tube being of thin plate, or even of paper. The usual tamping follows, and when the explosion occurs, the tube containing the water is burst, the explosive violence being increased by the presence of the water, and extended over the enlarged interior area of the bore hole, due to the space occupied by the water tube. A much larger quantity of the material to be mined or quarried is thereby brought down or loosened with a smaller quantity of explosive used, while the heat of the explosion converts a portion of the water into steam, which, with the remaining water, extinguishes the flame and absorbs and neutralizes the gases and smoke generated.

Dodging a Cyclone.

I heard a noise and ran out to see what it was. I saw at some distance off a heavy black cloud, funnel-shaped and twisted at the bottom like a screw. It seemed whirling with rapidity and was coming through the woods like a wild animal. It was just awful. People began to cry out and run around distracted, and I felt very queer. I saw that big black thing come bouncing along like a great cannon ball and I concluded I was about to fly away on it and be an angel. The cloud did not lie close to the ground, but bounded up and down, jumping clear over the tops of some of the trees and tearing others to pieces. I thought I would lie down a while. I selected a spot that was full of mud and water. I don't know why I chose such a place, but may be it was because I was in a hurry and did not have time to chose well. It was a soft place, however, and had its attractions at that moment.

After I had got myself well settled in the mud I saw the cyclone was giving me the go-by. It passed about 200 yards to my left and tore things up terribly. There was a tree standing there in full view. The cyclone struck it about forty feet from the ground, turned the branches and all around half a dozen times like lightning, and then snatched the whole upper portion into kindling wood and carried it off. It was an awe-inspiring sight, and although I am glad I saw it I don't want to see it again—not so close, anyhow."—Macon Telegraph.

FEARFUL FALLS FROM A BALLOON.

The Terrible Experiences of Two Aeronauts in Connecticut.

[New Haven (Conn.) special.]

At Winsted, Conn., a balloon ascension was made this afternoon by an aeronaut, Prof. Brooks, and Frederic Moore, a wealthy manufacturer of the town. The balloon was the largest ever used in the State. It was eighty feet high and 120 feet in circumference, and was calculated to have a lifting capacity of 1,500 pounds. All went well until the aeronauts had reached an elevation of 2,500 feet. There, although they were above the clouds, they were caught in a storm which proved to be the heaviest experienced in that part of the State for years. Becoming terrified by the lightning they began to descend and passed through the cloud layers in safety, although the balloon suffered from the heavy rain, and the gas began to escape. When within 100 feet of the ground the machine was rocking violently from side to side. As they fell the two men threw out sandbags, and, losing too much ballast, the balloon careened wildly, the gas escaped, and the car was overturned. Brooks and Moore lost their hold on the slippery rail and fell headlong from the car. The crowds that had been cheering wildly a few moments before stood out in the pouring rain in their eagerness to see the descent and did their best to catch the aeronauts as they fell. Brooks was picked up very badly hurt. He is expected to die. Moore's injuries are not so serious. Both men had had considerable experience in ballooning.

Indian Claims in Minnesota.

[St. Paul (Minn.) special.]

A commission, composed of Messrs. Larabie and Morrison, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the claims of the traders at the Upper and Lower Sioux Agencies in Minnesota, was in session here yesterday, taking evidence on certain claims growing out of the Indian outbreak in this State in 1862. The claimants are Nathan Myrick, Wm. H. Forbes, and L. Roberts, and their aggregate claims will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars. The gentlemen named were licensed by the Government to do a trading business with the Indians, and at the time of the outbreak there was a large amount due the traders from the Indians. The effort is made to recover the sums due at the time of the uprising, and also damages for depredations committed by the Indians. Mr. Myrick has been laboring for ten or a dozen years to have the claims settled, and it is likely that the matter will at last be disposed of. It is thought likely that the amount will be very much reduced.

Notes and News.

Another evidence of the increasing healthfulness of commerce is the facts that the June receipts of breadstuffs at Chicago were 10 per cent larger than in 1884, and that the eastward shipments in the first half of the current year were the largest on record.

The New York Herald publishes the hopeful views of a large number of representative business men who see signs of "good times coming"—not with a fictitious "boom," but with a "steady and sure advance." These men are republicans as well as democrats, and it is worthy of note that they agree, republicans and democrats alike, in giving credit to the "caution" and "conservatism" of President Cleveland as a contributory cause of this encouraging condition of things.

Last Saturday the Chicago Herald gave as a supplement a fac-simile of the famous wall-paper edition of the Vicksburg, Miss., Citizen, dated July 2, 1863, wherein Gen. Grant was advised that the way to cook a rabbit was "first catch the rabbit." At the bottom of the last column is a brief note, dated July 4th, 1863, stating that "Gen. Grant has caught the rabbit; he has dined in Vicksburg and he did bring his dinner with him," etc. By a singular coincidence, when the job of printing the supplements was given out in Chicago, the foreman of the job room which did the work was the same man who printed the original twenty-two years ago, and the Herald says "he fairly yelled with delight."

If you really wish the merchants of your market to grant you favors, grant them favors whenever the opportunity offers. How can you do this? By meeting all obligations honestly contracted as promptly as possible; paying them cash when you have it to pay, instead of buying with cash of peddlers and foreign dealers, who never trust or accommodate you, or who never care for any of your misfortunes as does the home merchant, who always meets you half way and who makes many of the burdens you bear easier, because knowing your misfortunes he sympathizes with you, extends your period of credit and only asks that you be manly and honest with him that you may merit his confidence and in return bestow upon him your patronage which he has a perfect right to expect. That man who arrogantly asserts that he will "buy just where it best pleases him," usually does so with the cash, but if you are just a little watchful you will discover that the same fellow always gets trusted "wherever he can;" because of his irresponsibility his patronage is valueless, and also generally speaking, his influence in the community.—[Ovid Union.

The Public Debt.

Night and day, and every day in the year, says the Country Gentleman, we are lessening the debt $100 a minute. This is about the rate at which the United States Government is paying off its indebtedness, and is hardly one-third as fast as during several previous years. But $100 a minute amounts to only $52,560,000 annually, or scarcely 75 cents, during a whole year, for each of the inhabitants of our great country. The most of it, however, is paid by the wealthy, who do not feel it, and by a tax upon a few articles of luxury. But, were it equally divided, there are few who would not cheerfully contribute this small amount (75 cents) for the sake of sustaining the splendid reputation our country enjoys throughout the world as a prompt, honest, debt-paying people. The United States could now borrow money at a lower rate of interest than any other nation under the sun. There are several advantages in this. To name one: A nation's strength depends largely upon its ability to provide the "sinews of war," of which money is the greatest. Great Britain is stronger from this cause than from the actual number of fighting men she could raise among her own population proper. For this reason we are able to get along with almost no standing army or navy—barely enough to act as a police force and take care of the fortifications to save them from dilapidation, and to keep a corps of skilled officers in training for any emergency that might arise demanding the sudden action of a large force of citizen soldiers. Nearly every other nation has a large percentage of its most vigorous men in field or camp or fort, or on shipboard, with another heavy percentage toiling to support those and the expenses they incur.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Georgia Minstrels at opera house Saturday evening.

The Faxton had a glorious day for the excursion yesterday.

An interesting polo match at the rink last Saturday evening.

Hemmings and Hogan are painting Upright, Emrey & Co.'s store.

The Faxton carried a large excursion party to Mackinac on Wednesday.

There was a large grove meeting last Sunday near Black's school house.

The Friant carried an excursion party from Petoskey to East Jordan on Tuesday.

The schooner Fleetwing in receiving an entire rebuild,—new timbers, plank, etc., throughout.

A speckled trout 18 inches long was caught in a net at the mouth of the river last Saturday.

Wm. Mcarhouse, of Ironton, aged 20, was drowned Saturday noon while bathing in Pine Lake.

Preaching at the M. E. church next Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock by the pastor. All are invited.

The frame of A. D. Cruickshank's house was raised last week. It will make a fine appearance when finished.

While coming out of Horton's Bay yesterday, the Clara Belle broke her main shaft, and is now laid up for repairs.

The excursion season is fully opened, and those who cannot find some good place out of the many are indeed hard to please.

Grant memorial service at M. E. church Sunday evening. Oration, resolutions, and reminisences. All are invited.

The Faxton, Friant, and Clara Belle gave excursions from Charlevoix, East Jordan, and Boyne City to Petoskey last Sunday.

There was a small fire in the Clifton house, Petoskey, Sunday night, but the damage did not reach over two or three hundred dollars.

East Jordan is elated over the prospects of another large saw mill in the near future, with a lumber railroad connecting with Intermediate Lake.

The Georgia Minstrels at opera house Saturday evening are not jubilee singers, but genuine colored minstrels, and come well recommended.

The W. C. T. U. will hold their regular meeting on Friday at 3 p. m., at the home of Mrs. J. A. Hawkins, on Clinton street. All are cordially invited.

The public generally are invited to be present at the village hall Saturday afternoon, and take part in the memorial service in honor of Gen. Grant.

The fourth blossom of night blooming cereus at Mr. W. P. Brown's opened last Saturday evening, and was watched by many people who never saw one before.

O. W. Smith cut and polished for E. A. Spaulding, a quartz crystal over two inches in diameter, picked up in Colorado, which on the inside is clearer than the finest glass.

The annual convention of the Charlevoix county Sunday school association will be held in Charlevoix, on Wednesday, Aug. 19, 1885. The program will be published next week.

Attention is called to an advertisement on fourth page of a regatta to be held in Charlevoix on Friday, Aug. 14th. The matter was received at this office too late for any extended notice this week.

Those fond of legerdemain assert that Prof. Harvey is the best they ever saw; that in some of his tricks it does not seem possible for a man to work the lightning changes without supernatural aid.

Last Thursday, W. A. Burnham, of Irvington-on the Hudson, New York, and John Shrier, of Charlevoix, caught 110 trout in McGeagh's creek, in size from one-half pound to one and one-fourth pound each.

While working on the cupola of Cruickshank's house last Saturday, J. T. Kirkpatrick stepped on a short piece of board and barely escaped falling to the ground, a distance of about 45 feet. He saved himself, but was somewhat bruised and lamed.

Tuesday was a cold day. Extra clothing and fires were a necessity. The strong wind and heavy sea from the northwest interfered with the usual running of steamers. Wednesday morning was again bright and pleasant.

Lansing Journal: The Charlevoix Journal has completed its second year, and has every indication of a prosperous career. Chas. J. Strang, the publisher, was for several years a member of the Journal force. He is bright and enterprising and deserves the success he is having.

Miss May Papineau arranged a picnic and school exhibition in union with the Sunday school in the district, which was held on Pine Lake three miles east of Ironton last Friday. Rev. C. F. Van Auken addressed both schools. A fine dinner was spread, which, with the exercises and excellent arrangements, made the day a great success.

This is weather when every housekeeper and householder should constitute herself and himself a sanitary committee of one to see that all the surroundings and belongings of house, store, shop, alley, front yard, back yard, barn and stable are sweet and clean as they can be made. A foul smell is nature's danger signal. Disease and cleanliness are sworn enemies. Given everywhere and to everybody pure air, pure water, pure food and temperance in eating and drinking, and the world would be far back on its way to the days when life was prolonged into centuries in stead of decades.

Last week we mentioned that the brick used by W. P. Brown for the wall of his bank building were from W. H. Healey's yard at East Jordan. We have been informed that most of the brick in town are from the same place, recent new buildings being the opera block, Odd Fellows' hall, village hall, besides a great number of chimneys, etc. Mr. Healey says he cannot and will not furnish what is known as cheap brick, but he does claim to furnish a better article for the money than any other man in this region. It is easy to find numerous instances of the folly of buying cheap materials. It don't pay. Before buying from outside parties, examine Mr. Healey's work.

The wrecking schooner Experiment was in port this week with a lot of chains, anchors, etc. There were two large anchors, one weighing about 3,000 pounds, to which was attached a 75-fathom, 1⅛ inch chain, and another weighed a little over 1,700 pounds. All together she had over 12 tons of chains, over two tons of anchors, besides a lot of broken pieces of machinery, etc.

Last Friday an interesting time was had at the Black school house in Marion. The occasion was the closing exercises of Miss Gladys Jefferies school, school, which were extended beyond the usual limits of a school picnic. The whole community turned out, 200 strong, for a day of pleasure and feasting. The Sunday school took part as an organization, and the management of the exercises fell upon Miss Jefferies as teacher of the day school, and John Ward as superintendent of the Sunday school. Addresses were made by Mr. Black on the part of the day school, and by Rev. J. T. Iddings for the Sunday school. An excellent musical program was arranged, and interspersed throughout the exercises. The dinner was not simply a basket picnic but an abundance of provisions were spread on long tables. All were satisfied, and a great quantity remained. After dinner a variety of games and races were indulged in, including a women's race of ten rods for a pitcher. The day was pronounced a great success.

A Fatal Assault.

For a long time past our citizens have been frequently regaled with stories of drunken quarrels and unprovoked assaults upon Indians,—both men and women. Last Saturday night this business reached a culminating point, resulting in the death of Geo. Optegezic, and the severe bruising of his wife.

Sunday morning report was received in town that the body of an Indian lay dead at the roadside about a mile from Charlevoix, on the State road. Justice McLeod summoned a jury, proceeded to the spot, and held an inquest. Dr. Carlstein examined the body, finding a bruise on the left cheek, another on the left breast, and the neck broken. The inquest was then adjourned to Monday morning.

It seems that the deceased lived near J. A. Bacots,' on the north shore of Pine Lake; he had been in Charlevoix during the afternoon, and had gone to Alex. Micksawbys' during the evening. About midnight, he and his wife and boy, and another Indian started for home. At the State road at the foot of the hill near Mr. Colby's, they were met by a party in a buggy, who asked if there was a dance at Micksawby's. The reply was that there was not. A few words followed, and somebody began to throw stones. Optegezic was knocked down, and probably broke his neck in the fall. His wife was knocked down with a stone which cut a long, deep gash over her right temple and ear. The other Indian and the boy escaped,—whether with or without bruises, we have not learned.

Information was given by a son of Mr. Colby, who witnessed the transaction, which led to the arrest of Frank Durga, Neil Barry, Ed. Graham and Wm. Moore. The date of examination was fixed for Wednesday afternoon, and is still in progress.

Charlevoix cannot afford to let this crime go unpunished. It is a stain on the fair name of the village. We have had enough, and more than enough of this sort of business. Will it now be stopped? Will the authorities give the offenders such punishment as will forever put a stop to it here?

Annual Report of Capt. Lockwood.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Capt. D. W. Lockwood, Corps of Engineers, has submitted his annual report to Gen. Newton on the improvement of harbors on Lake Michigan.

The sum of $6,228 has been expended on the improvemett of Charlevoix Harbor and entrance to Pine Lake, Mich., leaving $4,802 available. It is estimated that $50,000 can be profitably expended during the next fiscal year in extending the south pier 300 feet and in completing the work already in progress. Capt. Lockwood estimates that $115,000 is required to complete the work.

An Evening of Fun.

The pure Caucasian may as well read his doom. The burnt cork and counterfeit colored brother cannot long hold his own on the stage of negro minstrelsy against such simonpure artists as those in the Famous Georgia Minstrels, who gave delight to a large audience in the opera house last evening. The objection to minstrelsy selected from the colored people for professional service heretofore, has been that they had not the intelligence to make them competent to compete with the white minstrels. But the company that played last night in Detroit, has made up the deficiency and took hold of its work in a masterly fashion. We have not space to extend our comments on the performance of the Georgia Minstrels, but it was first-class, and the audience was made to laugh heartily and applaud roundly all the way through.—Detroit Free Press.

COMMON THINGS.

Oh, how narrow is our vision
That we see no more Elysian
In the commonest of things;
Why, a lumber-wagon's rattle
Is as grand as any battle,
If our ears had only wings.

'Tis a necessary fraction
Of the world's unfolding action,
Detail of the life of man;
Discord when we hear it single,
Music when we make it mingle
In the complicated plan.

In the simplest shines the story
Of the universe's glory,
And the lofty and the wise
See that all things are relations,
Follow the concatenations
Till above the stars they rise.

Even anguish, even error,
Taints them with no trace of terror,
For the All is in their eyes;
Knowing nothing isolated,
From the loved and from the hated,
Up to God they generalize.

SHIFTLESS SETH.

BY MORRIS REDWING.

It was a humble cabin that stood on the bank of Brier Creek, with the shadows of the great trees flung athwart the roof. Sometimes the sunshine danced on the rippling waters of the creek, rendering its serpentine course aglow with sparkling beauty.

A pleasant spot indeed had Conrad Baker found for a home. Every day, with his pretty wife's kiss lingering on his lips, he trod the woodland path to the saw-mill three miles away, where he earned good wages which he hoped would, within a year, grow to sufficient proportions to complete the payment on his homestead.

All the day long sweet Nettie Baker sang about the house, or in the shadows of the wood, as gay and blithe of spirit as a young and happy heart could well be. And she was happy. Less than a year married, Conrad and she had yet to have their first quarrel. From a home in an old settled farming country to this cabin in the wilderness was a radical change indeed, yet one that pleased rather than discomfited the ever cheerful Nettie.

One day, late in the afternoon, Nettie tripped down the path leading to the spring that bubbled from the bank above the creek. In one hand she carried a tin pail, while a merry tune passed from her lips, and was wafted away on the summer air.

As she bent above the waters of the spring her smiling lips became suddenly compressed, and a deadly pallor stole into her cheeks. Beside her own face reflected there was another, the coarse visage of a man.

For an instant Nettie's heart ceased its beating, and a cold chill stole down her spine. With a mighty effort of will she crushed down her fears, stepped back from the spring, and glanced upward into the face of the man who crouched on the bank above the bubbling water.

"Seth Bragg, what are you doing here?" cried Nettie Baker, in a sharp voice, tinged with unmistakable resentment.

The man struggled to his feet and quickly lowered himself into the path, standing in an awkward attitude before the young pioneer's wife. He was below the medium height, yet possessed unusual physical development. His broad shoulders, sinewy arms, and heavy neck betokened great strength.

With this remarkable physical development went a low order of intellect, as one could see at a glance into the face, with its low forehead, sunken, heavy black eyes, and blank expression generally.

Seth Bragg, or Shiftless Seth, as he was generally termed, had been an employe in the saw-mill where Conrad Baker worked, but his dislike of anything approaching bodily exertion soon caused his discharge, and he was left to seek his fortune elsewhere.

Nettie had met the man several times. She did not like him, but until this moment had not feared the shiftless donothing.

"And um I doin' here? Mebbe I might ask you the same question. If I should, what would you say, Mis' Baker?"

His eyes twinkled, and fixed themselves with an intense glow on the face of Nettie Baker.

"You can see why I am here," and Nettie held up her pail.

"After water, eh? Wal, git it, and go back to the house, then I've got somethin' to tell ye."

With a little of the fear in her heart going out Nettie stooped and filled her pail, and started on the return. Bragg offered to carry the water, but she refused the proffer, and hurried on in silence. Once at the house she felt less fear of Shiftless Seth.

He did not sit down, but leaned against the back of a chair, clinching and twirling it about with his huge hand, while his beady eyes watched every movement of the pioneer's pretty wife with a hungry glow not pleasant to contemplate.

"Mis' Baker, hev you heard the news?"

She paused in her work of brushing out the sink, and faced him with a questioning look in her eyes. She had pretended to be busy in order to show the man that she cared little for his presence, after offering him the chair which he refused to take.

"What news, Mr. Bragg?" her lips moved in questioning at last.

"Of course, you hadn't heard it. I might a-know'd. The mill blowed up an hour ago, and lots of poor fellows suffered. The boss is killed, and——"

"Conrad! What of him?"

With one hand pressed over her heart to hold it down, that it might not leap from her bosom, the pioneer's wife reeled forward and placed her other hand on the shoulder of Shiftless Seth, and looked in wild appeal into his face.

"Don't go off that way, Mis' Baker; Conrad's all right."

"Is he unharmed?" huskily.

"Not exactly, but he'll pull through."

Without waiting to hear more, Nettie sprang to the next room, and a minute later returned with bonnet and shawl, ready for a journey. She moved toward the open door without seeming to notice the stout form that stood on the center of the floor, still twirling the chair.

A heavy hand on her shoulder interrupted her walk. She turned upon him almost fiercely.

"Let me go?" she cried, her husky voice and pallid countenance betokening the intense excitement under which she was laboring.

"Mis' Baker, let me tell you something," said the man, almost sternly. "I come here arter you, coz Conrad Baker sent me. I was ter see you safely through the woods. The poor boy was taken up ter Dan Coombs' house, and I know a short cut that 'll save time if you'll let me guide ye."

"Anything, anything but delay," cried the pallid lips of the fair pioneer, in a quiver of intense suffering.

Shiftless Seth went outside, Nettie followed, and soon the two were moving down the path leading through the forest to Solomon's mill. He walked in advance, but turned his head every now and then to look at the bowed little form hurrying after. She, in the intense agony of suspense, never once noticed these movements on the part of her companion, nor the covetous, lustful gleam that glowed in his black, beady eyes.

When half way to the mill he turned directly out of the path into the woods.

"It's a short cut to Dan Coombs' house," said Shiftless Seth, in answer to an inquiry from Nettie. "By going this way we save over half a mile, though, of course, the path is a leetle the best travelin'. Of course, if ye say so, we'll keep the longest way."

"Follow the course that will bring me the soonest to Conrad's side," was the only response made by the troubled heart, and soon the twain were threading the mazes of a trackless forest. The shadows hung deep, and soon night would come, but not until the village surrounding Solomon's mill had been reached, if all went well.

Nettie's bosom was full to overflowing, contending emotions rendering her almost oblivious of circumstances that, at another time, would have rendered her suspicious at once. The minutes passed, and the wilderness seemed to increase in density as the twain pushed on. Tangled thickets had taken the place of the open wood along the path, and soon Nettie found herself brought to a stand, with huge tree-trunks, cast down by the wind, all about her. A groan of helplessness escaped her.

Shhiftless Seth leaned against one of the logs and faced the young wife with a low, gurgling laugh.

"Mighty tough travelin' here," he said. "I expect we won't see Solomon's mill to-night, my dear."

The man's bearing had suddenly changed, and a look of devilish triumph shot from his beady black eyes. Never had he looked so hideous and wicked in the eyes of poor little Nettie Baker, and she shrunk back, while a feeling of startled horror went like a knife to her heart. Had she mistaken the man utterly? Was he a friend in human form, or was this pleasantry at a serious time but an expression of his gross nature, wholly innocent of wrong?

"I—I don't understand," faltered Nettie, at length, in a helpless way that would have touched a heart not made of flint.

"You will soon enough, Mis' Baker," articulated the great, hulking monstrosity before her, with another gurgling, unearthly laugh. "We can't git to the mill; we're lost, I reckon, and have got to stop right here a spell."

"But Conrad may die while we are here. Oh, dear!"

"Don't worry," sneered the thick, sensual lips; "the young feller'll git on all right."

"But he was badly hurt."

"He will be afore mornin', if he ain't now," chuckled Shiftless Seth, a look of hideous satisfaction shooting from his eyes. "I think I'll take good care of his pretty wife, anyhow. I think a heap of you, Mis' Baker, and——"

But Nettie did not wait for the villain to finish his speech. She realized a part of the truth, at any rate, and at once resolved to escape from the threatened danger if possible.

The way was open at the rear—the path she had come—and, turning quickly, she darted away on the back track. Night shadows were falling rapidly, and the moment Nettie plunged into a thicket she was lost to the view of Shiftless Seth. For an instant his face assumed a look of genuine surprise. It was quickly changed to an expression of rage and determination. With an oath the mill man darted forward, roaring like an enraged lion.

"I'll make you repent, Mis' Baker; I'll make you feel sorry ye ever turned your head, you'n he, and 'lowed you was too good to speak to Seth Bragg. You've did it many a time, but you'll come down a peg now, I reckin."

These words were flung to the trees as the enraged and disappointed villain dashed back in pursuit of the woman he had hoped to ruin. He rushed on for some rods, roaring like some wild, mad beast. At length he came to a halt. The shadows were deepening, and even the tree-trunks were becoming indistinct.

He did not see the shrinking form of the fair pioneer. She had eluded him in the shadows. Shiftless Seth leaned his broad back against a tree and gazed about him with a mad flame in his eyes. Had she escaped him utterly? The thought seemed to madden the man. He clenched his hands until the bones cracked, and the grating of his teeth could be heard for rods around. Nettie Baker heard the sound, and clung trembling to the little hillock, against which she had fallen in her mad effort at escape.

When Shiftless Seth went swiftly and vengefully over the ground on the back track, his swinging arms tossed the bushes above the head of crouching, trembling Nettie Baker, and she came near crying out in terrified accents. It was lucky she did not. In the first fury of his rage he might have trained her. There he stood, not three rods distant, piercing every thicket and shadowed spot with the flame of his glinting eyes. And yet he did not see the crouching figure at the foot of a swamp cedar, almost within reaching distance of his long arms.

Ten minutes passed, and still Seth Bragg stood sweeping the scene with his lust-lit eyes. The deepening shadows were a shield, becoming each moment more complete. Nettie thanked heaven for the deepening shadows of night. Darkness alone would save her from the fiend who had lured her from home for an awful purpose. What that purpose was Nettie could well understand. She was not sure, however, about the man's story. It might be true that her husband was badly hurt. This uncertainty added to the poor wife's misery, and for the first ten minutes after her escape from the clutches of Shiftless Seth she lay against the ground quite helpless—utterly crushed under the weight of her mental burden. The minutes passed, and still the reckless mill-man retained his position against the tree. He knew that had the fair pioneer continued her flight he would have seen her moving form ere this. She was hidden somewhere near, and it would be an easy task to find her. A chuckle oozed from the lips of the man.

"My victory'll be all the sweeter," he muttered. "I'm glad night comes. Nobody'll ever find us here, and Conrad Baker'll think his sweet wife's eloped with the poor coot he despised."

Another gurgling laugh oozed from the man's lips. He seemed to be enjoying himself immensely. Of a sudden he straightened up and began searching the thickets, the heavy crash of his feet falling on the poor fugitive's ear with painful distinctness. Every now and then a blood-curdling laugh would drop from his lips.

Nearer and nearer sounded the awful tread. Nettie hugged the ground, her heart beating wildly, a deadly faintness filling her whole frame. Would he find her? Every moment she expected to feel the clutch of a cruel hand upon her shoulder. Sometimes the crash of steps seemed almost at her side, then again they would recede, and go away farther and farther. Why did she not spring up and flee? She could not answer for herself. She was held to the ground as by a spell.

Minutes seemed hours to that suffering wife. Fainter and fainter grew the sound of steps; at length a dead silence reigned over the great woods. The fear that was all powerful up to this time began to vanish. Struggling to her feet Nettie Baker looked about her. So weak she was that it was necessary for her to cling to the trunk of the cedar for support. She listened, but heard only the usual sounds of the summer night. Nettie breathed easier.

Darkness, deep and profound, hung like a pall over the woods. Nettie could see nothing. She could feel the blackness of the night, however. Where was the demon who had lured her from home in the hope of accomplishing her ruin? Perhaps lying in wait for her to make her presence known, when he would pounce upon her. This thought held poor Nettie to her position for many minutes more. Standing there in the gloom without moving was tiresome.

Nettie realized that she was lost in the woods, even should she never meet with her enemy again. She might never find her way to Solomon's mill, or to the little cabin on the bank of Brier Creek. Death by starvation, however, was preferable to the doom the presence of Shiftless Seth invited.

Perhaps an hour passed, and then Nettie began moving away from the spot. Slowly and painfully she made her way through the thickets, and climbed over logs and hillocks, going, as seemed to her, directly toward her house. The blackness of her surroundings, however, rendered it impossible for her to take her bearings. She only moved along in a blind way that might lead her deeper into the woods. That was a tiresome walk, one that Nettie Baker was not to forget to her dying day.

At length, clambering upon a log, the fair pioneer came to a halt. It seemed to her that she must have gone far enough to reach home, but no sign of clearing or houses was to be discerned. If Conrad was well, as she believed was the case, he would certainly keep a light burning, and would scour the wood in search of his missing wife. She could not be near the house, and she was well nigh exhausted.

"Oh, dear!"

With this exclamation, poor, tired, wretched little Nettie slipped from the log, and fell in a helpless heap to the ground. She had miscalculated the distance, and wrenched her ankle terribly. An effort to rise brought a moan to her lips. She could go no further, if she would, and, covering her face with her hands, Nettie Baker lay sadly moaning until tired nature was overcome in sleep.

When the young wife opened her eyes once more her vision was greeted with the gray light of day. Night had passed, and with a relieved feeling Nettie attempted to rise. A sharp pain in her limb brought a cry to her lips. She could not rise, if she would.

"Found! I'll value you highly after the race you've gin me."

It was a horrible laugh that followed the words. A hand fell on the shoulder of poor Nettie Baker, and she was dragged from the low ground upon an open spot above. Nettie cried out with the pain in her foot and ankle. She gazed up into the face of Shiftless Seth, to see there a look that sent a shudder of horror to the heart of the poor girl-wife. Her foot was forgotten then.

"Heaven help me!" she moaned.

"It won't," growled Shiftless Seth. "You are mine. I'll make ye less proud, I reckin, when you see Conrad Baker agin."

A strong arm fell about the slender waist of Nettie, a pair of thick, sensual lips were pressed to her cheek, and then—thud! Blackness followed. Night once more reigned in the soul of Nettie Baker. Night again mantled the earth in its sable folds when the mistress of Brier cottage opened her eyes once more. A light dazzled her eyes. Over her head was the roof of her own little room, and the kindly, anxious face of Conrad Baker bent over her.

"Thank heaven, you are safe, Nettie! What a horrible experience," said the young pioneer, feverently.

"Safe at home," murmured Nettie, with her hand in Conrad's. "You were not hurt, not blown up in the mill?"

"Certainly not. Did he tell you that?"

"Yes."

Then Nettie gave her husband an account of her experience with Shiftless Seth. After she had finished, he said:

"One of the mill boys and I found you after a long search in the arms of that man. We were in time, thank heaven. You are sure you are not hurt, Nettie?"

"My ankle pains me, that is all, a mere nothing; but that man——"

"Seth Bragg? It is a terrible thing, Nettie. He is a raving maniac."

Nettie closed her eyes without asking more questions. She felt thankful at her escape from a horrible fate; she was thankful, too, that Shiftless Seth was not sane, otherwise his crime could never have been forgiven. Against a madman she held no enmity.—Chicago Ledger.

Flower Farms.

The flower farms for the more delicate flowers—such as jasmine, rose, tuberose, and orange flowers—are situated in the south of California. The hillsides of that neighborhood, in the proper season, are a mass of flowers, exhaling a most delicate perfume. The odors and essential oils are gathered from flowers and fruits by many different methods. For instance, orange, lemon, and citron peel are placed in a press, and by mere mechanical action made to yield up the essential oil which resides in the small pellicle of the rind. The art of distillation, very largely used, need not be described, but the singular art of obtaining perfumes by absorption is not so generally known. Many of the more delicate odors are so volatile that the use of heat, as in distillation or maceration, spoils them; it is, therefore, necessary to conduct the process cold. Possibly the grossest material matter we have any notion of is fat, and the most spiritual the delicate odors of flowers. That two such very different matters, if we may use the word, should have any affinity to each other does not at first sight appear natural, but when we remember the large proportion of carbon in fat, and that carbon has an especial power of absorbing all gases and essences, we get at the rationale of the absorption or enflowerage process. The odors so liable to escape on the application of heat are very effectually trapped and secured in the following manner: Square wooden frames about three inches deep are fitted with glass bottoms about two feet wide and a yard long. Over the glass a thin layer of fat is spread with a spatula. Upon this bed the flowers the odors of which are to be absorbed are spread thickly, and allowed to remain from twelve to seventy-two hours. These "glass frames," as they are called, are made to fit one upon the other, and in some large houses hundreds may be seen thus piled, silently at work securing the odors. The flowers are continually changed throughout the season, and in the end the fat is completely saturated with this perfume. Thus the finer-scented pomades are made; but when it is required to secure the perfume as an essence, the fat thus saturated with perfume is cut into small cubes and placed in spirit, which speedily steals back, by its greater attraction, the odor from the hydro-carbon.—Brooklyn Eagle.

"Yes."

"Well, that's too bad! Died of pneumonia, I suppose?"

"No—of brain fever."

"Dear me, but that's awful! How do you like my new hat?"

The newcomer rattled on in this fashion for twenty minutes, and then left the car. As it started again after leaving her on the crosswalk she made vigorous motions to the conductor, and when he had brought the vehicle to a halt she said:

"Won't you please to ask that lady friend of mine if it was her husband or one of the children who died. I forgot to find out!"

She didn't find out on that trip.—Detroit Free Press.

A POOR belle—the pretty maid servant.

He Knew Bill Gimps.

"Do you know the prisoner at the bar?"

"Him?"

"Yes; answer up prompt."

"That feller there?"

"Certainly. Do you know him?"

"Him?"

"Yes, to be sure. Why don't you answer?"

"Why, pshaw, Judge. Him an' me married gals out of the same family—sisters, you might say."

"Well, do you know him?"

"Him?"

"Can't you understand plain English? Do you know this man?"

"That'n?"

"Of course, you blockhead. Do you know him?"

"Know him? Why, bless your old heart, Judge, he's got a pup, now that I give him more'n five year ago, an' you never see such a dog in all your born days as that'n turned out to be. Why, pshaw, Judge; you couldn't find nothin like him with hide an' hair in seven counties; but the way I come to git him was just one of the funniest blamed things you ever heerd tell of. You see the way of it was this—uh?"

"Hold on! Stop right there! We don't want any dog stories just now. Do you know him?"

"Who?"

"Why, this man."

"Uh? Why, I 'lowed you meant the dog. Well, if I'd knowed the pup half as well as I did him you can bet your socks he wouldn't a never got him, Judge; that's what he wouldn't. Why, dog-gone it all, Judge, that dog was half pinter, an—uh?"

"Stop this sawing around and answer the question, or you'll be committed."

"Uh?"

"I say you'll be committed for contempt."

"For what?"

"For contempt."

"What's that?"

"Will you answer the question?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, why don't you do it?"

"Do what?"

"Answer the question."

"What question?"

"The one I asked you."

"Which'n?"

"Do you know the man?"

"What man?"

"The prisoner at the bar."

"I wonder now if you mean Bill Gimps?"

"Certainly. Do you know him?"

"Didn't I say we both married into the same family?"

"Yes; but do—you—know—him?"

"Well, now, see here, Judge. Don't you 'low I'd be like to know my own brother-in-law?"

"Will you answer the question?"

"What question?"

"Do you know Bill Gimps?"

"Didn't I say I give him a pup five year ago."

"Yes; but do you know him?"

"Well, now, see here, Judge; I claim to be free born an' about half white, an' do you 'spose I wouldn't have any more sense than to fool away a dog on a man I didn't know? No, sir-ee; I never get so blumed flush with dogs as to waste 'em like that. Know him? Of course I do; better'n I do the size of my own feet or my ole woman's voice, and I could 'v told you so long ago, if you'd only ast me. Know him at the bar? Why, blast it all, Judge, that's where I fust got acquainted with him, by his standin' treat, an' I never knowed a man, Judge, that was more certain to turn jack right where it was needed in a game of seven-up than him. You can go your pile on him for that every time, and never get left. Yes, sir; I'd know Bill Gimps anywhere; even in meetin', though I don't s'pose I could ever make out how he got there. Know him? Yes-sir-ee-bob. I know him as well as I do when dinner time comes. Is that strong enough, Judge; or do you want me to projuce his note to show how much more I know him? I can do it if sich is law."

"That will do."

"Uh?"

"You may step down."

"Down where?"

"Down stairs, you blockhead."—Chicago Ledger.

He Took His Last Drop.

I hear you have bought a lot and are going to build a house. Is that so?" asked Sanderson as Murphy came into the grocery.

"Yes, I'm tired of paying rent, I'm going to have a home of my own. How much are cabbages worth now?" replied Murphy.

"Eights cents; who's going to build it?"

"I thought I'd like Wells to build it, but he drinks so like a fish a man can't depend on him."

"But he's quit drinking."

"Is that so?"

"Yes, took his last drop."

"Well, I'm glad to hear that."

"Yes, he dropped from a scaffold and broke his neck. Yes, he's quit drinking."—Brooklyn Times.

MR. FRED B. MARVIN, in writing of the rights of animals, after describing the terrible slaughter of birds to supply the demands of fashion, says: "It is sinful intentionally to deprive an animal of life without sufficient and suitable reason. It is a great mystery, this animal world, by which we are surrounded and of which we are a part. For anything we know to the contrary, the beasts of the field, the birds of the air and the fishes of the sea have within them a deathless principle answering to the soul in man. Lamartine reverently epitomizes the great mystery in two lines:

'My dog! the difference between thee and me Knows only our Creator.'"

—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Everybody's Air-Brake.

"Yes, sah," said Uncle Zach, "I'se watched it forty years an' it's as I sez: De fust of May an' Chrismas day of de same year allers comes on de same week day."

Further conversation proved Uncle Zach a most incredulous person. Chancing to mention Dr. Carver's feat of breaking glass balls with a rifle, he said:

"I heerd 'bout dat sheotin' and knowed right off it wasn't squar'; dat was a Yankee trick, boss, sho's you born."

"What was the trick?"

"Dar wuz loadstone put into de glass balls an' likewise onto de bullets; so when de bullet fly onten the gun, it an' the ball jes drawed tergedder, which, in course, broke de glass—dat's the trick."

Later, Uncle Zach observed a rope running along the side of the car.

"Boss, what's dat line fur?"

"To apply the air-brake in case of accident." Then we had further to explain how the force of the brake was obtained, to which Uncle Zach responded:

"Look a here, boss, you shely don't 'spect me to b'lieve dat foolishness? Why, de biggest harricane whatever blowed couldn't stop dis train, runin' forty mile a hour. An' you think I gwine to b'leive a little pipe full of wind under de kyars can do it? No, sah-ree!"

There are a great many Uncle Zachs who judge everything simply by appearances. The air-brake does not seem to be a very powerful thing, but power and efficiency are not necessarily equivalent to bigness and pretense.

Philip Beers, Esq., who resides at the United States Hotel, New York City, and is engaged in raising subscriptions for the New York World Bartholdi pedestal fund, was once upbraided by a distinguished relative who was a physician, for commending in such enthusiastic terms a remedy that cured him of Bright's disease eight years ago. He said: "Sir, has the medical profession, with all its power and experience of thousands of years, anything that can cure this terrible disorder?' No, no, that is true; there is no mistake about it but that Warner's safe cure is really a wonderfully effective preparation. That remedy is an 'air-brake' that every man can apply, and this fact explains why it has saved so many hundreds of thousands of lives.—Copyrighted. Used by permission of American Rural Home.

The Two Socialists.

A Tramp who had stolen a ten-dollar bill from a Farm House was so Vigorously Pursued by the Victim that he was Finally Overhauled.

"Ah! you Thief!" shouted the Farmer, "but you Deserve a year in Prison!"

"Thief! I am no Thief."

"But you stole my money!"

"I also Deny that. I only took what Belonged to me. As a Socialist you Preach that there should be an Equal Division of Wealth. As a Socialist I divided your Pile and took only my Half."

Moral—The Farmer Socialist let the Fellow go, of course—only he didn't.—Detroit Free Press.

"Mothers Should Note This."

Under this caption an old physician writes to a Cincinnati medical journal, that in view of the fact that people living at a distance from cities are frequently obliged to resort to cough mixtures already put up for use, they should provide themselves with only such remedies as are known to be free from opiates, poisons, and narcotics; thus avoiding not only danger but fatal results. He recommends the recently discovered Red Star Cough Cure which analyses and tests by various Boards of Health proved to be purely vegetable as well as prompt, effective and entirely harmless.

A Mean Insinuation.

"You have not put down where you came from," remarked an Austin hotel clerk to a newly arrived stranger, who had registered himself and wife.

"That's so, and I don't propose to put down where we came from," replied the stranger, who was on his bridal tour.

"What is the reason you don't register the name of the place you live at?" asked the clerk.

"Because, if I put down that we are from Chicago, everybody will think that we are not married."

The clerk smiled incredulously, and dropped the subject.—Texas Siftings.

A Necessity of Health.

It is a prime necessity of health that the action of the bowels should be kept regular. But the way to overcome a temporary fit of constipation, or to remedy chronic costiveness, is not to deluge the stomach and drench the bowels with purgatives of violent or painful action. The happy medium between an inoperative and violent cathartic is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which acts just sufficiently upon the bowels to relax them without pain, and which being a wholesome tonic, as well as aperient, has the effect of strengthening both them and the stomach, and promoting the well-being of the whole internal economy. The removal of bile from the blood, increased activity of the liver, usually dormant in cases of costiveness, and sound digestion follow the use of this beneficent medicine, as thorough and genial in its effects as it is safe and pure in composition. Rheumatism, fever and ague, kidney troubles, and debility are also remedied by it.

The Force of Habit.

"I'll never go out with Charley Briggs again as long as I live, the insulting, mean thing. That's just what he is," sputtered a Lee avenue girl, as she rushed into the house.

"Why, how did he insult you?" queried her brother. "I'll punch his measly head for him."

"Oh, he asked me into the drug store to have soda, and when we got it he blew over the top of his glass and said, 'Here's the hair all off your head.' The idea!"

"Force of habit," muttered the brother, as he turned on his heel and smiled.—Brooklyn Times.

The Poor Little Ones.

We often see children with red eruptions on face and hands, rough, scaly skin, and often sores on the head. These things indicate a depraved condition of the blood. In the growing period children have need of pure blood by which to build up strong and healthy bodies. If Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is given, the blood is purged of its bad elements, and the child's development will be healthy, and as it should be. Scrofulous affections, rickets, fever-sores, hip-joint disease, or other grave maladies and suffering are sure to result from neglect and lack of proper attention to such cases.

TELEGRAPH messengers never make haste to get rich.

MILD, soothing, and healing is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

A Lovely Complexion.

"What a lovely complexion!" we often hear persons say. "I wonder what she does for it?" In every case the purity and real loveliness of the complexion depends upon the blood. Those who have sallow, blotchy faces may make their skin smooth and healthy by taking enough of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" to drive out the humors lurking in the system.

SPECIAL taxes are levied upon bachelors in France, and they pay it cheerfully; nary a kick.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot; 600 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cabs, stage, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union than at any first-class hotel in the city.

Interesting to Travelers.

It will be interesting to people contemplating a trip to the South to learn of the vast improvements in time and accommodations that have been rendered possible by the recent completion of a remarkably long bridge over the Ohio River at Henderson, Ky., a point ten miles below Evansville, Ind.

The length of the bridge proper is 3,686 feet, the span over the channel of the river is 525 feet, the longest span of truss bridge in the world. The bridge is reached by three and one-half miles of solid substantial trestle-work on the Indiana side.

With this bridge completed, there is an unbroken, rail line between Chicago and Nashville, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Jacksonville, Florida, and other Southeastern cities over the shortest existing route, which fact was immediately taken advantage of by the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad (Danville Route) and its Southern connections, to put on a fast train from Chicago to Nashville, and give to the North and South travel some of the luxuries in fast traveling and excellent accommodations which heretofore have been almost wholly monopolized by the East and West lines.

The first through train, which left Chicago at 3:45 Sunday afternoon, July 19, on the new Chicago and Nashville fast line, arrived in Nashville at 7:45 on Monday morning, having accomplished the distance between the two cities in the hitherto unprecedented time of sixteen hours. The new train was the first through passenger train from Chicago to cross the mammoth bridge over the Ohio at Henderson, and as such marks an epoch in Southern traffic whose importance was testified by the interest shown all along the line.

This train carries the popular Palace Buffet Sleeping Cars; it leaves Chicago at 3:45 p. m. daily, and arrives at Nashville at 7:45 a. m., connecting with the morning trains out of Nashville in all directions, enabling passengers to reach Chattanooga in the early afternoon; Atlanta and Montgomery early in the evening, and other Southern and Southeastern points in some instances one-half day ahead of, and in from three to ten hours less time than by any other line.

Travelers should make a note of this important route, and when going South remember the Chicago and Eastern Illinois.

We Caution All Against Them.

The unprecedented success and merit of Ely's Cream Balm—a real cure for catarrh, hay fever, and cold in the head—has induced many adventurers to place catarrh medicines bearing some resemblance in appearance, style, or name upon the market, in order to trade upon the reputation of Ely's Cream Balm. Many in your immediate locality will testify in highest commendation of it. Don't be deceived. Buy only Ely's Cream Balm. A particle is applied into each nostril; no pain; agreeable to use. Price fifty cents; of druggists.

"Put Up" at the Gault House.

The business man or tourist will find first-class accommodations at the low price of $2 and $2.50 per day at the Gault House, Chicago, corner Clinton and Madison streets. This far-famed hotel is located in the center of the city; only one block from the Union Depot. Elevator; all appointments first-class.

FROM THE

ALBANY, N.Y., "JOURNAL."

It is said "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country."

The many expressions of gratitude received by Dr. DAVID KENNEDY from persons in his own vicinity who have received great and lasting benefit from his "FAVORITE REMEDY" proves that the above does not prove infallible. We learn that more of this medicine is sold in this city than of any other similar preparation. We readily recognize the truth of this statement, and now call to mind many of our prominent citizens who have been cured of various complaints by this medicine, and of whose cases we have made mention in this paper from time to time.

The "FAVORITE REMEDY" is used to a great extent in Charitable and Reform Institutions, where the inmates suffer so frequently from Kidney and Liver Complaints, also disorders arising from an impure state of the blood.

Mrs. M. L. Dare, Matron of the House of Shelter, Albany, N. Y., informs us that this medicine is used in that institution with excellent results, and that she has used it personally for Indigestion and Biliousness with great satisfaction. Mrs. Dare is so well and favorably known in connection with the above institution that we could not cite more excellent authority.

The Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Detroit, Mich., willingly add their testimony to the efficacy of the "FAVORITE REMEDY" in cases that have come under their personal observation.

To the thousands who have used Dr. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" it is unnecessary to say a word in its praise. To those, however, who have never used it, it is perfectly safe to commend the medicine as one of the very best proprietary articles now before the public. Dr. DAVID KENNEDY, the proprietor, is one of the most prominent and highly respected residents of Rondout, where the "FAVORITE REMEDY" is manufactured. Dr. KENNEDY has for many years been known as a reputable practicing physician of high standing, and the claims which he makes in favor of his medicine are, therefore, entitled to consideration. "FAVORITE REMEDY" has gained a widespread reputation and the fact that its sale increases yearly is evidence that it meets with popular favor.

PLAIN COLD WATER.

At an annual dinner of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, instead of such songs as "The Glasses Sparkle on the Board," or, "Willie Brewed a Peck o' Malt," the following ditty was sung:

AIR—"Love's Young Dream."

Oh! the days are gone when Claret bright
Inspired my strain,
When I sang on every festive night
About Champagne,
Prime "Thirty-one,"
In floods may pour,
And glasses gaily clatter,
But there's nothing half so safe to drink
As plain cold water.

Though the bard may make a greater noise
Over his wine,
When with other bacchanalian boys
He chances to dine;
Yet if he wake
With a headache,
And wonders what's the matter,
He learns there's naught so safe to drink
As plain cold water.

There's Dr. Hassall, he proclaims
That water's full
Of curious brutes with curious names,
In every pool.
Now you will see
That this must be
A most important matter;
For it's clear there's meat as well as drink
In plain cold water.

Professor Clark of Aberdeen
Says chalk is there,
And Monsieur Chatin, Iodine
Finds everywhere.
If this be true
It's clear to you
It's just so much the better,
For there's meat and drink and physic, too,
In plain cold water.

So if your health you would keep good,
With wine have done,
And like that wise man, with your food
Drink water alone.
About he drives,
And well he thrives,
And every day grows fatter,
Which shows that folk can live quite well
On plain cold water.

Immoral Literature.

A people's standard of intelligence and morality is invariably regulated by the standard of their literature. If of a low, trifling, immoral type, such will be the character of the people among whom it circulates. All history, experience and observation demonstrates this fact. It is to be found in the rise and fall of men and parties, nations and dynasties. Deprive a people of their literature and they degenerate into barbarism. Limit them to immoral literature, and debauchery and crime are sure to overtake them sooner or later.

It costs more to feed a people on sound philosophy draped in proper language, than it does to surfeit them with cheap romance adorned in rags and polluted with filth. But another objector replies that the public taste requires such literature, and the papers would not sell without it. If this be true, it simply proves that the public taste is perverted and public reform is seriously demanded. The pernicious influence of this standard literature may not be so readily detected in the adult population as among the youth. In the one case character is formed and habits are fixed, while in the other character is in process of formation and habits may be changed and improved. If the family table or library is loaded with indecent literature as Peck's Sun, the New York Ledger, the Day's Doings, the Police Gazette, and Buffalo Bill sensational trash, the youth of the country are not to be blamed if they grow up to be desperadoes and land in the penitentiary or on the gallows. Censure belongs not to the wrong doers, but to the parents or guardians who placed such temptations in their way. There is a prevailing tendency to ignore the wholesome restraints which characterized the culture of children at an earlier period in our history, and the increase of crime in our land is largely attributable to this neglect in the education of children. No feature of domestic discipline should be more scrupulously guarded than that which limits the selection of family literature to such papers and books as produce a sound, healthy, moral, social and political influence on the youth.—[Iowa Review.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Memorial Services by Baxter Post, G. A. R.

The program previously announced for last Saturday's exercises was carried out except that the exercises were held in the grove on Dixon Avenue instead of at the park.

The address of Maj. E. H. Green consisted of a brief biography of Gen. Grant, dwelling on those characteristics which endeared him to every old soldier.

Resolutions of respect were read, as adopted by the post, and appropriate music by the band and a choir was interspersed throughout the exercises.

Services at the M. E. Church.

Sunday evening memorial services were held at the M. E. church, conducted by Rev. J. T. Iddings, the principal address being personal reminiscences by Judge H. A. Clover, of St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Clover had known Gen. Grant during the days of his obscurity from public affairs, as well as during later years, and related numerous incidents illustrating Grant's integrity of purpose and persistent following of a line of work when once settled upon.

Dr. Stone, of Kalamazoo, followed Mr. Clover with a few interesting remarks.

Mr. Iddings followed with a brief discourse, touching Grant's Christian character, and the moral influence of his life upon Christian people generally.

The services included appropriate music by the choir.

The Decorations.

We cannot mention in detail the evidences of respect for the dead, as shown in the decorations. Most of the business houses on Bridge street and numerous private residences observed the custom, as well as both resorts. Some of them were quite elaborate, while others consisted of a simple rosette over the door.

In the M. E. Church a large crayon picture of Gen. Grant, the work of Al. Washburn, was placed on the wall behind the pulpit, over which were two large bunting flags appropriately draped. There were also festoons of black and white cloth, from lamps and projecting points, as well as appropriate drapings of pulpit and furniture.

Resolutions of Thanks.

At a regular meeting of Baxter Post, No 119, G. A. R., on motion, it was Resolved, That the thanks of this Post are due and are hereby tendered to the clergy, the firemen's band, the choir, the village council and to all who so kindly assisted in carrying out our program on the occasion of the memorial services held in honor of our deceased comrade and chief commander, Ulysses S. Grant, and that the JOURNAL and Sentinel be the medium through which our thanks be publicly conveyed.

Post Hall, Aug. 10, 1885.

Resolutions by the Orangemen.

At a meeting of the representatives of Grand Traverse L. O. district No 17, held at Barnard, Aug. 8th, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

General Grant, the nation's hero and benefactor, has passed away, and left a nation of mourners. There are none so small as to refuse to revere once his memory. Not only the United States feel the great loss, but world-wide humanity throbs in unison. He received from all nations such honors as no man of any nation or age ever received, yet he returned to his native land only proud of being an American. Whether receiving the shells of the enemy, refusing the sword of the vanquished, or bearing the plaudits of the world, he was the same quiet, calm, self-possessed, noble character on all occasions. He possessed an abundance of that heaven-born gift, charity, and dispensed it freely on all occasions. His generosity alone would secure his fame while the republic endures.

Resolved, That Mrs. Grant and family have our sympathy in their affliction.

Resolutions on the Death of A. F. Dreyer.

HEADQUARTERS BAXTER POST, No. 119, G. A. R.
Charlevoix, Mich., Aug. 10, 1885.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Supreme Grand Commander to call from our Post our comrade, Agustus F. Dreyer, who departed this life on the 20th day of June, A. D. 1885; and,

WHEREAS, Although gone from our midst, he is not forgotten by those with whom he associated during the hours of the rebellion, and we will ever think of him and cherish his memory even though our country may have forgotten him as one of her defenders, and may he be remembered as one whose example is worthy of being followed; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of comrade Dreyer, our Post has lost a worthy comrade, his wife a kind and tender husband, and the community an upright, honorable and useful citizen.

Resolved, That as members of Baxter Post, we offer our tender sympathy to the bereaved widow and friends of our deceased comrade and that the foregoing preamble and resolutions be entered upon the records of this Post and a copy thereof be transmitted by the adjutant, to the widow of our deceased comrade.

A Narrow Escape.

Last Saturday morning a party of ladies and gentlemen were sailing on Round Lake, and the wind blew in gusts so that the boat would not be have itself under their management. The ladies were put ashore, and the gentlemen tried it again; when about the middle of the lake, she "took a header downward," and went to the bottom. The gentlemen being good swimmers, were able to keep to the top of the water until boats could reach them.

The boat has since been raised.

We understand that several hundred pounds of stone ballast was used, which was the cause of the boat sinking so quick. It has been suggested that this kind of ballast is used altogether too much for the public safety. A substitute of some kind should be used that can be easily thrown out, or that will float when put into the water. Water in tight casks has been used to advantage in some cases.

Acknowledgements.

The Congregational Church and Society wish to make a public acknowledgement of the kindness of their friends from the resorts for their generous contributions on Sunday morning last. Also to the friends of the Chicago Club house for the benefit on Monday evening.

The Sunday morning collection amounted to $147.13, and the benefit Monday evening $73.00, making $220.13 in all. This relieves the present embarrasment.

A thousand thanks for the generous help, good friends. May kind Providence bless you and all your ways, with peace and plenty, and open up new opportunities for perfecting the noble traits shown in these, your generous acts.

R. W. KANE,
Clerk Congregational Society.

A Pleasant Entertainment.

On Monday evening about 200 people gathered at the Chicago Club house to enjoy a musical and literary feast which had been prepared by the people of that popular resort, to be given as a benefit for the Congregational church. The exercises consisted of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, charades, etc., and were very interesting, continuing until a late hour. The proceeds of the evening were sufficient to balance the account of the pastor's salary, with something over, for all of which the church and society should ever hold the Chicago people in grateful remembrance.

The Charlevoix polo club went to Petoskey to play, last night.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

L. D. Munger, of Detroit, at Boston beat the bicycle road record of 207½ miles, making 211½ miles in twenty-four hours.

It was decided in the New York Supreme Court that a band of gypsies lately brought to this country on a steamer of the Bordeaux line must be returned to France.

Five hundred boys were discharged from the Shamokin (Pa.) collieries, in obedience to a law recently passed by the Legislature of that State forbidding child labor in mines and coal-breakers.

A cyclone passed over Philadelphia, wrecking two steamers, and destroying an immense amount of property. Several lives were lost. The storm then passed to the Jersey side. In its ravages in Camden scores of dwelling houses were unroofed, and damage to business property along the river front was enormous. Crossing to Delaware it cut a swath 300 yards wide, near Smyrna, and miles of property were destroyed.

The census of Albany, N. Y., just completed, shows a population of 95,000—an increase of 6,000 since 1880.

A monument to the memory of the late Sir Moses Montefiore will be erected in Central Park by the Jews of New York. About $10,000 has already been subscribed to the fund.

Seven persons are known to have been killed and about one hundred wounded by the tornado at Philadelphia and Camden, and the total loss is estimated at $500,000.

The assessed valuation of real and personal property in Boston for 1885 is $685,401,600, a gain of $2,718,000 over last year. The tax levy is $17,80 per thousand, as against $15 in 1884.

Pleuro-pneumonia is reported in a herd of sixty thoroughbred Holstein cattle on Staten Island, N. Y. The Government Commissioner will take measures to quarantine the herd.

WESTERN.

A postoffice official attempted to carry mail matter for Mexico and Central America on a Pacific Mail steamer as extra baggage, and was refused. The mail was subsequently sent overland, and the point is being made that the steamer had no right to discriminate as it did as a common carrier, and there may be a hereafter.

Fears are entertained in Utah of a general uprising among the Indians of the Territory, who, it is claimed, are being incited to mischief by Mormon emissaries. Gen. Howard has left Omaha for the West to investigate the situation.

Chicago was visited by a rain storm of unprecedented violence, the fall in eighteen hours reaching 7.35 inches, which was in excess of the total rainfall for any month of 1884. Many basements in the business quarter, containing valuable stocks of merchandise, were flooded, the losses aggregating an enormous sum. In the outlying districts extensive areas were submerged, and thousands of dollars' worth of property destroyed.

A soldiers' monument erected by the citizens of Sandusky County, Ohio, was unveiled at Fremont, with imposing ceremonies. Addresses were made by a number of prominent men.

Census returns from the leading towns of Wisconsin show a uniform and gratifying percentage of gain in population.

The net earnings of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad for the six months ended July 1 were $3,114,928, an increase over the net earnings of the corresponding period of 1884 of $121,011.

At Minneapolis the suit of Col. William King against Philo Remington, of New York, involving $3,000,000 worth of property, was decided in favor of the plaintiff. An appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

An election held in the Cherokee Nation for members of the Legislature, resulted in a choice of an equal number by the "Downing" and "National" parties, the "Independents" holding the balance of power.

At Palmyra, Ohio, Richard Jones, a farm laborer, committed suicide, after fatally shooting Mrs. Charles Merwin, his employer's wife, who was endeavoring to dissuade him from self-destruction. Jones had made two previous attempts upon his own life, both of which had been thwarted by Mrs. Merwin.

The Executive Committee of the Foreign Missionary Board of the African M. E. Church met at Richmond, Ind. Bishop Shorter presided. The Rev. J. H. Buehner was appointed to work at Port au Prince, and the Rev. J. H. Mays to San Domingo.

Judge Field, in the United States Court at San Francisco, issued an order directing the Marshal of the Court to disarm Miss Hill, who had threatened to kill ex-Senator Stewart, one of Sharon's counsel, and keep her disarmed while in attendance on court.

SOUTHERN.

During the progress of a ball at Rogersville, Tenn., a revolver dropped from the pocket of a young man and was discharged, the bullet passing through the heart of Miss Martha Brown, a beautiful girl, killing her instantly.

Extensive deposits of bituminous coal have been discovered in the vicinity of Lampasas, Texas.

An old man named James Hall, of Teely County, Georgia, caught his foot while climbing a fence and remained hanging four days with his head downward before he was discovered. He is dying.

Caterpillars and boll-worms are ravaging the cotton fields in several counties of South Carolina.

Henry Vanderfeight leaped from the Suspension Bridge across the Cumberland River at Nashville, Tenn., striking the water, 110 feet below, with terrific force. He is alive, and will probably recover from his injuries.

At New Orleans, Boyd Abadie, colored, killed Lizzie Laundry, his quadroon mistress, with a razor, and then cut his own throat. Thirteen gashes were found on the body of the woman.

WASHINGTON.

Attorney General Garland has reached the conclusion that the cattle leases in the Indian Territory are illegal and has so informed the President.

It is now believed at Washington that an arrangement will be made with John Roache's assignees, by virtue of which the Dolphin will be accepted by the Government, and will go to sea.

The report of the Naval Advisory Board on the Steamer Dolphin has been made public, as has also the report of the committee appointed to specially examine the vessel. The Board holds that the boat is a subject for congratulation rather than condemnation, but the special examiners do not think so, neither does Secretary Whitney.

The reorganization of the consular service will be completed about January next. About two hundred posts remain to be filled.

Secretary Lamar and Attorney General Garland will remain in Washington during the President's absence. The other members of the Cabinet will take a vacation.

President Cleveland notified a large delegation of gentlemen who called on him at the White House that he would not modify his recent order for the removal of the cattle from the leased lands in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservations.

POLITICAL.

The Nebraska Republican State Central Committee have fixed Oct. 14 as the date for holding the State Convention at Lincoln.

Charges of offensive partisanship have been filed against United States Marshal Russell and United States Attorney Waters, of Arkansas. The appointment of W. C. Jones as United States Marshal for Kansas is attributed in that State to the influence of ex-Gov. Glick, and excites considerable unfavorable criticism.

The Civil-Service Commission submitted a report of its investigation of the charges against Postmaster Jones, of Indianapolis, to the President. The commission acquits the accused official of violations of the civil-service act or rules, but intimates that he was indiscreet in his utterances before he understood the purport of the law as fully as he does now.

The following Federal appointments were made by the President during the week:

To be Collectors of Internal Revenue—Andrew Welch, for the Second District of Illinois; Maurice Kelley, for the Fourth District of Illinois; Joseph M. Marrow, for the Sixth District of Wisconsin.

Consuls—Alexander Shipley, of New York, to be United States Consul at Auckland; J. L. McCaskill, of Mississippi, at Dublin; Joseph Falkenbach, of Ohio, at Barmen; James Wheelan, of New York, at Fort Erie, Canada; Jasper Smith, of the District of Columbia, at Newcastle, England.

Postmasters—A. E. Buddeck, at Montrose, Col.; E. V. Wharton, at Yates Center, Kan.; Albert O. Bristol, at Pasadena, Cal.; William J. Van Sklver, at Beverly, N. J.; George A. Paxton, at Valentine, Neb.; Max J. Alwens, at Belleville, Kan.; Mrs. M. E. Pender, Tarborough, N. C. vice W. P. Williamson, suspended; Docteur L. Lagrange, Port Richmond, N. Y., vice T. J. Butler, suspended; Juliette M. Jones, Cambridge City, Md., vice P. C. Mosbaugh, suspended; Frederick A. Schilley, Orangeburgh Court House, S. C., vice A. Webster, suspended; Henry G. Ashmead, Chester, Pa., vice John A. Wallace, suspended; William A. Walker, Albuquerque, New Mexico, vice Thomas Hughes, removed; John B. Mitchell, New Albany, Ind., vice M. L. Hurley, suspended; George M. Ufford, Wa Keeney, Kan., vice J. M. Millard, resigned; Samuel J. Hess, Fredonia, Kan., vice Miles T. Cantwell, suspended; Robert G. McBride, Thibodeaux, La., vice Gus Bondreau, suspended; Thomas J. Watt, Columbus, Ga., vice T. C. Sturgis, suspended; William T. Hall, Beloit, Wis., vice Chalmers Ingersoll, suspended; W. R. Austin, Union City, Tenn., vice William P. Richard, suspended; Walter H. Bartley, Antigo, Wis., vice Henry Smith, suspended; Fayette Johnston, Ludington, Mich., vice H. F. Alexander, not commissioned.

The fourth annual meeting of the National League Civil Service Association convened at Newport, R. I. Seventy-five members were present from all parts of the country. George William Curtis, the President, delivered an address.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The jury in the case of Riel, leader of the Northwest Territory rebellion, returned a verdict finding him guilty of treason. A dispatch from Winnipeg says: "The jury retired at 2:15 p. m. At 3:15 there was a murmur in the court, and it was whispered that the jury had agreed. All was bustle and excitement. Riel prayed fervently, kneeling in his box, and looked unmoved as the jury entered. A verdict of guilty was rendered. Francis Cosgrove, foreman, crying like a child, announced that he was asked by his fellow-jurors to recommend the prisoner to the mercy of the court. The Judge said the recommendation would be considered. Riel was then sentenced to be hanged Sept. 18 at Regina. Judge Richardson said he could hold out no prospect of a reprieve or interference by her Majesty. Riel took the result coolly."

A dispatch from Regina, Northwest Territory, says: Gov. Dewdney has received a dispatch stating that eight whites had been butchered by marauding Indians thirty-eight miles south of Maple Creek, in the Cypress Hills. It is believed that the Indians came on the victims by stealth, and when a favorable opportunity presented itself pounced upon them. Some of the attacked escaped by swimming and wading across the narrow lake.

The following telegraphic correspondence passed between Fitz Hugh Lee and General Hancock:

GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, N. Y., Aug. 3.

General Fitz Hugh Lee, Alexandria, Va.:

Would it be agreeable to you to be appointed as aid on the occasion of the ceremonies in connection with the obsequies of General Grant? If it would, your will be so announced. Please reply by telegraph.

W. S. HANCOCK, Major General.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Aug. 3.

To Gen. W. S. Hancock, Mount MacGregor, N. Y.:

Your telegram received. I accept the position, because by so doing I can testify my respect for the memory of a great soldier, and thus return, as far as I can, the generous feelings he has expressed toward the soldiers of the South. FITZ HUGH LEE.

The steamer C. O. Kelly was burned to the water's edge at Lower Town Wharf, Pembroke, Ontario. Four sailors were burned to death.

The Spiritualists of the United States held their sixth annual camp-meeting at Cassadaga Lake, Chautauqua County, N. Y.

It is announced that the Pacific Mail Company will withdraw its Australian steamers Nov. 1.

A fire which broke out in a glucose factory at Toronto proved the most destructive in the history of the city, involving the loss of two lives and over $1,000,000 worth of property. More than a score of steamers moored at their docks were burned to the water's edge. The Opera House block, at Bowling Green, Mo., burned, with a loss of $28,000.

Thirty half-breeds concerned in the Riel rebellion entered pleas of guilty to treason-felony at Regina. Two of the prisoners were discharged, and sentence on the others deferred for eight days. Riel has written to the United States Consul at Winnipeg, asking the appointment of an international commission to determine his sanity. Petitions for his pardon are being numerously signed by the French-Canadians, who are raising a fund to enable him to take an appeal. The condemnation of Riel is utterly denounced by French-Canadians generally, and the Government and the Judge who tried the case are severely criticised.

The United States Consul at Vera Cruz says the yellow fever is fast increasing at that place.

The fire losses in the United States and Canada during the first seven months of 1885 aggregated $30,000,000, the total for July having been about $5,000,000.

John Lohman, a young American, who boarded the steamer Werra, at Bremen, just before her departure for New York, was caught in the act of robbing the purser's safe, while at sea, of diamonds valued at $12,000. The officer had been chloroformed. Lohman will be sent back to Germany.

The impression in official circles at Ottawa is that Riel will suffer the death penalty, notwithstanding the efforts of the French-Canadians in his behalf.

FOREIGN.

Dysentery and fever are causing frightful mortality among the French troops in Tonquin.

An earthquake shock in Tashkend, Asiatic Russia, ruined several cities. In Belyoodsk a church was shaken to fragments while it was crowded with worshipers, a large number of whom were killed.

The English Parliamentary elections will be held in the third week of November. Mr. Gladstone, if his health permits, will take the stump in Midlothian in October.

A leader in the North German Gazette accusing France of trying to stir up a war with Germany has produced a profound sensation in Paris.

Several cases of cholera are reported in the Paris hospitals, but the authorities and newspapers refrain from mentioning the fact. It is officially admitted that Marseilles is stricken with the plague, and twenty-two deaths were reported in twelve hours. A panic prevails.

Speaking in the English House of Commons, Mr. Parnell congratulated the Conservatives upon their attempts to deal in a satisfactory way with the Irish land question. A motion made by Labouchere, Radical, that the appropriation bill be rejected until the Government explains its Egyptian policy, was negatived. In the course of the debate, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach declared that the Government policy was to "put Egypt on a solid footing with regard to external defense, finance, and internal administration," but declined to make a statement on the question of evacuating that country.

It is thought that the recent article in the North German Gazette attacking France was published as a preliminary to forcing a large increase in the military budget. The Rector of the University of Berlin, at a celebration in honor of Emperor William, gave the toast: "Long Live Peace. Should, however, the arrogance of our neighbors pass from daring words into daring deeds, they will learn that the old spirit still lives."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

A large crowd assembled from Appomattox Court House, Virginia, and draped in mourning the house in which Gens. Grant and Lee signed the terms of surrender in 1865. The draping will remain thirty days out of respect to Gen. Grant.

A slight fire, caused by an explosion of gasoline, occurred in a provision store in Germantown, Pa. Four persons were burned by the exploding oil, and three of them have since died. The fourth can scarcely recover.

There are no prospects of an early termination of the civil war in Colombia. The leaders of the insurgents are preparing to unite forces with a view to active operations.

The schooner James A. Garfield, twenty-six days from the Arctic Ocean, brought news to San Francisco that the bark Napoleon, of New Bedford, was crushed in the ice and twenty-two lives lost.

The panic caused by the rapid spread of cholera in Spain is increasing, entire villages having been deserted by their inhabitants.

It is stated at Dublin that Robert Farquharson, the defaulting manager of the Munster Bank, sailed for Spain on the night of his flight.

Lord Randolph Churchill, Secretary of State for India, introduced the Indian budget in the House of Commons last week. He announced a deficit of over £1,000,000. The late Government, not Lord Salisbury or Lord Dufferin, was to blame for this state of affairs. He condemned the Marquis of Ripon, the late Viceroy of India, for not looking ahead. The extra permanent military charge, he said, would probably reach 1200,000 yearly. He declared that economy was the only way of meeting the deficit.

A cable dispatch from Mr. Lee, Secretary of the American Legation at Vienna, has been received by the Department of State at Washington. Mr. Lee advises his superiors that the Austrian Government has positively declined to receive Mr. Kelley as United States Minister. The authorities of Austria give no reason for their action and merely say they will not receive the official. Mr. Kelley is now in Paris, where he has been for some weeks. He also has been informed of the decision of the Austrian authorities.

The census of Iowa for the year 1885, it is thought, will show a population of about 2,200,000.

A new railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Henderson, Ky., costing $1,000,000, was formally opened to traffic last week.

Carpie Bearhead, a young member of the Creek Nation, who had committed several murders, was executed at Eufaula, Indian Territory, by being shot to death while seated on his coffin.

About four hundred men attempted to shut down by force the mill of Rust Brothers & Co., at East Saginaw, Mich., but were put to flight by the police.

Reports from correspondents of a St. Louis milling firm at over three hundred points indicate the present condition of the wheat crop in the States named as compared with 1884 to be—Missouri 125 per cent., Illinois 32½ per cent., Indiana 55 per cent., Kansas 81 per cent. The prospects for bountiful harvests in Western Ontario were never more promising.

William Kearney, an insane man, who lives near Humboldt, Neb., was arrested at Kansas City while on his way to Washington to kill President Cleveland. He had a revolver, and was well supplied with money.

Washington telegram: "The committee appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the condition of the coast survey has submitted its report, which shows the existence of many scandalous abuses in that bureau, for which Prof. Hilgard, the recent Superintendent, is held largely responsible. The committee deprecates the reinstatement of any of the suspended officials in their former positions."

Some of the young men would have graduated this year, and an effort will be made with the faculty to have that body reconsider its determination and reinstate the boys, as this was their first offense.

—The suggestion that the house in which General, then Lieutenant, Grant lived when in this city should be preserved is a good one. Great value is attached to places associated with all of Washington's movements and residences. The same is true of Napoleon and other heroes. Grant's birthplace, if it is possible to preserve it, will some day be of extraordinary interest, as will every spot where he lived or stayed even for a short time. His house in Detroit is bereft of some antiquarian value by its occupation of a different site from that it had when he lived in it. But notwithstanding this it will attract great attention in years to come, and well deserves care and preservation. As an interesting feature of the city itself which would attract visitors and travelers, it might well be worth the while of the city to take care of it. It is hard to overestimate its importance twenty-five and fifty years hence when Grant is an heroic memory.—Free Press.

U. S. GRANT.

The Remains of the Old Commander Leave Mount MacGregor Amid the Roar of Guns.

A Last Feeling Tribute from Dr. Newman, the Dead Hero's Favorite Pastor.

Every Town and Hamlet Along the Route Wearing the Habiliments of Woe.

Maj. Gen. W. S. Hancock arrived at Mount MacGregor on Tuesday morning, the 4th inst., and at once assumed charge of the remains of the nation's dead hero. At ten o'clock a. m. of that day services were held at the cottage in the presence of over a thousand persons. The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Newman, and occupied about an hour and a half in delivery. The impressive funeral services, and the sad journey by rail to the New York capital, are thus described by the Associated Press agent:

On the mountain brow by the eastern lookout a gun boomed sullenly at 4 o'clock this morning. The shock of the reverberations was yet on the heavy air when a second report shook the earth and startled the birds in the trees. The artillery-men had begun firing thirteen guns to mark the sunrise of Gen. Grant's last day upon the mountain. In quick succession—not at short intervals the guns were fired. The soldiers received orders to break up camp, and in less than twenty minutes all the tents had disappeared from among the trees, and were packed away in boxes ready for shipment.

Down on the mountain side at 5:45 o'clock a bugle rang out on the still air. It was the assembly call for the trumpeters. Fifteen minutes later the buglers of the four companies of troops were sounding the reveille.

The family at the cottage were astir as the morning touched 8 o'clock, and correspondents and guests were moving at the hotel. The mountain train at 9 o'clock had begun bringing up people, and every hour thereafter, the little engine drew up at the depot. The funeral car to carry the remains from the mountain to Saratoga came up early and lay waiting its burden.

At 8:20 o'clock the doors of the Grant cottage had been thrown open, and a stream of visitors poured in steadily for over an hour. About 9 o'clock the head of a long line of buggies, wagons, omnibusses, and various kinds of vehicles appeared, climbing up the steep incline near the eastern outlook, and soon the area in the vicinity of the cottage was thronged with horses and wagons and farmers with their wives and families. At 9:30 o'clock a train of two cars brought Gen. Hancock and a number of distinguished visitors. The two companies of regulars were drawn up to receive them. They proceeded from the station to the cottage in the following order: Gen. Hancock and Col. Jones; Admiral Rowan and Gen. Sherman; Secretary Evarts and Gen. Rufus Ingalls; Senator Miller and Joseph W. Drexel; Gen. Hancock's staff; Miss Drexel, her aunt, and cousin, dressed in deep mourning. On the same train came the Loyal Legion, Past Assistant Paymaster General Gilbert A. Robinson, Brevet Brig. Gen. Charles A. Carleton, Paymaster George De Forest Barton, Brevet Lieut. Col. Floyd Clarkson, Brevet Lieut. Col. August McClack, Capt. Edmund Blunt.

At 10 o'clock services were held in the cottage in the presence of over a thousand persons. Camp-stools and rustic seats were provided for the ladies under the trees in the grove, before the cottage. Those who failed to secure leafy shade used their umbrellas. The ceremonies opened with the reading of psalm xc. 90, which was followed by an impressive prayer by the Rev. Bishop Harris. The hymn "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" was joined in by the whole assemblage present with fine effect. Dr. Newman then came forward and delivered a sermon on the subject of the dead General, the family sitting meantime about the remains in the parlor.

Dr. Newman for the funeral sermon took for his text the passage from Matthew xxv. 21: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." He said:

"Such, my brethren, as the eulogy that God shall pronounce upon human goodness and fidelity wherever found among the sons of men. The accidental distinctions between prince and peasant, nobleman and pauper, commanding general and private soldier, are but as the dust in the balance in His estimation of personal worth. He regards not the person of any man; He looks upon the heart. If a renowned philosopher searched an ancient city for a man, God is ever in search for a character, which in His sight outweighs the transitory, distinctions of earth and time, and out of which are the issues of life. Tell me not what a man possesses—the beauty of Absalom, the glory of Solomon, the wealth of Dives, the eloquence of Apollos, the learning of Paul, but rather tell me what he is, in his modes of thought, in his emotional being, in the trend of his passions, in the temper of his mind, in the tenor of his life, out of which come the totality of his existence and the finality of his destiny. This is the man as he is, and by it let him be judged. In the intensity of this divine light let us to day recall the character of the illustrious man whose death a nation so tenderly mourns."

In eulogizing Grant's services in war and peace Dr. Newman said:

"For his clear and certain imagination, the future loomed before him clothed with the actual as of the present. Read his military orders, and they prophesy the history of the battles he fought. He foresaw the enemy's plans as though he had assisted at their councils of war. He was one of those extraordinary men who, by the supremacy of their wills, force all obstacles to do their bidding. By the promptitude of his action, he left no time for its contravention. Times, places, and persons he comprehended with mathematical accuracy. Nothing escaped his penetration. Such was the perpetual calmness of his intellect that he could transact the most important affairs when the storm of battle was raging at its height. His soul was the home of hope, sustained and cheered by the certainties of his mind and the power of his faith. His was the mathematical genius of a great general, rather than of a great soldier. By this endowment he proved himself equal to the unexpected, and that with the precision of a seer. 'The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong,' because the unexpected happens to every man. The grandest campaigns are often defeats, the most brilliant plans are unconsummated, the most wished-for opportunities are unrealized, because baffled by the unexpected at the very moment of expected fulfillment. But he appeared great in the presence of the unforseen. Then came an inspiration as resistless as the march of a whirlwind, as when on the second night of the battle of the Wilderness, when he changed the entire front of the line of battle, and quietly said, in response to a messenger: 'If Lee is in my rear, I am in his.'

"When he rose to supreme command the nation demanded one dominant spirit, mighty to grasp strong to execute, powerful to inspire. The country was one, the rebellion was one, and the armies of the Union should be one; and the general who could mold, control, inspire an army a million strong and make them think, feel, and fight as one man was the desire of the republic. Such a one was he around whose bier a nation weeps to-day. To be everywhere present at once by his spirit and orders was in human unlimited fact. His laconic order was: 'All strike together.' He imparted to all his own spirit and all things became possible to his faith. The nation felt her mighty change, and the rebellion went down beneath the power of one master mind. Life was the logician of war. He conquered by logic. He reasoned out his victories. In all the annals of war there is no such splendid reasoning on the certainty of results. Others have conquered by the superiority of material force, but he by the superiority of mind over mind. Alas! Alas! that he can no longer think for us. Doubtless he will be best known in coming ages as the foremost soldier of the republic. Unknown generations will read his battles with wonder and admiration. In every hamlet, in every metropolis, his martial form will be cast in bronze and sculptured in marble. Historians will vie with each other in paying homage to his genius; but the time will come when men everywhere will recognize the greatness and beneficence of his administration as President of the United States."

In speaking of his private character the preacher said:

"And whether in camp or Cabinet, in private or public, at home or abroad, how pure and commendable his moral character! Life in the camp has proved ruinous to the morals of the greatest of warriors. The excitement of a life devoted to arms, the scenes of excess and plunder to which a soldier is exposed, the absence of the restraints of home and church, tend to the worst of passions and to the corruption of the best morals. But here in the presence of the dead, whose ears are forever deaf to our praise and censure, let it be our grateful duty that after five years in camp and field he returned to his home without a stain upon his character. His sense of justice was equaled only by his love of truth. He preferred honor to wealth and poverty to riches not his own. Gentle, true, and kind, gratitude was one of the noblest emotions of his soul. His words were were few, but pregnant with grateful recognition. To one who had been a friend in need he declared: 'I am glad to say that while there is much unblushing wickedness in the world, yet there is a comprehensive grandeur of soul. In my case I have not found that republics are ungrateful, nor are the people.'

The reverend gentleman then referred to the dead hero's tastes in the following terms: "He loved life and enjoyed it; he loved children and caressed them; he loved his family and found that in his chief delight. He had not taste for music, but he had melody in his heart. He despised pretense and show, but admired the real and beautiful. He was not fond of books, yet by carefulness of observation, by thoroughness of reflection, by attentiveness to the conversation of the well-informed, by extensive travels in many lands, by the daily study of current events he was the most intelligent citizen in our republic. He was the most diligent newspaper-reader in the land. He was a living encyclopedia of facts, figures, and men."

Dr. Newman then made a most touching reference to the home life of the General, depicting the great love borne by him to his wife and children, which was exemplified by his desire that his wife should be buried with him. The minister then reviewed Grant's religious life, showing how he leaned on the Scriptures as a guide and ever-present help. The death-bed scene was reviewed minutely and the sermon closed as follows:

"'Tis morning. The stars have melted into the coming light. The rosy-fingered morn lifts the drapery of the night. The distant mountains stand forth aglow. The soft, pure light of early dawn covers earth and sky. The dewy drop sparkles on the grass and in the daisy's cup. The birds from their sylvan coverts carol the melody of a thousand songs. The world rejoices, and its many minstrels challenge the harpers of the sky. In a humble cottage, prone upon his couch, lies our old commander. He is dying.

"'Tis morning, and in the light of that day thousands of earnest faces flash with renewed concern. From many a shaded lane and mountain slopes from many a farm-house and splendid mansion, eager eyes look toward the mount of suffering and breathe a prayer to God for the one we loved. Alas! He is dead.

"'Tis morning. It is the promise of a brighter day. The trumpters of the skies are sounding the reveille. Their notes have reached this earth. Their notes have reached our General's ear. He has gone to join the triumphant host. 'Tis morning in heaven."

At the conclusion of the discourse the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was rendered very impressively by the all-at-once congregation. The services ended with the benediction.

U. S. Grant Post, 127, of Brooklyn, bore the remains from the cottage to the station shortly before one o'clock. The military were drawn up and a salute was paid the remains as they passed to the depot, and the throng stood with uncovered heads while the casket was borne to the car. The mountain train waited at the little rustic depot. Seven cars were there. Next the engine came the baggage-car, with open sides and solid, massive drapery, was placed. The transfer from the cottage to the train was completed without difficulty, and the train started for Saratoga. Among those representing the military were the following:

Gen. W. S. Hancock, Gen. William T. Sherman, Gen. Rufus Ingalls, Gen. H. A. Perry, Col. Sutherland, Col. John P. Nicholson, Lieut. Col. Finley Anderson, Capt. U. S. L. Ward, Capt. John L. Weeks, and Lieut. Eugene Gelan. The guard of honor, U. S. Grant Post, Brooklyn, consisted of Col. William H. Barker, Maj. B. B. Corwin, Dr. George W. Bird, Reese B. Gwillim, J. W. Howell, Commander John L. Johnson, Henry W. Knight, R. S. Mackellar, William Mcdonald, William J. McKelvey, George J. Collins, Noah Thomas, George B. Squires, and six men of the Legion of Honor.

The general mourners were represented by William M. Evarts, Admiral Rowan, Warner Miller, Joseph W. Drexel, Potter Palmer, Gen. J. A. Cresswell, and others.

At 10 o'clock the order to start was given. Engineer Martin shut off steam from the cylinders, and the train, standing as it did upon a grade, slowly started by its own weight and impetus down the mountain. The bluffs and ridges on each side of the track were densely thronged with people. The grove south of the cottage, where the General's little grandchildren played, was alive with specators. Every rock every jutting point, every vantage ground was occupied. But from all the throng standing uncovered in the autumnal sunlight no sound escaped. The mountain was hushed and still, except for the heavy booming of guns thundering a grim farewell.

It was a funeral occasion—a death scene in sunshine. Slowly the little engine started, but quickly it felt the impetus of the descent. Out upon the first bluff of the mountain and clear of the forests crept the little engine, and the train trailed around the curve where, seven weeks before, Gen. Grant, alive, had turned to view the same sweep of valley and mountain, with Saratoga Lake glittering in the sunlight ten miles away. And to-day, as the train rounded this outlook, the General's sons gazed out upon the scene and may have thought of the other day as compared with this. Sweeping about the curve after curve, to the right and left, the train passed slowly down the mountain.

On it rolled toward the plain, and away upon the mountains by the famous eastern lookout, yet now in full view, there was a puff of white smoke. In an instant the sound of a booming cannon echoed in the trees and rattled a volley of little echoes over and down across the plain. The artillerymen were yet bidding their farewell.

The descent to the little village of Wilton was safely accomplished, and on the platform a few hundred villagers silently saw the train pass through, and those in the cars were moving on the level plain was reached. Seven level miles lay between the train and Saratoga. The speed was a little increased. Farmers and their families stood near and sat upon the farm fences to see the train that bore the dead General. Again the cannon on the mountain spoke out over the valley, but only the edge of its echo reached the moving train. The spires of Saratoga were coming in view, and from that direction came the dull booming of the cannon planted half a mile out of the village beside the Mount MacGregor track. Soon this battery was reached, its brass guns saluting the train on its passage. The last curve was rounded and the train straightened away parallel to the tracks of the Delaware & Hudson, on which, just north of the Mount MacGregor depot, the funeral train of the New York Central Road was waiting, while thousands of persons were being held back by the military. The mountain train drew alongside of the other train and stopped.

There were nine cars in the New York Central train. Next to the engine came the funeral car "Woodlawn." The other cars were occupied as follows: Second car, clergy and Dr. Douglas; third, the sons and honible mourners; fourth, Gen Hancock and staff; fifth, Gov. Hill and staff; sixth, the press; seventh and eighth, the military escort; ninth, the baggage. The remains were placed in silence by the guard of honor to the car "Woodlawn," which was draped with black and hung with flags, and the funeral parties were transferred to their respective cars, which were all trimmed in plain black. The Brooklyn guard of honor and the six men of the Loyal Legion, with a detachment of regulars, entered the dead car; also two men of Wheeler Post, G. A. R. Soon after 2 o'clock Superintendent Voorhees bade Conductor Thornton give the signal to start, and the impressive and heavy train moved through the throngs and away from Saratoga.

The clock-tower dial in Saratoga indicated 2:30 o'clock as the train passed through the suburbs. Twenty-five minutes later the train pulled slowly into Ballston.

About the depot were throngs of men and women. The church bells were slowly tolling, and a field-piece near the depot saluted the train. High street was passed at 2:57 p. m., and the east line four minutes later. The train was quickening its speed. In the funeral car the U. S. Grant Post, who were with the remains, mounted guard at the casket. The remains rested upon a black dais, and the compartment in which they lay communicated with the main saloon by folding doors, which were open. The doors at the sides of the funeral compartment were also open, and the afternoon sunlight shone upon the royal purple velvet and the silver mountings of the casket. The first and each succeeding detail mounted on guard consisted of two men of the U. S. Grant Post. One stood with folded arms at the head of the casket and the other at the foot. The first guard was mounted as Ballston was being passed. Round Lake, the Rev. Dr. Newman's summer home, was passed at 2:48 o'clock. The depot, platform, fences and the fronts of the cottages in the grove were black with mourning drapery. The resident population of the resort formed lines of uncovered heads on each side of the tracks, and scarfs of mourning were fluttered by many ladies in the throng as the somber train moved by.

The hamlet of Coons was left behind at 2:55 o'clock, and Mechanicsville was only five minutes ahead. The sound of the village bells came faintly above the rumble of the train, and signals of grief were displayed. Waterford Junction was passed at 3:14, and between there and West Waterford, which was three minutes beyond, a train going in the opposite direction slowed and halted as the funeral train approached.

At Albany.

Col. Grant, Jesse and U. S. Grant, Jr., alighted first from the funeral train when it had stopped at the foot of Spencer street in Albany. Gov. Hill took the first upon his arm, Asst. Adj.-Gen. Mowen the second, and Col. Gillette the third. The Rev. Dr. Newman, Dr. Douglas and Gen. Sherman followed with Gen. Porter, and the party was at once escorted to carriages and driven to the Governor's mansion. Before the remains were removed, Gov. Hill and the other officers returned to the train and there greeted Gen. Hancock and staff, who were at the moment alighting from the car they had occupied. The remains were placed within the mounted catafalque. Six black horses with black trappings were hitched to the funeral car, and at the head of each horse as leaders were members of G. A. R. posts 5 and 121.

The crowd was dense. The remains having been deposited on the funeral car it was drawn out into Spencer street, where it was flanked by Company A, Fifth Artillery, and Company E, Twelfth Infantry. Grand Army men guarded the remains at posts of honor, and four men of the Tenth battalion were mounted at each corner of the catafalque. Gen. Hancock and staff filed out into Spencer street, where the General was mounted on a powerful black horse, splendidly caparisoned. The organizations to take part in the procession were waiting in various streets along the line of march, and assumed their assigned positions in the procession as the head moved on. There were 4,361 men in the procession.

Many companies outside of Albany and its vicinity were present and joined in the procession. The column moved through North Pearl street to State, to Eagle street, to Washington avenue, to Knox street, to State street, to the Capital. There Gen. Hancock dismounted and retired, and the remains were deposited beneath the great catafalque in the Senate corridor. Before being so placed the body was conveyed to a private room in the Capitol building, where the undertakers and embalmers removed the lid of the casket to inspect the body and learn its condition after the journey from the mountain. They said they found the remains in excellent condition. The public was admitted, finally, about 5 o'clock, being permitted to walk two abreast on each side of the casket, which lay on an inclined dais. Seven thousand four hundred persons viewed the remains the first hour. The U. S. Grant Post of Brooklyn had its men waiting here, and a detail of six men on each side of the casket kept the throng moving. The details for guard duty will be relieved by members of their respective organizations at intervals of three hours each until the remains are again moved. Company B, of the Fifth Battalion, under command of Captain Stackpole, was placed on duty in the corridor to stand guard until midnight, when it was relieved for six hours by Company D of the same battalion.

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

Imposing Services, Attended by Many Americans.

The Grant memorial service in Westminster Abbey, says a London dispach of the 4th inst., was an imposing event added to the history of England. The edifice was crowded with a congregation nearly every member of which was a distinguished person, many Americans being present. The order of the service was as follows: Scunbert's "Funeral March"; the funeral procession up the nave of the cathedral to the choir; the opening of the burial service; the nineteeth psalm; the day's lesson; funeral sermon by Canon Farrar; Spohr's anthem, "Blest Are the Departed"; Handel's anthem, "His Body Is Buried in Peace"; two concluding prayers; the burial service; blessing; the dead march in Saul.

The funeral address delivered by Canon Farrar was most impressive, and was listened to in almost breathless silence. Canon Farrar took his text from "Acts, chapter xiii, verse 36. He said that he desired to speak simply and directly, with generous appreciation, but without idle flattery, of him whose death had made a nation mourn; that he would touch only upon his public actions and services. The speaker then traced Gen. Grant from boyhood to manhood, compared him with the great men of the world, and ranked him with the foremost. In the course of his sermon Canon Farrar said:

Gen. Grant has been grossly and unjustly called a butcher. He loved peace and hated bloodshed, but it was his duty at all costs to save the country. In his silence, determination, and clearness of instant Grant resembled Washington and Wellington. In the hottest fray of battle his speech never exceeded "yea, yea," and "nay, nay."

Among the distinguished English personages present were Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, the Earl of Iddesleigh, Earl Cranbrook, the Rt. Hon. Mr. Forster, and a great number of peers and members of the House of Commons. There were also present Prime Minister Salisbury, the Duke of Cambridge, commander-in-chief of the British army; the Marquis of Lorne, Gen. Lord Wolseley, Senor Martinez, Chilian Ambassador to England; Chief Justice Waite, ex-Attorney Gen. Brewster, Senator Edmunds, Senator Hawley, and other prominent Americans. Queen Victoria was represented at the service by her equerry. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught and the Duke of Edinburgh were also represented by equerries.

Cinderella's Slipper.

The origin of this nursery tale is sufficiently curious. About the year 1730 a French actor of equal talent and wealth, named Thevenard, in passing through the streets of Paris, observed upon a cobbler's stall the shoe of a female, which struck him by the remarkable smallness of its size. After admiring it for some time he returned to his house, but his thoughts reverted to the shoe with such intensity that he reappeared at the stall the next day, but the cobbler could give him no other clew to the owner than it had been left in his absence for the purpose of being repaired. Day after day did Thevenard return to his post to watch the reintegration of the slipper, which proceeded slowly, nor did the proprietor appear to claim it. Although he had completed the sixtieth year of his age, so extravagant became his passion for the fair one that he became (were it possible for a Frenchman of that day to be so) melancholy and miserable. His pain was, however, somewhat appeased by the appearance of the little foot itself, appertaining to a pretty and youthful girl in the humblest class of life. All distinctions were leveled at once by love; the actor sought the parents of the damsel, procured their consent to the match, and actually made her his wife.—London Globe.

UNGER knew a man that lived upon hope, but that he spent his old age at somebody else's expense.

A SOLEMN PROGRESS.

The Remains of General Grant Transferred from Albany to the Metropolis.

Imposing Civic and Military Procession to the New York City Hall.

The remains of Gen. Grant lay in state at the Capitol building in Albany from 4:30 p. m. of Tuesday until 10:30 Wednesday morning, the 5th inst., during which time they were viewed by 77,240 people. At noon of Wednesday the funeral train started for New York, Gen. Hancock and Gov. Hill, with their staffs, and committees representing the State Legislature and the city of New York, being on board. Great crowds were gathered at all the stations along the route, and when the metropolis was reached a vast multitude was waiting. The following incidents of the journey and arrival at New York we glean from the copious reports telegraphed West:

At the Executive Mansion in Albany the sons of Gen. Grant, with Drs. Douglas and Newman, breakfasted quietly with the Governor. The morning papers were afterward scanned in silence by the party, the voluminous details calling forth no comment from the sons except among themselves. The day had dawned bright, and from the country side farmers and their families had come in early to view the dead. Trains east and west added to the number of strangers in the city, and the morning boats brought many more.

At 10:30 o'clock this forenoon the Capitol doors were swung shut. The compact line of waiting visitors, which extended over a block, was shut off thus, and those who had entered were permitted to pass rapidly out, when the State street doors were closed.

Slowly the funeral car, drawn by six black horses with their mourning trappings, moved to the State street side of the Capitol. Gen. Hancock, mounted upon a black charger, rode West Point, and followed by his staff, approached the Capitol, as also did Gen. Farnsworth and staff.

Eleven o'clock had passed, and it was half an hour later when the great doors on the Capitol swung open on the State street side. The somber car was waiting at the foot of the steps in the street. Four men were inside the car, and assisted in lifting the remains to the black dais within the mounted catafalque. Then Colonel Black and Major Brown ranged their companies of regulars on either side of the car, the front being level with the heads of the horses. The Grand Army guard took positions, the blare of trumpets rang out, and the procession started at a measured pace down State street, the various organizations falling in to form the procession—reaching Broadway amid the dull boom of cannon and the tolling and clanging of bells in the steeples. The march through Broadway to Steuben street, and thence to the depot, was viewed by a dense throng. Guns boomed while the remains were being placed in the car Woodlawn, and the bells tolled slowly. The committee from New York entered their cars, Gen. Hancock and staff were aboard, the regulars were quartered, and the great train started.

At the instant the train started a dirge came up to the ears of all in the train from the band of the Jackson Corps, that stood in line and saluted. Hundreds of persons standing nearest the tracks laid coins on the rails to have them flattened beneath the wheels of the train that carried Gen. Grant on his last journey. On the roofs of the houses in the vicinity hundreds witnessed the start, and, as the black train rumbled across the long bridge of the Hudson, it was between two dense lines of people, who filled the foot-paths on either side. There was no clang of bell, no scream of whistle, only the dull rumble of the wheels beneath the memorable train. Across the river were crowds of people. The shops and stores and factories had closed their doors to business. All along the route of the train through Jersey City and Hoboken, Bergen Point, Elizabeth, Rahway, Metuchen, Perth Amboy, New Brunswick, Jamesburg, Hightstown, Princeton Junction, Trenton, Bordentown, Burlington, Florence, Beverly, Delanco, Riverside, Palmyra, Pavonia, Camden, Gloucester, Woodbury, Glassboro, Mantua, Paulsboro, Woodbury, Gloucester, Camden, Palmyra, Riverside, Delanco, Beverly, Florence, Burlington, Bordentown, Trenton, Princeton Junction, Hightstown, Jamesburg, New Brunswick, Perth Amboy, Metuchen, Rahway, Elizabeth, Bergen Point, Hoboken, Jersey City, at every town and station along the route from Albany to the metropolis the people ranged themselves along the track, and with bared heads testified their respect to the memory of the illustrious dead, as the funeral train swept by. A few minutes before 5 o'clock p. m. the train arrived at the Grand Central Depot. As soon as it halted all the passengers alighted, and formed a long line on the raised footway beside the train. Facing it ahead, drawn up in the line, were the regular army soldiers—Company E of the Twelfth Infantry, under Maj. Brown, and Company A of the Fifth Artillery, under Capt. W. B. Beck. The thirteen men of Grant Post, G. A. R., of Brooklyn, who have acted as the guard over the coffin since the Sunday after the General's death, were the last to leave the train. They went to the car that contained the coffin, lifted it out, and put it on a new and handsome baggage-truck that had been brought to the side of the car for the purpose.

The soldiers presented arms as the coffin came in sight, the civilians removed their hats, the truck bearing the coffin was rolled to the front of the depot, and transferred to the funeral car, while a band played a solemn dirge.

The funeral cortege marched in the following order:

The battalion of Mounted Police.
Maj. Gen. Hancock and staff.
Light Battery F, Mounted, from Fort Hamilton,
Capt. W. F. Randolph Commanding.
Company A of the 5th United States Artillery.
The Fort Hamilton Military Band.
A Battalion, Comprising Four Companies of the 5th United States Artillery, on Foot.
Two companies of marines and blue jackets, under Lieut. Command'r W. W. Mead.
Two companies of sailors under Lieut. Emory.
Maj. Gen. Alexander Shaler and staff.
Second Battery, First Division, National Guard.
Brig. Gen. Ward and staff.
The First Brigade N. G. S. N. Y., comprising the [illegible] and 22d regiments.
The catafalco.
The guard of honor, consisting of members of the U. S. Grant Post, of Brooklyn, the George G. Meade Post, of Philadelphia, and the Loyal Legion, of the United States.
Brig. Gen. Fitzgerald and staff.
The Second Brigade N. G. S. N. Y. comprising the 7th, 8th, 6th, and 71st regiments.
The Mayor's Committee of 14.

All along the line of march the people stood with uncovered heads, silently and reverently gazing at the purple-covered casket that contained the remains of the great soldier. It was an imposing pageant and one long to be remembered. When the head of the funeral cortege reached the eastern entrance to the City Hall plaza the line was reformed. The Twenty-second Regiment, a fine body of men, splendidly uniformed, formed on either side of the entrance to the City Hall, and, forming a line from the steps to the catafalco, the marines and regulars were drawn up in a line facing the entrance. Again the command to present arms was given, and the bearers carried the coffin into the rotunda of the City Hall through a glittering wall of steel. There it was deposited on a catafalco erected in the center of the rotunda.

At 6:30 the central iron door was swung open to the public. The five thousand people who had been passed out by the police lines on the plaza were ranged in double file at the edge of the plaza opposite the gate, and marshaled across the plaza straight up the steps. They passed through the gateway two at a time, at the rate of 100 a minute. Each one who passed the catafalco bent over slightly to look at the face of the dead hero, and then hurried on. In the first five minutes 500 had passed, and a count made during the first hour showed that 3,450 had passed the coffin. All sorts and conditions of people were in the throng. Two Chinese laundrymen, wearing their long shirts of silk and embroidered Chinese slippers, stooped far down over the coffin and looked at the face of the General amid a Grand Army veteran caught their sleeves and hurried them on. One of the Chinamen pressed his handkerchief to his eyes and went away with bowed head. Barefooted newsboys, negroes, and aged men passed more quickly, and women and girls walked by in groups. Every man lifted his hat reverently as he entered the building. It is estimated that 74,000 persons passed through the corridors of the City Hall and viewed the remains between 9:30 a. m. and 4 a. m.

TAKING THE LAST LOOK.

Tens of Thousands of People Pass the Casket Containing Gen. Grant's Remains.

The Mechanic, Working Girl, Clerk, and Business Man Side by Side.

One hundred and seventy-five thousand people viewed the remains of Gen. Grant on Thursday, the 6th inst., as they lay in state at the City Hall in New York. During the entire day great throngs, representing every condition of society, surged through the building. Two lines of policemen, says an eye-witness describing the scenes, were placed across the plaza from the City Hall entrance to the fountain. These two lines formed a passageway through which four men might walk abreast, and along which all day the visitors to the remains should pass. Meanwhile the officers of the Twenty-second Regiment, who had been on duty through the early morning, were filing out of the City Hall. They were going home, and their places were being taken by the officers of the Twelfth Regiment. Sergt. Riley, with thirty men, picketed the corridors through the building so as to form the channel through which the throng should move to the exit on the Court House side of the City Hall. The Grant Post had mounted a detail at 5 o'clock to serve from that hour until 8 o'clock.

These men were placed nearest the catafalque, and the two lines of visitors passed between them and the casket on either side. All within the gloomy corridors was in readiness. Outside on the top step of the City Hall, and in the middle of the channel of officers to the fountain, stood a big Broadway police officer, who acted as a wedge to split the current of people and send them in lesser streams through the gates, where they should now past the casket as detailed. The clocks pointed to 6:00 o'clock, and at the inspector's orders the iron gates were thrown open. Ten or twelve hundred people had jammed up against the officers who barred the channel at the edge of the fountain-circle, but when the gates swung open the officers ceased to hold the people in check, and the stream began to flow past the remains and through the building. The first person to review the remains was a spare but sweet-faced little woman, who led with each hand a little boy. She was anxious her children should see the General's face, and the children were permitted to halt an instant and gaze over the side of the casket and peer into it. It was yet early. The police refrained from pushing the very first visitor, and she a woman. The police had not yet begun the annoying practice of bunting persons forward upon the heels and necks of their immediate predecessors. In the first minute only eighty-four persons passed the casket. This rate of passage would never answer when the dense crowd should be waiting outside. People were hastened; they were hurried through at 101 a minute; then the pressure was increased to 104 a minute. The procession was almost a lock-step, and the tramp was quick.

It was 6:25 a. m. and the pulse of curiosity had sunk to 55 to the minute. At 6:28 the rate was 52. A little bootblack with his box on his shoulder came along to see the dead General. His face shone and his hair had been freshly wet and smoothed out by the fountain. Many women came, too, and they caused delay. They must needs examine every detail, and would fain put their noses to the flowers. Men and boys and wan-faced women, with lunch-baskets and dinner-pails, filed along. At 6:40 the running average per minute was 90, and the total then passed was between two thousand seven hundred and two thousand eight hundred persons. The channel was just full, with no clogging or crowding.

The hour from six to seven o'clock was employed by workingmen and women, boys and girls, in viewing the remains. They were on their way to work; the day was young, and their opportunity better than at any hour of the day. After seven o'clock the line changed as to its personnel. There were less women and girls. They had gone through and were at work. Then the line began to lengthen.

At 8 o'clock there was another change taking place in the complexion of the visitors. The laborers had gone and the clerks coming downtown were stepping from elevated and surface cars into the line that was moving then at the rate of 98 and 100 per minute. The police were reenforced at 8 o'clock. Details under sergeants and roundsmen had been arriving and reporting to the Inspector from 7 o'clock. At 8 o'clock there were 387 men on duty. The channel, with walls of police, was extended in Y-street around the sides of the fountain-circle, which, like a hopper, received the people and from which they were straightened out in lines of twos and threes up to the City Hall steps. The guards at the casket were hastening the people: 150 per minute were being hurried through. The hands on the clock dials marked 9 o'clock. The fountain circle was no longer the point of formation of the line. Every car and train coming down town added its quota to those anxious to look upon the face of Gen. Grant. By the remains the U. S. Grant post had mounted another detail of thirteen men, and the men of Wheeler post, of Saratoga—which first mounted a guard about the Mount MacGregor cottage after the General's death—were standing at the foot of the casket, while members of the military order of the Loyal Legion were likewise represented. Rapidly the people were augmenting. The crowd was fast becoming a throng; the line was being hurried through the hall at the rate of 150 per minute, and for a little while the pace was 170 per minute, which rate, if maintained for an hour, would have passed 10,200.

This could not be done, however. To accomplish it the visitors must be hurried through and pass the remains but a glance at a time. This rate of speed comported ill with the dignity of the occasion, and more time was given. But the accretions were too rapid to be cared for, and the line of waiting people stretched out finally at its rear around the bend at the Register's office and down Center street.

At 11 o'clock a. m. between 30,000 and 31,000 persons had passed the casket and looked toward the remains, though many coming rapidly in from the bright sunlight were scarcely able to distinguish them in the somber shadows of the black-draped corridor.

It is difficult to form an idea of how entirely cosmopolitan this procession of citizens was. Within a block there was every shade of wealth and poverty, of lowliness and highness, of culture and ignorance, of loftiering age and exotic childhood. They passed on in the line together with all possible quiet and respect. Throughout the entire day no unseemly conduct marred the solemnity of that extraordinary occasion. Further than to keep the line straight and to make way for wagons at crossings and for to let passengers on the sidewalks, the police were without occupation. All seemed to realize that this was no ordinary concourse of citizens, and that their presence in a continually reenforced procession of thousands was the spectacle of a lifetime. They moved along quietly, quickly, and with a gentle decorum that savored not of an unpleasant curiosity, but of concern, devotion, and respect for an illustrious memory. At different hours the point where the line began varied. It got as far up town in the early and late portions of the day as Canal street, and fell off several times down to Duane street, but in the main it kept about the vicinity of Franklin street. Near the City Hall it was no uncommon thing to see from 81 to 85 numbered for a coveted place. The crowd all day was orderly.

After 3 o'clock p. m. the rush became greater than ever. The line was then forming at Worth street, and it was an hour and twenty minutes before a person could reach the City Hall steps. At 5 o'clock the line had reached Canal street and Broadway, half a mile away, and showed no signs of diminution. It was then composed of young clerks and shop-girls, who chattered merrily along the route, but seldom addressed themselves to other than their immediate companion, and all seemed dazed, away long before they reached the stone steps of the building.

Officers of the guard of honor of the Loyal Legion who were making frequent counts of the people passing found that they varied from 7,500 to 9,000 an hour. These reports were corroborated by the police reports at the same time. At 1 o'clock, when the doors were closed for the night, it was calculated that 175,000 persons had passed through the building.

Pomeroy's Democrat advises the election of post-masters by the people of each community served, for the term of four years, the general management, however, still to be in the government, with power to remove for malfeasance.

Inland Marine tells a good story of how a Canadian ferry-steamer in command of an officer, tried to capture an American wrecking tug and found himself swiftly and surely forced into an American harbor in spite of the Canadian steamer pulling in an opposite direction with engines wide open.

We didn't suppose that crows were of any earthly use save as a diet for defeated politicians. Mr. James Greacen, of Excelsior, thinks differently, however. He has a seven-acre potato-patch which these hereditary and traditional foes of the farmer have undertaken to keep free from bugs, and thus far have fulfilled their contract to the letter. Tally one for the crows. —Kalkaska Leader.

"Procrastination is the thief of time," and when you have anything for publication get it to the editor at the first opportunity. Don't say to yourself, "Well, the paper is printed on Thursday, and any time before Thursday morning will do." It is very annoying to the printers to have matter come to hand too late. It delays the printer, and sometimes it must be thrown into the waste basket or wait until another week. Remember this fact, your favor may reach the printer too late, but never too soon.

Kalamazoo Gazette: The city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, has a peculiar provision in its law relating to the liquor traffic. Besides charging a license fee of $500, the law marks out certain patrol limits, including the business core of the city, within which all the saloons there are must be established, and where they can be kept under close police inspection. As to the rest of the city, including all the main resident portions of the city, where probably nine-tenths of the inhabitants have their homes, absolute saloon prohibition prevails, and is rigidly enforced.

The Indian agent at Fort Reno, who received supplies form the government for 6,271 Indians when he only had 4,469, and who resigned as soon the fraud was discovered, has an idea that his business has been pretty badly broken up by a change in the administration. The people were especially assured in the last campaign that our industries would languish and suffer if Cleveland was elected President; and this is one of the "industries," that has suffered. A great languor it is also proper to remark has fallen on the favored Roach ship-building interest.—Jackson Patriot.

Advocates of a high protective tariff "for the benefit of the workingmen" insisted upon free trade in labor for the benefit of themselves. They imported ship loads of cheap labor from Europe to take the place of men who knew their business and demanded their rights. For a time they had the whip handle. It was money in their pocket to supplant American labor with persons who could not articulate a word of the language of the country. But they are finding that pauper labor is learning a thing or two, and they are having their hands full. It is a bit of retributive justice which they are in no humor to appreciate.—[Kalamazoo Gazette.

A careful study of recent events will show to the reflecting mind that the administration is gradually developing a policy which is consistent and admirable. It is a policy which has been departed from too often in recent years, but which must be observed if the people are to have an honest and fair government. It recognizes the claims of no particular business interests above those of any class, but seeks to be just to all. It has no favorites and no business partners. The laws are enforced with an even hand and men who look for jobs or favors will look evidently in vain. With a policy of government so bottomed there is no limit to the amount of good that can be done. Rich and poor will fare exactly alike. The government will not exert its power to build up one man or one interest at the expense of many. The poor will not be taxed for the benefit of the rich and interference by politicians in the in the business affairs of the people will not be thought of. A reasonable freedom will be given to trade of all kinds, so that legitimate enterprise will have an opportunity to make its way, and government, instead of being a meddlesome, partial and onerous affair, will become a beneficent institution to which all may look for justice, but to which the sharper and monopolist will appeal in vain.—[Jackson Patriot.

Workmen not Benefited.

It is not a difficult thing to know just whom a protective tariff benefits; a very little reading and thinking will suffice for that. The workingman knows that there is something that eats up his wages fully as fast as he gets them, yet he may not have thought just what it is. The idea that the tariff raises his wages is exploded, for under the present tariff which is highly protective they have been steadily and rapidly declining for nearly three years, so that he gets no benefit in that regard. The tariff does not even keep up wages to the old rate. In many of the protected industries they have suffered a decline of 30 per cent in three years, and even at that decline work cannot be obtained. John Jarrett, late president of the Ironworkers' Association of the United States, said over 1,700,000 workingmen were out of employment in the middle of our last severe winter. No! the tariff has not mitigated the miseries of the workingmen. It has added to them. For a protective tariff demands tribute of every poor man on everything he uses except his bread and butter; his clothing costs him 40 per cent more than it would without any protection; the blankets which shelter him and his family from the blasts of winter, cost him 50 per cent more than they should; his car fares and transportation rates are all higher by reason of the tax upon imported products; in short, the tariff tax is levied on all he spends, simply to aid a few rich men to become more rich still; and when the workingman sees this then he may begin to realize the magnitude of the blessings he receives through protection and may suddenly change front and vote to do away with the iniquitous system.—[Jackson Patriot.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itchiug, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Local Notes and News.

Traverse City is to have a $20,000 school building.

The Clara Belle resumed her trips Monday morning.

The Elk Rapids Reform Club is preparing to build a public hall.

The Wilson Hoop Co., of Bay City, will build a shop at South Arm.

O. I. Wheat advertises a prize dance, to be held at the opera house Friday evening.

To be certain of insertion, all items should reach this office not later than Wednesday evening.

Among the chief characteristics of the Georgia Minstrels are the wonderful contortions of the drum major, and the immense mouths of the end men.

The representation that the Daily Resorter gives the Charlevoix resorts should secure to that lively sheet an excellent support from this community.

E. M. Clark has bought T. D. Smith's stock of groceries, and leased the building, and will move in as soon as necessary changes can be made.

The harness shop of Hodge & Litzau has been closed, the property and accounts going into the hands of E. H. Green for settlement. This leaves Charlevoix without a shop.

If the Elk Rapids Progress would devote more space to a faithful chronicle of affairs at home, and less to picking up flaws of neighboring towns, the paper would probably be just as interesting.

The Friant is billed for an excursion to the Indian camp-meeting at Northport, next Sunday, leaving Charlevoix at 9 o'clock. Tickets 50 cents. The Nellie Booth will make a trip from East Jordan, connecting here, for the accommodation of those up the Arm.

The ladies of the M. E. church gave an ice cream social at the church last evening, taking in a little over $14. They adopted a novel substitute for tables, by fastening hooks to boards so as to attach them to the pew for use, and when not in use can be put away in a very small space.

A southern editor says that the young men who are disposed to pass on the other side of the street and in other unfeeling ways dodge ice cream saloons, walking with their girls, should remember that all through the long winter these same girls cheerfully and uncomplainingly furnished light and fuel for their comfort, and the little cream they are willing to accept is but adequate return for last winter's favors.

Geo. Pappin advertises in another column that he has leased the blacksmith shop in connection with Washburn & Ackert's machine shop and is prepared to do all work in his line. He will make a specialty of heavy blacksmithing, and refers to the recent job of welding the shaft of the Clara Belle, said to be the heaviest job ever done here.

At the meeting of the school inspectors at East Jordan last week John Redpath was re-elected as examiner. In the joint meeting of inspectors and examiners, it was decided to retain the present standard on, first, second and third grades. On the question of special certificates, there was a lively discussion, and a resolution that the board grant none, was lost. During the discussions it was ascertained that Civil Government, Physiology and Hygiene have not been taught as much as they should be, the reason assigned being that the scholars did not have text books. In discussing the question of moral education, it was thought that not enough attention is now given to the character of the pupil; that as crime increases the public schools must become a nursery of pure morals.

Personals.

Hon. C. S. Hampton made us a brief call on Tuesday.

M. F. Quaintance is now agent of the U. S. express at Petoskey.

H. J. Havens, of Lansing, visited A. D. Cruickshank a few days last week.

Mrs. F. M. Miller, of Coldwater, made us a brief call last Thursday evening.

Miss L. Spaulding went to Elk Rapids last Saturday, for a few days vacation.

Mr. Robert Boylan, of Portland, Ionia county, made us a brief call on Wednesday.

F. C. Ives, of Chicago will give an exhibition of fancy skating at the rink to-night.

Geo. Budd, of Chicago, arrived Sunday for a visit with his many friends in Charlevoix.

Mrs. B. Greening, of Chicago, was in town Friday and Saturday, and called on a few of her friends.

O. W. Kibby and wife, of Bellaire, visited Chas. Kelley and wife from Saturday till Tuesday of this week.

Misses Ellen Tomlinson and Bertha Fleming and Mr. Beech Hall have gone to Charlevoix.—[Kalamazoo Gazette.

Mrs. Frank Dewey and daughter, of Grand Rapids, arrived this morning, for a visit with her sister, Mrs. F. E. Wood.

J. M. Rice, Esq., of Cadillac, will lecture in the M. E. Church next Sunday evening. Subject: "Ingersollism examined."

Misses Julia Tuttle and Kate Harmon, now at the Chicago resort, sang solos at the Congregational church Sunday morning.

Hon. C. P. Ellerby and two sons, Mr. Robert Page, and two Misses Wash, all of St. Louis, Mo., are at Mrs. O. D. Wood's.

Sib. Ackert, fireman on the Clara Belle, got caught in a line one day last week, and was considerably injured about his body.

Miss Isabella Field, of Eaton Rapids, is visiting the family of C. J. Strang and other relatives and friends in Charlevoix, this week.

Rev. Dr. Brooks, president of Kalamazoo College, will preach in the M. E. Church next Sunday at 10:30 o'clock. All are invited.

Milton Savory, of Ainger, Eaton county, commenced to study the mysteries of the types in the Journal office, on Wednesday of this week.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken and wife started Tuesday morning for a few weeks visit with relatives and friends in the southern part of the state.

Geo. Sherwood intends to go to school in Berea, Ohio, in a short time and Walter Cook, of Ypsilanti, will take his place in Crouter's drug store.

Kalamazoo Gazette, Tuesday: Mrs. Frank Horn and daughter leave this morning for Charlevoix.....Judge Mills, who returned from Charlevoix Monday morning, will hold court through the week and return north Saturday.....Hon. Peyton Ranney, Dr. Simpson and Messrs. Jno. Fleming, Edw. Burdick, Jr. and W. A. Tomlinson, Jr., left for Charlevoix Saturday evening.

F. W. Craine, at Geo. Miller's clothing house, has the agency of this county for the Memoirs of U. S. Grant. Those desiring a copy should give him a call.

Mrs. Lyman Benson, who has been visiting in Ionia county for the past three months, returned home Saturday. Mr. Benson will be here two or three weeks later.

Rev. Dr. J. A. B. Stone, of Kalamazoo, will preach at the Congregational church Sunday morning. In the evening, Rev. Dr. E. F. Williams, of Chicago, will conduct the services, and C. F. Gates, of Chicago, will give an account of city mission work.

Sam Thatcher and family have removed to East Jordan. The distance from business was too great, and Sam couldn't stand it to go so far to his duties every night and morning. East Jordan is a brisk little town, but we'll bet a two for-a-nickle that Sam would rather live down here where he was so comfortably settled.

Kalamazoo Gazette, Saturday: Mr. H. H. Everard and his sister, with John Vandewalker, leave this morning for Charlevoix.....Messrs. Ira Ranson, Frank Underwood and Chas. W. Cobb left last evening for Charlevoix.....Among those who went north last evening were Mrs. T. S. Cobb, bound for Boyne City, Mrs. M. E. Wattles, Charlevoix, Wequetonsing and other resorts, and S. A. Gibson, Charlevoix.

The Regatta.

The following are among the announcements made for the regatta here to-morrow:

The course for the sailing contest is a triangular one, starting from the mouth of the river and extending seven miles over Pine Lake, returning to starting point. The rowing course for the mens' race will be on Round Lake, from Green's dock to Wilcox's boat house and return. The ladies' and boys' course one-half the distance.

All row boats over 16 feet long and all with either sliding seats or outriggers will be barred from entering.

The prizes for the rowing races will be medals instead of cash as heretofore announced. The reason for this is that all participating in a race for a cash prize would be barred out from all future amateur rowing races according to the rules governing aquatic sports.

The following are the special committees, who will look after the entries in their respective departments:

Sailing—James Heaton and C. J. Carrington.

Rowing—Frank Walbridge, Ed. F. Parmelee and H. Lee Iddings.

Field Games—Geo. W. Miller, A. J. McLeod, Ross Mahon and Dr. Crouter.

Shipments.

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix as reported for the week ending Wednesday evening:

MOTHER'S DOUGHNUTS.

BY CHARLES FOLLEN ADAMS.

[El Dorado, 1851.]

I've jest bin down ter Thompson's, boys,
'N' feelin' kind o' blue,
I thought I'd look in at "The Ranch,"
Ter find out what wuz new;
When I seen this sign a-hangin'
On a shanty by the lake:
"Here's whar yer gets yer doughnuts
Like yer mother used ter make."

I've seen a grizzly show his teeth;
I've seen Kentucky Pete
Draw out his shooter 'n' advise
A "tenderfoot" ter treat;
But nuthin' ever tuk me down
'N' made my benders shake
Like that sign about the doughnuts
That my mother used ter make.

A sort o' mist shut out the ranch,
'N' standin' thar instead,
I seen an old white farm-house,
With its doors all painted red.
A whiff came through the open door—
Wuz I sleepin' or awake?
The smell was that of doughnuts
Like my mother used ter make.

The bees wuz hummin' round the porch,
Whar honeysuckles grew;
A yellow dish of apple-sass
Wuz settin' thar in view.
'N' on the table, by the stove,
An old-time "johnny-cake,"
'N' a platter full of doughnuts
Like my mother used ter make.

A patient form I seemed ter see,
In tidy dress of black;
I almost thought I heard the words,
"When will Ty boy come back?"
'N' then—the old sign creaked;
But now it was the boss who spake:
"Here's whar yer gets yer doughnuts
Like yer mother used ter make."

Well, boys, that kind o' broke me up,
'N' ez I've struck pay gravel,
I rather think I'll pack my kit,
Vamose the ranch, 'n' travel.
I'll make the old folks jubilant,
'N', if I don't mistake,
I'll try some o' them doughnuts
Like my mother used ter make.

HE WASN'T ENGAGED.

I went to live with Aunt Edmonton when poor papa died. That was half a dozen years ago, yet my trouble seems as fresh to-day, my loss as irreparable as on that terrible morning when I left him lying in his lonely grave under the willows.

Poor papa! how fond we were of each other. He had no one in the world but me. Mamma died when I was a wee baby, not quite two summers old—died away off in Southern France, and she sleeps there now under the shadows of the purple hills.

I have seen many fair women, but never a face half so lovely as hers. Her portrait used to hang in the old gallery at Edmonton Hall, but it is gone now. Aunt Edmonton had something to do with its disappearance, for she never liked my mother.

The Edmontons are a proud race, with a pedigree running back to the old Cavaliers, and an ancient crest on their massive old silver, and the bluest of blue blood in their aristocratic veins. At least, Aunt Edmonton says so. Papa always laughed at her high fancies, and held that one honest soul was as good as another, no matter whether its owner wore royal purple or hodden gray; and when he met my pretty mamma, and loved her, he did not hesitate about making her his wife, though she was penniless and a daughter of the people.

Aunt Edmonton was terribly angered, and when the pretty bride came home to Edmonton Hall, she met her with scowling brows, and led her such a life that papa soon took her abroad, and there she died and was buried a few short months after I was born. Papa never outlived his grief at her loss; he loved her dead as tenderly as he had loved her living, and cherished me as no other child was ever cherished. I grew up in his bosom; he was my teacher, companion, and friend. We were never separated.

What a blissful life we led, Bohemians though we were! Whither our fancy led us, there we pitched our tent; under sunny skies, in the solemn shadow of time-famed ruins, by the margin of storied rivers. I was cradled on the deep, and reared amid the classic wealth of foreign lands.

But as time crept by papa's health grew feeble, and we came back to Edmonton Hall; there he died. I left the dear old home and his grave under the drooping willows, and went to live with Aunt Edmonton.

As I have said, Aunt Edmonton was a proud woman. She was more—a worldly one. Wealth was her Moloch, and she held no heart treasure too precious to be given as an offering to his fiery embrace. I was an Edmonton as well as herself, and, despite the disgrace of my mother's alien blood, could not be put to household drudgery. Hence I was installed as a sort of companion, to read Balzac and George Sand, while my aunt and Marguerite sipped their noon chocolate, and to keep the point lace in order and the family jewels well burnished. Not a laborious task, and it brought me bread and butter; and bread and butter we must have in this common-place world, even though our hearts break and our souls starve.

Aunt Edmonton did not like the old hall. She declared that the old house was better suited for bats and owls than for human beings, and it was shut up, and we lived first in one gay city and then another, and finally crossed the sea and went to Paris. Dear me, how my aunt and Marguerite did enjoy the life the life they led there, and how I pined and longed for home! It is a marvel how differently constituted people are, with the same blood in their veins, too.

"Bell," said my aunt, one autumn night, when preparations were going on for some famous ball, "will you have the kindness to go to the greenhouse and cut the flowers for Marguerite's hair? She wears natural flowers to-night, and I can't trust to Felice. Look at her dress, please, and select what you think will suit—your taste is perfect."

Marguerite threw away her novel, and shook down her black tresses as I was leaving the room.

"Bell, don't fail to cut some heliotrope, please. Captain Carruthers is here, and he dotes on heliotrope. By the by, you remember Captain Carruthers, don't you?"

My foolish heart gave a sudden thump, and the tell-tale blood rushed to my cheeks. How well I remembered him. Papa's best friend—the friend who stood beside his dying pillow.

I remembered his parting words, too, when he left me standing beside the new-made grave under the old willows.

"No words of mine can give you any comfort now, Bell, but time heals the sorest wounds. I regret to leave you, but my regiment goes abroad to-morrow. Good-by. One day I hope to meet you again!"

But in all the dreary years that followed I had heard no word from him.

"You remember him, of course," continued my handsome cousin; "he used to be at the Hall a great deal in your father's time. Well, we met him last night. He's been here a week; and he's a millionaire, Bell. You know old Carruthers, of Carruthers Place? Well, he is dead, and the Captain inherits the fortune, you see. So don't forget the heliotrope. I know it is not becoming—purple suits my creole complexion least—but I remember what a fancy Carruthers always had for heliotrope, and he's worth pleasing, you know."

Aunt Edmonton laughed as she rose and shook out her lace flounces.

"Wear the heliotrope by all means; but you need not feel a bit anxious. You secured the Captain and his fortune last night; that rose silk and the diamonds did the business. I never saw a man more infatuated. Well, he's a good match. I've not a word to say against it; no better family than he comes of, and Carruthers Place is a grand old home. Ah, there is his carriage below now; I'll go down until you are ready. Do make haste, Bell. And I wish you would be obliging enough to do up Rite's hair this evening; you are so much more skilful than Felice. And look over her jewels, please; I think that pearl and opal set will match her dress perfectly."

I hurried down to the greenhouse. Heartache was no new sensation, but somehow my pain seemed intolerable as I made my way down the dim aisle, the gorgeous tropical blossoms filling me with their rank odors.

I forgot Rite's flowers, forgot her waiting toilet, forgot everything but my own suffering. An aloe tree in full blossom, standing alone like some weird necromancer, caught my eye, and I sank down at its roots, and burst into tears. I seemed to see papa's grave, covered with yellow autumn leaves. I heard the wash of the waves, the murmur of the pine trees. The bustle of the gaslit streets drove me to frenzy.

"This life is killing me; I must go home to the old hall and papa's grave."

A hand touched my arm as the words broke from my lips.

"I beg your pardon, madam; you seem in distress. Can I help——good heaven, Bell! is it you?"

"Captain Carruthers!"

I leaped to my feet, and we stood face to face. He was bronzed and bearded, but the frank, kind eyes were unchanged. A wild impulse seized me to clasp his hands and tell him how lonely and friendless I was; but woman's pride, stronger even than her love, stifled the desire at its very birth. I bowed coldly.

"Why, Bell, you haven't changed; only you look wan and sad. I am so glad to meet you. I have written again and again, until I fancied you were dead. How is it that I find you in Paris?"

"No matter; I bid you good evening, Captain Carruthers."

The glad, kind, handsome eyes widened with wonder as I darted away.

* * * * *

"Dear me, Bell, I thought you'd never come. I didn't like to keep Carruthers waiting. Gracious goodness! where are the flowers?"

"I didn't get them, and I can't dress you, Marguerite. I am going to my room."

"Why, what is the matter? Are you ill?"

I did not pause to answer. At noon on the following day my aunt summoned me to her presence.

"You need not read to-day, Bell; I want to talk to you. You met Captain Carruthers in the green-house last night?"

"Yes, by accident."

Aunt Edmonton toyed with the tassels of her morning robe, and for the first time, to my knowledge, showed signs of embarrassment.

"By accident, of course. I didn't suppose you mistook my meaning, my dear. He's a fine, handsome fellow, and he and Rite are well matched; don't you think so? Well, my dear, his coming changes our plans in a measure. We may remain here for the winter; and your health seems to be failing, and you don't like Paris, Bell, and I thought perhaps——"

"You thought you would send me home, Aunt Edmonton. Pray do; I meant to ask permission to go this very day—I'm dreadfully homesick."

She laughed genially, and, crossing the room, kissed me with more kindness than she had ever shown.

"Then you shall have permission, my dear. Mrs. Montague, an old friend of mine, leaves Paris to-night, and you shall go under her charge."

I went, leaving giddy Paris behind me with a feeling of relief.

But when I reached the old home, how desolate it was. Winter came, and the white snow filled the hollows and crowned the hills. Letters from Aunt Edmonton informed me that they were in Rome, with Captain Carruthers as escort, and hinted at a great wedding when spring came. Did I care? What was Captain Carruthers to me? My father's friend, and I must always regard him with gratitude; and Marguerite would make him a stately, beautiful bride. I wished them much joy. Yet through all the winter days and nights my heartache never ceased or abated.

Spring came, and the skies grew soft and tender. The snows melted, leaving the hills green and the sunny hollows sweet with violets. One March morning I went out to rake the flower-beds. The hyacinths and buttercups were already above the mold, and here and there a green tulip leaf could be seen. The winds blew warm from the south, the sunshine glimmered like gold, and in one of the willows over papa's grave a blackbird sang. I threw aside my rake and sat down to cry, not in hopeless sorrow, but in new-born faith.

A step crunched on the gravel of the walk, a tall shadow fell athwart the glimmering sunshine. I started to my feet.

"Captain Carruthers!"

"Good morning, Miss Edmonton."

"Has my aunt come?"

"No; I left her in Venice."

"And you—why are you here?"

The kind eyes smiled down upon me full of sad reproach.

"To say good-by at once, Bell, if my company is not wanted. My regiment is ordered off again, but I could not go without having one last look at your face."

The blood in my heart seemed to burn into my cheeks.

"Captain Carruthers!"

"Well, Bell?"

"Miss Edmonton, if you please."

"Very well; Miss Edmonton, then, if you admire it more. We were friends once; why should we not be now?"

"Oh, we are friends; we shall be something nearer soon; when you marry my cousin Marguerite."

"I shall never marry your cousin Marguerite."

"What! has she refused you?"

"I have never asked her—have never wanted her. Oh, my darling, your eyes tell me something that gives my heart hope. But I never forgot you. I wrote dozens of letters, but not one of them reached you. I only guessed at the truth a few weeks ago, and I am here. I loved you years ago, I love you now—shall always love you. Tell me the truth. If they hadn't intercepted my letters and made you think me false, would you have cared for me as ever?"

I could not for my life say no.

"I thought you were engaged to Marguerite. I was sure——"

"You thought wrong. Marguerite is a fine woman, and marries a title this summer. My darling I have loved no woman but you."

How the March sunshine glittered, what notes of delight the birds sang, swinging in the old tree! The whole universe seemed to have undergone a sudden transformation, and my heartache became a thing of the past.

Elephant Quotations.

The skill now displayed in teaching elephants is certainly wonderful, and a herd of these animals is now necessary to any first-class caravan. This has led to an extensive traffic, and the London importer sends the following advertisement to one of our leading dailies:

"Burmese Elephants.—Healthy young Burmese elephants for sale; four and one-half feet and under at £175 each; over four and one-half to five feet at £200 each; delivered in London or Liverpool; prices of animals from five feet to full grown on application."

The price is certainly reasonable, being equal to $875 for the small size and $1,000 for the large. When one considers that this is not one-tenth the price often paid for a fine horse, one can not but acknowledge that it is cheap enough. Barnum has invested more money in elephants than any other private individual, and he has made it highly remunerative. At one time he had one of these animals harnessed before a plow and kept in his field at Iranistan. The Boston ears passed the place daily and the elephant became a good advertisement. Barnum has probably put a quarter million in this kind of stock, including Jumbo, whose cost has been advertised at $50,000. It is not probable that it was one-half of that sum. A well-trained performing elephant is worth $10,000—that is, it will attract enough to make such an investment remunerative—but show property is entirely "fancy stock." There is no fixed valuation. Adam Forepaugh, Jr., is one of the best elephant-trainers in the country, and his skill has enabled him to rival Barnum. The latter, with all his genius, never trained anything. He pays good salaries, however, to experts, and before he purchased Jumbo he made an engagement with his keeper to accompany him to America. This man has been with the famous elephant for nearly twenty years, and controls him as easily as he would a child.—New York letter.

IN an address to young men Dr. W. Pratt, of London, says that married life is by far the most healthy. In 1,000 married men of 25 to 30 years of age there are six deaths; 1,000 bachelors furnish ten deaths, and 1,000 widowers twenty-two deaths. In young men married before 20 years the figures are unfavorable, being fifty per 1,000. In unmarried men under 20 the rate is but seven per 1,000. If girls marry before 20 a like mortality befalls them. Married people from 18 to 20 die as fast as people from 60 to 70. After 21 marriage should be contracted as soon as practicable.

AN idler is twice a thief; he not only steals his own time, but hangs around and tries to steal yours.

The Great Crime.

If it is the unpardonable sin to have a sectional issue—why, the greatest crime in history was that of the military suppression of the Southern rebellion.—Commercial Gazette.

The military suppression of the rebellion was all right. The "greatest crime" came afterward. It was the attempt of the Republican party to force the principles of that party upon an unwilling people. To this end State lines were rubbed out and military despotisms established. Under the devilish system the people of the South were plundered, and an army of partisans, carpet-baggers and desperadoes were turned loose with the sort of commissions that Jack Sheppard and Captain Kyd had in their pockets when they roamed and plundered at their own sweet will. Moses, ex-Governor of South Carolina, now in a Massachusetts prison for swindling, was a legitimate outgrowth of the system. He was only a type, however, of a large and powerful class. The Republican party is responsible for the entire system and its hellish products. Is it any wonder that there is a "solid South?" It is solid, however, only against the Republican party, and it ought to be. That party is essentially a sectional organization. It was conceived, born, and bred with that idea, and it can never be anything else. Sectionalism is in its warp and woof. To be a healthy, patriotic, national party, it must die and be made all over again. It should have died in 1876; but, gathering life anew from a series of well-planned villainies and rascalities, it managed to stagger along until last fall, when, we trust, it received its death wound. It is an unhealthy, unpatriotic, sectional organization, and it must die. The founders of the republic never contemplated such a monstrosity.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

An "Irreconcilable" Silenced.

The wail of the New York Tribune over the breaking up by President Cleveland of "the best Consular service the country has ever had" is thus effectually silenced by the New York Evening Post:

Investigation shows that in the short period between Garfield's inauguration and his assassination Mr. Blaine made no less than thirty-seven changes in the Consulates, discharging a full fifth of the men whom he found in office, and doing it in almost every case to pay off personal and political debts. "President Arthur made few changes in Consular appointments," continues the Tribune. The record shows that ninety-seven of the consuls whom Mr. Cleveland found in office were appointed to their posts by President Arthur, and that a large proportion of these appointments were those of new men, replacing incumbents who had been removed solely to make room for personal and political friends of the administration. Mr. Cleveland "has turned out consuls by the score," goes on the Tribune. The truth is that the whole number of new consuls appointed to date is only forty, as against thirty-seven during a similar period in 1881. The whole number of consuls is now considerably larger than it was four years ago, so that Mr. Cleveland has actually made a smaller number of changes proportionally than Mr. Garfield when Blaine was "premier."

Senator Beck's Sentiments.

Senator Beck is a sound philosopher. In speaking of the administration to-day to your correspondent, he said: "I am not going to quarrel with the President or the administration simply because my special friends or favorites are not appointed to office. That would be childish and absurd. I have stood by my party in defeat and battled for its principles for twenty-four years, and I am certainly not going to oppose the first Democratic administration we have had in all that time, simply because the men I recommend for office are not appointed. When I split or oppose the administration it will be on a question where some important principle is involved, and not on a question of patronage. I have not had any patronage to bestow since I have been in Congress—nearly sixteen years—and as I have stood it that long I guess I can stand it the balance of my time in official life, if it is necessary. If, in the judgment of the President, other Kentucky Democrats are more fit and deserving to hold office than those I indorse, I have not a word to say. I believe he is an honest and conscientious man, and tries his best to fill the offices solely for the public good. I know he has a hard time enough to do this, and I shall be the last man to throw any obstacle in his way, even if I do not get a friend appointed during his entire administration.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A CRANK tariff paper, comparing the commercial policies of America and England, says: "An industrial people can learn the lessons of peace and industry from their ledgers under a high tariff grist as effectually as under free trade." And so they can. But what lessons are to be drawn from the ledgers of the protected manufacturers of every variety who, for the past three years, have been passing through a season of lockouts, strikes, depression, and bankruptcy?—Chicago Times.

THE Republican papers appear to have suddenly suspended their abuse of the rebel brigadiers. This is probably due to consideration for the feelings of that distinguished Confederate Brigadier, Mr. Wise, whom the Republicans have just nominated for Governor of Virginia at the dictation of the late "Gen. Lee's right-hand man," Gen. Mahone.

THE TORNADO'S TRACK.

Two Steamers Wrecked and Lives Lost by a Terrific Cyclone at Philadelphia.

Miles of Property Destroyed by the Fierce Wind in Central Delaware.

A terrific cyclone, sweeping up the Delaware River, struck this city near Greenwich Point, demolishing a portion of the works of the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company and injuring several employes. It then took a course across the river, wrecking the river steamer Major Reybold and the ferryboat Peerless. The storm blew Pilot Emery Townsend and Capt. Eugene Reybold, of the steamer Reybold, into the river, drowning the former and painfully injuring the Captain. The Peerless was swept clean, almost to the water's edge. When the Major Reybold left her dock for Salem, N. J., she had on board about fifty passengers, although, as no tickets had been sold, it is impossible to ascertain the exact number. There were also about fourteen officers and deck-hands. Of this number of people upon the wrecked boat it does not appear that any lives were lost except that of the pilot. B. I. Warner, one of the passengers, describes the scene. He was standing on the upper deck and saw the black storm approaching, but as it moved rather slowly he supposed it was a rainstorm.

When it struck the boat he discovered that its immense force came from its rotary motion. He and several others were thrown through a hole to the lower deck, and all the upper works were swept away like chaff. The confusion among the passengers was indescribable, and several of them jumped into the river; but Mr. Warner believes that all of them were rescued. While the cyclone was upon the vessel, everything was black as the blackest night. Sofas were broken to splinters, and carpets torn to shreds in the cabin, as if they had been paper. The cyclone, he thinks, lasted about a minute, and, after it passed, the vessel rolled and pitched frightfully in the great waves, and came near swamping. The storm then passed over to the Jersey side, striking John Dalogue's ship-yards, below Kaighn's Point, and destroying the buildings of the establishment. It then took a course along the New Jersey River, demolishing all the buildings in its path up to Bridge avenue, Camden. At this point the cyclone took an easterly course to Fifth street, Camden, embracing in its path all that section of the city between Second and Fifth streets to the Delaware River, which washes the southern section of the city. Passing over the river, skirting Petty's Island, the storm passed over to that part of the Twenty-fifth Ward of Philadelphia known as Richmond. In its ravages in Camden scores of dwelling houses were unroofed and some of them thrown down, and the damage to the business property along the river front is enormous. Hundreds of families were rendered homeless, and one victim, Charles Daizey, was killed outright at the American Dredging Company's wharf. Another, Harry Stevens, had his leg cut off by a flying piece of timber, and will probably die. The path of the storm through Richmond was marked with death and destruction. Its track was almost due north from the Port Richmond coal-wharves. About 150 dwelling-houses were wrecked, or so badly damaged as to be rendered unfit for habitation, and 200 families were driven from their homes to be cared for by their neighbors.

A number of people were seriously and some fatally injured. A girl of ten years, Lizzie McVey, was killed at her home, No. 1721 Melvale street, in sight of her mother, who was herself pinned to the floor by fallen rafters a few feet from her dying child.

The cyclone is described by those who witnessed its progress up the river as an immense black, cone-shaped cloud, with its apex resting upon the water and its base mingling with the rain-clouds which hung in dense masses from the sky. It is impossible as yet to estimate the amount of damage done. The following are the names of the killed and injured, as far as can be ascertained: Dead—Emery Townsend, of Salem, N. J., pilot of the steamboat Major Reybold; Charles Daizey, aged 49, a ship-carpenter, killed instantly by flying timbers at the wharf of the American Dredging Company, Camden; Lizzie McVey, aged 10, crushed to death between timbers at her home, No. 1721 Melvale street, Philadelphia.

Injured (on steamboat Major Reybold)—Morris Doyle, engineer, slightly; Capt. Reybold, severely cut; Welch, a deck hand, severely cut; W. Gesner, a passenger, temple artery severed, injuries serious.

Injured at Camden—Harry Stevens, aged 21, probably fatally injured, his right leg severed below the knee by flying timbers; Stewart Johnson (colored), of the dredging tug Pacific, seriously injured about the face and body; John Welcher, injured seriously about the head; Benjamin Smith, right arm broken and injured internally; Alonzo Maxwell, aged 16, injured by falling walls; Charles Thompson, manager of the Camden Tool Works, injured in the face and neck by falling walls; Jacob Miller, leg broken; Freedom Peak, head cut; Elmer Locke, bruised about the body; Mrs. Josephine McKinley, cut about the face and body; John Brown, injured; John Silk, head badly cut.

In Philadelphia—Annie McVey, aged 50, mother of the dead child Lizzie McVey, badly cut about the body; Annie McVey, 15, cut about the face and limbs; Francis Golden, aged 24, badly injured by falling timber; Michael Kent, aged 55, back broken; William A. Harb, of Short & Harb, hosiery manufacturers, struck by falling brick, causing depression of the brain; it is thought he will die.

The following employes at Short & Harb's mill were also injured: Annie Baitz, aged 16, arm broken; Annie Baren, aged 16; Emma Power, 19; Emma Thomas, 18; Emma Michener, 19; John Thornton, 15.

IN DELAWARE.

[Smyrna (Del.) dispatch.]

A terrible cyclone visited this section this afternoon, totally destroying property for miles in a swath 300 feet wide. Stock was killed, and orchards, cornfields, etc., were destroyed. No lives were lost.

"LES MISERABLES."

Observation on the Masterpiece of Modern Fiction by the Great French Writer.

The deadly weight of civilization to those who are below presses sensibly on our shoulders as we read "Les Miserables." A sort of mocking indignation grows upon us as we find society rejecting, again and again, the services of the most serviceable; setting Jean Valjean to pick oakum, casting Galileo into prison, even crucifying Christ. There is a haunting and horrible sense of insecurity about the book. The terror we thus feel is a terror for the machinery of law, that we can hear tearing, in the dark, good and bad between its formidable wheels with the iron stolidity of all machinery, human or divine. This terror incarnates itself sometimes, and leaps horribly out upon us; as when the crouching mendicant looks up, and Jean Valjean, in the light of the street lamp, recognizes the face of the detective; as when the lantern of the patrol flashes suddenly through the darkness of the sewer; or as when the fugitive comes forth at last at evening, by the quiet river side, and finds the police there also, waiting stolidly for vice, and stolidly willing to take virtue instead. The whole book is full of oppression and full of prejudice, which is the great cause of oppression. We have the prejudices of M. Gillenormand, the prejudices in revolt that defend the barricade, and the thorned prejudices that carry it by storm. And then we have the admirable but ill-written character of Javert, the man who had made a religion of the police and would not survive the moment when he learned that there was another truth outside of laws; a just creation over which the reader will do well to ponder. With so gloomy a design this great work is still full of life and light and love. The portrait of the good bishop is one of the most agreeable things in modern literature. The whole scene at Montfermeil is full of the charm that Hugo knew so well how to throw about children. Who can forget the passage where Cosette, sent out at night to draw water, stands in admiration before the illumined booth and the huckster behind—"lui faisait un peu l'effet d'etre le Pere eternal?" The pathos of the forlorn sabot laid trustingly by the chimney in expectation of the Santa Claus that was not takes us fairly by the throat; there is nothing in Shakspeare that touches the heart more nearly. The loves of Cosette and Marius are very pure and pleasant, and we cannot refuse our affection to Gavroche, although we may make a mental reservation of our profound disbelief in his existence. Take it for all in all, there are few books in the world that can be compared with it. —R. L. Stevenson.

The Unsociability of Bicyclists.

The bicycle has doubtless become one of the greatest promoters of healthy out-door exercise among our young men, as well as some of the older ones—but there is necessarily nothing social in it; in fact, it is the most selfish conception possible. Think of a family man buying a bicycle and starting off to ride while the wife and children are left at home on the veranda to admire the grace and ease with which their lord and master wheels off to get exhilarating whiffs of fresh country air. The economical young man mounts his wheel on a fine afternoon, and whirls off to the residence of his lady love, leans his steed against the front fence, and spends the summer evening on the piazza, while the young lady is, no doubt, thinking of her possibly old-fashioned but more fortunate companion, who has gone out on the road behind a good trotter, to breathe the refreshing evening air. The one wheel is far more economical in every way, and its enthusiastic if not fanatical admirers, no doubt, get much good from it; but, in an article on social recreations, they can not hope for high praise for their favorite machine; it certainly is not a family invention. When Mr. Edison will invent a motor which may be hung beneath the seat of a social tricycle, with a small seat behind for the children, and by which the whole load may whirl off to the country without danger of running away at the first railway crossing, or the necessity for grooming and feeding on the return, then the family may sing the praises of the "cycle."—Milton Bradley, in Good Housekeeping.

Why Hugo Slighted the Cheese.

Jeanne Hugo, the granddaughter and the idol of the poet, having manifested a strong objection to learning the alphabet, her mother, thinking to sharpen her energies, told her one day that until she had learned the first twelve letters she would have no dessert. The first thing the child did was to pour out her troubles to grandpapa, ever ready to listen, but on this occasion powerless to interfere. However, to lighten the privation of his little darling, he proposed to her that they should suffer together—he would touch no dessert so long as she had to abstain. Jeanne approved the arrangement. For many days Victor Hugo persistently refused dessert, alleging various reasons for not partaking of it. But one evening, Jeanne having gone to bed before dinner, a certain kind of cheese, of which he was particularly fond, was placed upon the table. The savory odor assailed his nostrils, and Hugo had almost broken his engagement, when he suddenly remembered the solemn promise made to the child, and checked himself, much to the amazement of his daughter-in-law, Jeanne's mother. That lady, suspecting something mysterious, appealed to him to tell her the meaning of his strange behavior. Seeing there was no help for it, Victor Hugo very meekly cast down his eyes and made a clean breast of it.—Max O'Rell.

"O, Lor', Hit 'Im Again!"

In the early days of Methodism in Scotland, a certain congregation, where there was but one rich man, desired to build a new chapel. A church meeting was held. The old rich Scotchman rose and said: "Brethren, we dinna need a new chapel; I'll give £5 for repairs."

Just then a bit of plaster falling from the ceiling hit him on the head.

Looking up and seeing how ba it was, he said: "Brethren, its worse 'thon thought; I'll make it 50 pun'."

"Oh, Lord," exclaimed a devoted brother on a back seat, "hit 'im again!"

There are many human tabernacles which are in sore need of radical building over, but we putter and fuss and repair in spots without satisfactory results. It is only when we are personally alarmed at the real danger that we act independently and do the right thing. Then it is that we most keenly regret because we did not sooner use our judgment, follow the advice born of the experience of others, and jump away from our perils.

Thousands of persons who will read this paragraph are in abject misery to-day, when they might be in a satisfactory condition. They are weak, lifeless, full of odd aches and pains, and every year they know they are getting worse, even though the best doctors are patching them in spots. The origin of these aches and pains is the kidneys and liver, and if they would build those all over new with Warner's safe cure, as millions have done, and cease investing their money in miserably unsuccessful patchwork, they would be well and happy, and would bless the day when the Lord "hit 'em" and indicated the common-sense course for them to pursue.—London Press.

Gatling Guns.

The Gatling gun weighs about 1,500 pounds and is precisely of the same design as the ordinary canon. There are ten chambers that revolve in the barrel proper, and each chamber has an independent lock. The main barrel is eight inches in diameter. The size of cartridge used is that of the ordinary forty-five Government rifle caliber. Each feed drum contains 240 rounds. The firing is done by operating a crank; the cartridge is exploded by a hammer which works with such great rapidity that 120 cartridges are fired in a minute. The movement of the gun can be so adjusted as to make it either stationary or oscillating, so that the gun practice can become either scattered or centrifugal in its execution. At 700 yards the Gatling gun has been known to hit a 12x15 foot target 396 times out of 400 shots. At 1,200 yards 413 out of 500 shots have struck a 9x25-foot target. To show the rapidity with which the gun can be worked, it might be explained that the time occupied in coming to action front from trot and firing is ten seconds; limber rear, mount and off, thirteen seconds.

A NEW ORLEANS paper refers editorially to the wonderful restoration to health of Mr. T. Posey, druggist, 225 Canal street, that city, who some time ago was prostrated by an excruciating attack of sciatica. After much suffering his wife applied St. Jacobs Oil, which cured him promptly and entirely.

The Industries of Japan.

Japanese industries are mostly conducted in small workshops, with possibly the aid of a primitive water-wheel, fan-making and the manufacture of porcelain, paper, pigments, and lacquers constituting a large portion of the whole. Nearly all kinds of ores are abundant in Japan, but mining and metallurgy, although practiced to some extent for centuries, do not take the prominence that would be expected, when we remember that some of the most exquisite specimens of hammered iron and bronze work to be found in imported collections to-day are the productions of Japanese artists of a thousand years ago.

Wherever Malaria Exists,

The bilious are its certain prey. In intermittent and remittent fever, dumb ague and ague cake, the liver is always seriously affected, and the blood contaminated with bile. One of the chief reasons why Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is such a sure defense against chills and fever and every form of malarial disease, is, that it does away with liability to the disease, by reforming irregularity of the biliary organ in advance of the arrival of the season when the disease is prevalent. There is no finer fortifying preparative for those about visiting or emigrating to a locality where the miasma-taint exists. There is no certain immunity from disease in an endemic or epidemic form, to be secured by the use of the average tonics and anti-spasmodics. But where quinine fails the Bitters succeeds both in preventing and curing. Moreover, it removes every vestige of dyspepsia, and overcomes constipation, rheumatism, inactivity of the kidneys and bladder, and tranquillizes and strengthens the nervous system.

Swearing.

"Your Mr. Brown is a queer kind of a preacher," said a Methodist layman to a Presbyterian of the same standing.

"Why?" queried the Presbyterian.

"Because he swears, when it is necessary, for he told me so himself."

"It's true, too, but there's nothing wrong in that."

"There isn't? Well, that's strange doctrine for a Christian. I'd like to know how you explain it."

"Simplest thing in the world. He swears when it is necessary, but, my dear brother, it is never necessary to swear, except on the witness stand."

There is a moral to this story, which you can have, if you find.—Merchant Traveler.

Many women in the land who are acquainted with Dr. Pierce only through his "Favorite Prescription," bless him with all their hearts, for he has brought them the panacea for all those chronic ailments peculiar to their sex, such as leucorrhœa, prolapsus and other displacements, ulceration, "internal fever," blunting, tendency to internal cancer, and other ailments. Blowing Up Hell Gate has been a laborious and costly work, but the end justifies the effort. Obstruction in any important channel means disaster. Obstructions in the organs of the human body bring inevitable disease. They must be cleared away, or physical wreck will follow. Keep the liver in order, and the pure blood courses through the body, conveying health, strength, and life; let it become disordered and the channels are clogged with impurities, which result in disease and death. No other medicine equals Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" for acting upon the liver and purifying the blood.

AN INTERERESTING LETTER

From Mr. Harry W. Olmstead, Proofreader of "The Times."

The following letter is encouraging and worthy of careful perusal, coming, as it does, from so reliable a source, unsolicited. It contains facts of great value:

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 12, 1884.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—For ten years I have been a sufferer from disease of the kidneys, at times so much so as to make life a burden. During this time several of the best physicians in Indiana have treated me with little or no success, until I had almost despaired of relief. I then tried several advertised remedies, but nothing produced the desired result until a friend who had been relieved induced me to give DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY a trial. I did so. After taking one bottle I began to experience relief. I took another and was charmed with the result. In all, I have taken four bottles, and can truly say I feel like a new man. I am confident I am entirely cured, as it has been several months since I took the last medicine, and there is no indication of a return of the disease. I have recommended your remedy to several suffering friends who have also been relieved. I write this to relieve my many friends to you for the cure which has been effected in my case, and also desire to say I think suffering humanity owes you a debt of gratitude for your wonderful scientific discovery. I shall do all that in me lies to let all sufferers know where they may find relief, and thereby in some measure remunerate you for the good you have done me.

Wishing you long life and prosperity, and thanking you for prolonging my life, I am

HARRY W. OLMSTEAD.

COUNTERFEITERS BEWARE.

A Michigan Concern Enjoined.

[From the Rochester Morning Herald.]

The following injunction has been obtained by the Hop Bitters Company, of Rochester, N. Y., against Collatinus D. Warner, of Reading, Michigan, prohibiting him from manufacturing or selling "German Hop Bitters:"

The President of the United States of America to Collatinus D. Warner, of Reading, Mich., his servants, workmen, salesmen, and agents, and each and every of them:

Whereas, it has been represented unto the Justices of our Circuit Court, the Hon. Stanley Matthews, and the Hon. Henry B. Brown, at Detroit, within and for said District, sitting as a Court of Chancery, that you, Collatinus D. Warner, are manufacturing and selling a medicine named German Hop Bitters, in fraudulent imitation of the Hop Bitters made and sold by complainant; your said medicine being devised, calculated, and intended to mislead the public into purchasing such counterfeit goods as the manufacture of the complainant.

We, therefore, in consideration of the premises, do strictly enjoin you, the said Collatinus D. Warner, and all and every the persons before named, from using the words "Hop Bitters" on any fluids contained in bottles so as to induce the belief that such fluids are made by complainant; and further, from manufacturing, selling, or offering for sale any bitters or other fluids in the bottles and with the labels, and in the general form in which you were manufacturing and selling the bitters called by you German Hop Bitters, on the filing of the bill; or in any other bottles, or with any other labels contrived or designed to represent or induce the belief that the bitters or fluids sold by you are the goods of the complainant, until the further order of the Court. * * *

Witness,
THE HONORABLE MORRISON R. WAITE,
Chief Justice of the United States.
At Detroit, this fifteenth day of July, A. D. 1885.
[L. S.] Walter S. Harsha, Clerk.

Prosecute the Swindlers.

If when you call for Hop Bitters the Druggist hands out anything but "Hop Bitters" with a green cluster of Hops on white label, shun that Druggist as you would a viper; and if he has taken your money for a bogus stuff, indict him for the fraud and sue him for damages for the swindle, and we will reward you liberally for the conviction.

See U. S. Court injunction against C. D. Warner, Reading, Mich., and all his salesmen, agents, druggists, and other imitators.

HAGAN'S
Magnolia Balm
is a secret aid to beauty. Many a lady owes her freshness to it, who would rather not tell, and you can't tell.

Around the County.

Bay Springs.

A welcome to the pleasant weather.

The recent rains were greatly needed here.

Mrs. D. Hunt is slowly recovering from a severe illness.

Mrs. Moore, of Lagrange, Ind., is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Jas. Slater.

N. J. DeBar has taken his family to Horton's Bay to reside while he is building the Horton's Bay school house.

A. Cadwell has moved his family to Bear Lake for the summer. He is running a boat on the lake.

Wm. Fluhrer had his arm badly injured in the Boise mill last week. It was dislocated at the elbow, and the neck of one bone fractured.

John Hankey and family have again located here, this being the third time. He was once a resident of Boyne, and moved away, so that this is the fourth time he has sought the shores of Pine lake after sojourning in Kansas and other places.

Hon. A. R. Chapman and family, who have spent some time visiting his father, H. B. Chapman, have returned to their home in Hillsdale. Mrs. Chapman was delighted, as all visitors are, with the fine view which Bay Springs commands of Pine lake, and the beautiful scenery that frames that great and grand mirror of nature's manufacture.

Ephraim Shay, formerly of Cadillac, has purchased the Addis property, and has moved his family here. He has also moved the boiler, engine, machinery and other fixtures of his machine shop which will be put into working order soon. The Addis saw mill is to be fitted up ready for business and the railroad rebuilt with a wide guage track. Bay Springs is rejoicing over Mr. Shay's coming here.

Ironton.

Times are booming in Ironton.

The furnace started Monday.

The Narragansett came in loaded with ore Saturday.

Mrs. Walter Manney's music class is progressing very rapidly under her skillful management.

Mr. Chas. H. Webster and family started for Wisconsin Tuesday. Mr. W. was principal of the Ironton school for the past term. His many friends wish him a pleasant journey.

Mr. Anderson and family will start for New York City in about two weeks.

There was a dance in Schoffen Hall Saturday night but very poorly attended.

Thomas Mackey of this place has gone to Mancelona to visit his brother.

Mr. Henry Pervis and wife were in town on Wednesday last, visiting friends.

Mr. Geo. O. Jones, of Richmond Va. has returned to Mancelona, to act as "Commercial Tourist," for John Otis & Co., manufacturers of brooms, brushes and charcoal pig iron. His many friends welcomed him back and are glad to learn of the remarkable success he is having. He stopped at the Pioneer House, Ironton, where he made it his home for two years. He was manager of the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s store and managed it very skillfully with the aid of his broom stick brigade. He will get to the front and make a clean sweep if he has half a chance.

Burgess.

The school in district No 4, closed last Saturday. It has been taught the last two terms by Mrs. Gibson and has earned the reputation of being the best school in town.

Mr. Ezra Furgeson is the happy man: it's a boy.

Rev. Daniel Pierce lost another horse last week,

A bad week for harvesting has been passed.

New potatoes are rotting very bad.

Last Saturday was a red-letter day for the pupils at Maple Grove school. The teacher furnished candy for them.

The Hamlin boys are busy with their teams, hauling bark.

District No. 6 has decided not to build a school house this fall.

Bedwin.

Rev. Joseph H. Cater and wife of Celina, Ohio, are the guests of Mrs. Robert Bedwin. Mr. Cater is a brother of Mrs. Bedwin.

Mrs. Wm. Myers, of Fairfield, Michigan, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Mead Benson, of Bedwin.

"The Master Calleth For Thee."

BY MARY H. GRISWOLD.

Through the ripple of the moments,
And the louder surge of years;
Through the prattle of the children
And the grief of woman's tears;
'Midst the thunder of the battle
When peace crowns the bitter strife,
Everywhere, the Master calleth,
Wooing to the better life.

Are there sick hearts? see! He poureth
Ever more the healing balm,—
And to those who conquer evil
Gives the victor's fadeless palm.
Lo! the fields are white with harvest
Waiting for the sickle's gleam;
(Days of sowing then the reaping,
With faith's trusting song between.)

Will you hear his silver accents,
Answer "Father, here am I!"
Bear aloft the temperance banner
While the eager throng press by!
Hopeless wives, and sad-eyed children,
Reaching mute, despairing hand,
Pleading ever "Prohibition,"
Work for God—Home—Native Land."

"Found Dead."

I had been keeping watch with a sick child, a bitter January night. The air seemed all ice, the sky was moonless, starless and dark. The sidewalks like glass, so frozen were they, and the few who were abroad at midnight wisely deserted them for the car tracks.

How glad I was when it was day light once more, but recalled with a shiver the dreariness of the night when I read in the local column of a morning journal a paragraph headed "Found Dead—Unknown—An inquest was held, the coroner's verdict, Died of exposure and intemperance."

Some additional comments there were—a few cents in his vest pocket, a newspaper advertisement, a fragment of a letter in a woman's writing, evidently from a person of culture, some traces of manly beauty on the face, notwithstanding the marks of dissipation—and—that was all. I watched for the sequel; it came: "Not having been identified or claimed, the young man who was found dead in the street on the night of—was buried at the expense of the city." We all know what kind of burials are these.

"Died of intemperance and exposure." It should have been, "Murdered by rum." We think sadly of the heights from which he came step by step to such a strait. Cared for by a woman of culture—"once"—ah! once, loving hearts shrined him. "Unknown," save by God and His angels, and yet there may be somewhere a home where he is still watched for—we cannot tell. "Still some traces of manly beauty on his face"—the face on which once kisses have pressed—once a pure child face.

Perchance as life's sands ran out that winter's night, a touch of the Holy Spirit may have moved to prayer the anguished heart, and back on the winter wind may have come the answer, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." And who can tell but the peace of the forgiven may have left on the dead face something of childhood's rest and purity shining out through the marring and blighting of the rum fiend's seal. "Dead and unknown!" Alas for the nameless graves, the blighted lives, the broken hearts!

Similar announcements are not rare in our dailies and weeklies, and yet they seem to make so little impression on the great reading masses. I wonder why we should not collect all such items, some in each state and bring them out in such a form as to rouse, convict, convince with these facts the thoughtful public of the humanity at least of putting away by law the evil traffic, which has written of so many who, but for this, might have been good, royal, useful and great—"found dead!"—Mrs. Georgia Hulse McLeod.

In Nebraska, where high license reigns at $1,000 uniformly, the Methodist says of its workings: "That it has in the least, curtailed the drinking customs of the people, no careful observer will claim. The temperance reform is a moral one, and high license has no more effect on the vice of liquor-selling and drinking than a tax on brimstone would have on the condition of the lost."

The Regatta.

The storm of last Thursday promised to materially injure the regatta in Charlevoix, by detaining the passenger boats from their usual time, thus cutting off the great crowd which was expected; and a postponement was announced. Before noon of Friday, however, the wind subsided, and boats began to run. The committee reconsidered their postponement, and hastily prepared to begin the sports at 3 o'clock instead of at 1 as previously advertised. A message was sent to Petoskey and Harbor Springs to prepare for coming on the steamer Grand Rapids, which had started for the latter place. In Charlevoix a very respectable crowd had gathered from the surrounding country, in addition to all those at the resorts, some of whom had delayed their departure for home in order to witness the sports here. Before the last boat arrived all necessary arrangements had been made and the sports were well begun, the successful details of which we clip from the Daily Resorter as follows:

About three o'clock the yachts took a flying start at the end of the cut and began the yacht race on Pine Lake. They ran to the first buoy near Two Mile Point with a fresh breeze following right behind them. Starting pretty much together, they now began scattering out and rounded the buoy with the Teaser, of Boyne City, leading, Mr Cook's cutter, the Lula B, not far behind, with a Mackinaw boat, the Petrel, and the Banner all in a bunch, the rest straggling. As they stood across the lake on the starboard tack the distance between the different boats increased, and a few changed positions. Close hauled though they all were, they could not fetch the second turning stake near Oyster Point, and while some ran on into the Bay before coming about, the Petrel and one no two others took a short tack to reach it, and seemed to gain by it. This second stake was passed with the Teaser half a mile ahead, Lula B., Petrel and Banner following in order named. Beating homeward to the starting point the race was very interesting, though the only change of positions was that the Banner crept slowly up, and passed the Petrel, the race ending Teaser 1st, Lula B. 2nd, Banner 3d, Petrel 4th, others strung out behind.

The rowing races were interesting to the friends of the participants, but were not particularly noteworthy for skill displayed, except the double scull race in which there were three starters Robert Sessions and Herbert Gates, of Chicago resort, Beardsley and Summers, of Charlevoix resort, Zess and Wheat, of Charlevoix, the boats coming in in the order named. The Chicago boys pulled a clean, strong steady stroke, which put them at the head when half way across Round Lake, and enabled them to hold it both over and back. The Kalamazoo boys pulled a strong stroke but too rapidly to hold the lead they started with. The Charlevoix oarsman pulled raggedly giving an illustration of every variety.

The single scull was won by Louis Zess, with Hastings 2d, Beardsley 3d and Newberry 4th.

In the boys boat race half a dozen little fellows started on the opposite side of Round Lake and rowed once across, working like little heroes and doing very well indeed. Masters Conyne, Nettleton, Billings and Clifford reached the finish in the order named.

Four young fellows fell off a greased pole into the river before one of them succeed in snatching the dollar which was fastened at the end of it projecting over the stream. Climbing the greased pole also made plenty of fun.

Six or eight boys had an exciting foot race. Master Billings first with second prize divided between Joe Beauvais and Will Lewis.

The men's foot race was won by Mr. Carse, of the Chicago resort.

The hurdle race was both exciting and amusing. Carse was first and Price second.

The "three-legged race" was laughable, but Carse and Allen ran along together like a well-trained team of thoroughbreds and won the prize.

Carse stock took decided tumble, however, when the sack race came off. Only two of the eight or ten starters got to the finish without falling, the winners of the other races being the first to bite the dust in this.

R. A. Emrey won all the jumping prizes. His standing jump was 12 ft 7 in., running jump 17 ft. 1 in., hop skip and jump 30 ft. 11 in.

In the evening there was a very good display of fireworks, discharged over Round Lake. All in all the affair was very creditable and satisfactory, and it is too bad that so few from our Bay resorts enjoyed it.

Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant.

F. W. Graine has the agency of Charlevoix County for this work. It will be complete in two volumes, (about 1,200 pages), and will contain about 50 maps, besides fac similes of important letters and documents never before published, and fine steel plates and etchings executed by eminent artists especially for this work.

This is the work prepared by Gen. Grant himself, the profits from which are intended and expected to provide a competence for the General's family. The following correspondence will show that other works are being published with a view of taking advantage of this fact, and people who buy them thinking they are getting Grant's book, and helping Grant's family, will be deceived. Leave your orders with F. W. Craine, at Geo. W. Miller's clothing house.

New York, June 30, 1885.

GEN'L U. S. GRANT, Dear Sir; We would like your instructions with reference to the following state of facts.

Several persons either have prepared, or are preparing, books with reference to you with titles which are calculated to lead the public to suppose that they are the Personal Memoirs prepared by you.

Among the most mischievous books of this character, is one published at Hartford, Conn., entitled "Personal History of U. S. Grant," or "Personal History of General U. S. Grant" (it is advertised both ways.) The title is so nearly like yours, but one or two words being changed, that our agents write us the public are constantly being misled by the deceptive title, and that they are greatly embarrassed thereby, which embarrassment is in no way lessened by the fact, that the agents in whose hands it is placed for sale, not infrequently represent it as your work, and the parties advertising it in the public newspapers, fail to put the name of any author upon the advertisement.

We have not consulted counsel as to whether the manner in which the book is advertised is an infringement of our rights, and before doing so, write to ask you whether in case we have a legal right to stop these imitations of our title page, it is your desire that we proceed vigorously about it. Yours respectfully,

CHARLES L. WEBSTER & CO.

Mt. McGregor, July 4th, 1885.

CHAS. L. WEBSTER & CO. Dear Sirs: Your letter with reference to imitations of the title page of my "Personal Memoirs" is received. It seems incredible to me that any one would be unprincipled enough to obtain subscriptions to a book of the character you name, by leading the public to believe that it is the one which I have written. But if such is the case, I think the wisest course is simply to let the public know that this wrong is being done.

Yours truly,
U. S. GRANT.

State Teachers' Institute.

The State Teachers' Institute will be held at Boyne City, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m., Monday, August 24, and closing 4 p. m., Friday, August 28. Mr. R. L. Corbett, Boyne City, local committee. It is becoming a well established fact that an interchange of views, such as is given in these institutes, is of great practical benefit to those who attend them. The teachers that are found in the front ranks of their profession are generally those who take interest enough in their work to avail themselves of such means of improvement.

The institute law allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the county institute, held under the direction of the state superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such institute without forfeiting their wages for as many half days as they are in attendance at the institute. This removes a cause that has prevented many teachers from attending these institutes in the past; and in view of the inducements to self-improvement thus furnished by the law, county examiners and school boards will both exercise wisdom and practice justice by giving preference to the teachers, other things being equal, who seek all such means to better prepare themselves for the work of their profession.

It is designed to make the work in these institutes as practical as possible, and thus meet the wants of the teachers of all grades in everyday work. At the same time it will be the purpose of every worker to raise the standard of the profession of teaching, and to gain for it that dignity to which it is entitled. Especial attention will be given to such subjects as have been recently added to the list of those in which teachers are required to pass examination before obtaining certificates.

The exercises will be conducted by persons of extended experience, known ability, and eminent success.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character.

There will be no tuition or enrollment fee. Full particulars in regard to board etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

THEODORE NELSON,
Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A dispatch from Saratoga says Colonel Fred Grant has accepted the position of engineer of a railroad company, which is backed by the Baltimore and Ohio and Wisconsin Central, for the purpose of making a new entrance into Chicago. In regard to his mother's health, Colonel Grant said: "My mother is physically very strong, and I have no doubt that in time she will regain her usual health. She has been confined unremittingly for a long time to my father's sick-room. If she had not been very strong she would have broken down long ago. I think that with a change of surroundings she will recover rapidly. As to the future plans of the family, I cannot speak very definitely. We shall remain on Mount MacGregor until fall, when the family must separate. Mrs. Grant will doubtless occupy the house on Sixty-sixth street."

Permission has been granted by the Gettysburg Memorial Association to the Second Maryland Confederate Regiment to erect a monument on the grounds of the association

Because of the breaking of a fresh-air engine gas accumulated in the West End Coal Company's mines at Macanaqua, Pa. Nearly twenty employes were killed and others are in a critical condition.

A terrific cyclone visited the village of Norwood, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., killing eight persons, injuring many others, and destroying a vast amount of property. While the storm was in progress hailstones as large as a man's fist fell, and not only destroyed the growing crops, but assisted the cyclone in doing very serious damage to the buildings. Trees were uprooted as if they were but stalks of wheat. Fences were blown over, and the great sheet of water which swept over the surface of the country literally wiped out everything before it. Houses, barns, one church, and the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain Railroad bridge over the Raquet River were destroyed as though they were built of nothing stronger than cardboard. A great stretch of the railroad track was torn up and carried many feet from its original position.

The population of Massachusetts, based on returns received for the census of 1885, is 1,940,000, a gain of 160,000 since 1880.

A petition asking Secretary Bayard to use his good offices in behalf of Louis Riel, on the ground that he is an American citizen, is in circulation in Massachusetts.

The Greenwood iron works at Greenwood, New York, have shut down, owing to the financial embarrassment of the company. J. S. Martin & Son, wholesale grocers, of Philadelphia, have suspended payment.

WESTERN.

L. J. North & Co.'s large oat-meal mill at Leavenworth, Kansas, was burned. Loss, $75,000; fully covered by insurance. During the fire the meal-dust exploded, carrying away the entire Main street wall, which was five stories high. The wall fell into the street, and several persons were buried in the mass. Two or three were killed and a number seriously injured.

The editor of a Galesburg, Ill., paper, who had published several objectionable editorials regarding Gen. Grant, was hanged in effigy.

Maxwell, who is charged with the murder of an Englishman named Preller at St. Louis some time ago, reached San Francisco from New Zealand last week in custody of the officers who were sent half around the world to make his arrest. He appeared cheerful, and declined to say anything about his case.

Returns from three-fourths of the counties in Kansas to the State Board of Agriculture for July indicate a winter wheat yield of 9,619,000 bushels, being an average of ten bushels to the acre. The spring wheat product is 1,250,000 bushels. The estimate of the corn yield is 198,000,000 bushels; condition, 98 per cent.

James W. Marshall, the original discoverer of gold in California, has just died in poverty at his home in that State. His age was 71.

A heavy rainstorm at Kansas City undermined two buildings occupied as a hardware and dry goods store respectively, totally wrecking them. Ten persons lodged in the structure, but all escaped.

Hine and Stewart Pond, sons of the late Elder Pond, ex-Indian Commissioner, were leading a Holstein bull to their farm, about twelve miles from St. Paul, when he became irritated and attacked the men, killing both almost instantly.

Vincent J. Scott, a private banker of Detroit, has made an assignment. His assets are given at $140,000, which, it is thought, will cover the liabilities.

The Missouri Monumental Grant Association has been organized at St. Louis to raise funds to erect a monument to the departed hero in that city.

A San Jose (Cal.) dispatch says a great sensation was caused there by the bold daylight robbery of the San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings. A man entered the bank and obtained a bill of exchange for $65.50. A few minutes after the stranger departed the Cashier missed a tray containing $10,000 of gold in twenties. The alarm was immediately given and search made, but without avail. It is believed two or more men were engaged in the theft, and that while the attention of the bank officers was engaged by the men in front others slipped inside the counter and stole the money. The bank has offered $1,000 for the capture of the thieves or recovery of the money.

A San Francisco dispatch announces the death in that city of Helen Hunt Jackson, the well-known authoress. Her disease was cancer of the stomach, and she literally starved to death.

In a collision with riotous strikers at Bay City, Mich., Sheriff Brennan was wounded in the head. None of the mob were arrested.

A sensation has been created in Youngstown, Ohio, by the assertion of a local clergyman from his pulpit that several "society ladies" of that city have been under treatment for delirium tremens. Indignation was high, and the reverend gentleman will be asked to name his authority.

The seventh anniversary of the institution of the Independent Order of Foresters in Illinois was celebrated at Chicago. There was an imposing parade under command of Chief Marshal William Kilpatrick, with Chief of Police Doyle as his aid. At the conclusion of the parade addresses were made in the Base-Ball Park. There were about 4,500 men in line.

SOUTHERN.

Gov. Ireland, of Texas, has written a letter to Attorney General Templeton, inviting his attention to negotiations said to be in progress for the consolidation of certain competing railway lines in that State, in violation of its constitution and laws. The Attorney General is requested to take prompt action against the offending corporations.

A mob of disguised men made an attack on the Pike County Jail, Arkansas, and attempted to kill two brothers named Polk, under sentence for murdering a peddler, whose body they afterward burned. After firing on the prisoners, and supposing them to be dead, the mob left.

Notwithstanding the ravages of caterpillars and cotton-worms in some parts of the South, the cotton crop of 1885 will be the largest gathered in many years. In Arkansas the yield of both cotton and corn promises to be extraordinary. The oats crop in Central Illinois will be heavy, most fields averaging fifty bushels an acre. A splendid crop of hay has been harvested, and corn is in excellent condition.

The first bale of new cotton was received at St. Louis last week, and brought fifteen cents a pound. It was from Bryan, Tex., and graded middling.

Three murderers, two of them negroes, were hanged at Fayetteville, N. C. At New Orleans a colored man died on the scaffold for the murder of one of his own race.

Judge James Garland, said to be the oldest Judge in the world, and it is believed the oldest member of the Masonic fraternity in the United States, died at Lynchburg, Va., aged 95.

The Hon. Robert Mallory, member of Congress from Kentucky during the war, died last week at his farm near LaGrange, Ky.

WASHINGTON.

Michael Muller, a police lieutenant of Cincinnati, under sentence of one year's imprisonment for violation of the Federal election laws, has been pardoned by the President.

The Agricultural Bureau reports the average condition of cotton at 96½, the best August report since 1880. The spring wheat crop is estimated at 6,000,000 bushels less than in the July bulletin. Corn will yield from 26 to 27 bushels per acre. The average condition of other crops is: Oats, 90; rye, 94; barley, 92; buckwheat, 95; hay, 93; tobacco, 91; potatoes, 95.

President Cleveland has issued a proclamation ordering the removal of all unauthorized fences inclosing public lands, and all persons or corporations are warned not to prevent or obstruct by means of such inclosures or by threats or intimidation any person entitled thereto from entering upon such lands for purposes of settlement.

It has been discovered that an item of $220, charged in the coast survey accounts for "plans and specifications for the steamer Paterson," covers the wine bill incurred by the Government scientists when the Paterson was launched.

The general land office has specific knowledge of the illegal inclosure of nearly 700,000 acres of the public domain, and estimates that not less than 10,000,000 acres in addition are illegally inclosed, all of which will be thrown open to settlement upon the enforcement of the President's proclamation.

The internal revenue authorities, says a Washington dispatch, have reason to suspect that there has been an extensive system of whisky frauds by means of the bogus barrels made of staves thickened about the bunghole, some of which have recently been discovered in use in one of the largest distilleries in Cincinnati. Experienced revenue agents are now investigating the subject in New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Chicago. Partial reports have been received from some of them. These reports tend to increase the apprehensions of the department. The fact that barrels which have been discovered were in use by a firm which has enjoyed the highest reputation for integrity has led the authorities to believe that these barrels may have been much more extensively used by firms whose reputation is not so high.

POLITICAL.

The anti-monopolists of New York will meet at Albany, Sept. 8, to nominate a State ticket.

It is understood in well-informed circles at Washington that Mr. Carlisle will be nominated by acclamation for Speaker by the Democratic members of the next House, with the hearty concurrence of Mr. Randall and his friends.

Following is the last batch of appointments made by the President just before his departure from Washington:

William H. Taylor, of Bloomfield, Iowa, to be Special Indian Agent at $2,000 a year, vice Paris B. Folsom, removed.

Joseph Colburn, of Denver, Colo., to be a timber agent of the Land Office.

Adolf Erdman, of Missouri, and James Dugan, of Mississippi, to be Special Examiners of the Pension Office.

To be Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico—George W. Lane, of Buffalo, N. Y.

To be Indian Agents—Joseph Emery, of Oregon, at the Klamath Agency, Oregon; Charles H. Potter, of Nebraska, at the Omaha and Winnebago Agency, in Nebraska; William H. Spalding, of Nebraska, at the Satnee Agency, in Nebraska; Robert L. Owen, of Indian Territory, at the Union Agency, in Indian Territory.

To be Collectors of Internal Revenue—John Dowlin, for the Twenty-second District of Pennsylvania, and Frank Schlundecker, for the Nineteenth District of Pennsylvania.

To be Receivers of Customs—John T. Gathright, for the port of Louisville, Ky., and Leon Trosdale for the port of Nashville, Tenn.

To Be Postmasters—J. E. Jones, Portage, Wis., vice V. E. Brewer, declined; Willis B. Isbell, Westville, Conn.; Jacob D. Allen, Butler, Mo.; Chauncey M. Freeman, Broadfield, Mo.; R. P. Hitchcock, Tomah, Wis.; Wm. S. Evans, La Grange, Ga., vice John C. Beall, suspended; Leo Beal, Rich Hill, Mo., vice G. P. Huckeby, suspended; Frederick A. Verborg, North Vernon, Ind., vice W. S. Prather, suspended; Richard Holmes, Natchez, Miss., vice Wm. McCary, suspended; Michael Boland, De Kalb, Ind., vice Geo. W. Gordon, suspended; Wm. M. Gay, Wilson, N. C., vice Mrs. Virginia Sharp, suspended. Geo. Wise, at Hamburg, Iowa, vice C. C. Coolbaugh, suspended; Edward B. Miller, Pierre, Dakota, vice S. M. Laird, suspended; Henry C. Hunt, Reedsburg, Wis., vice John Kellogg, suspended; Washington J. Barrett, Kinston, N. C., vice W. A. Coleman, suspended; John W. Marshall, McLeansborough, Ill., vice C. M. Lyon, suspended; Chas. H. Burroughs, La Crosse, Wis., vice B. T. Bryant, suspended; E. D. Fenn, Nevada, Iowa, vice Theodore J. Ross, suspended; Jerome W. Pierce, Springfield, Vt., vice L. B. Hurd, suspended; Charles T. Marsh, Oregon, Ill., vice B. F. Sheets, suspended; Joseph H. Allen, Durham, N. C., vice D. C. Mangum, suspended; George W. Morse, Waterbury, Vt., vice J. W. Moody, resigned; Francis G. Horton, Ellendale, Dakota; vice A. G. Tyner, office becoming Presidential April 1, 1885; C. melius Carr, Woonsocket, Dakota, vice A. H. Tyner, office becoming vacant April 1, 1885; J. A. Mantry, Mound City, Kan., vice S. L. Evesat, office becoming Presidential July 1, 1885; Frank W. Frye, Parsons, Kan., vice S. A. Fletcher, resigned; J. M. Gilliland, Nashua, Iowa, vice J. F. Grawe, suspended.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Moro Phillips, of Texas, with an estimated fortune of $10,000,000, died at the Monmouth House, Spring Lake, Pa., aged 75 years. He erected the first house upon the ground where the city of Galveston now stands.

Two engines attached to a Grand Trunk passenger train run off an open bridge into the Welland Canal at Merilton, Ontario, one of the engineers being killed, two other trainmen dangerously hurt, and a number of persons injured.

The New York Produce Exchange estimates the visible supply of wheat at nearly 40,000,000 bushels, while over 4,500,000 bushels of corn are in sight.

A train on the Grand Trunk struck an express wagon containing George Walsh and James Miller at Blue Bonnets, Canada, demolishing the wagon and killing both men.

President Cleveland has gone to the Adirondacks for his summer vacation. A dispatch from Au Sable Forks, New York, says: "President Cleveland, accompanied by Dr. Ward, of Albany, passed through here en route for the Adirondacks. They were met at the depot by the Hon. H. D. Graves and taken to his residence, where a short reception was given, after which the party was met by Paul Smith, who took them by stage to the Prospect House, where the President will spend a few weeks." Plattsburg (N. Y.) dispatch: "President Cleveland and Dr. Ward have reached the Prospect House, Upper Saranac Lake, their destination. They had a pleasant, uneventful buckboard ride of forty-seven miles from the railway terminus at Au Sable."

When the wife of Louis Riel, who resides a few miles from Winnipeg, heard of her husband's sentence she became frantic and fled from her house to the woods, where she hid. She was only partially clothed, and in her bare feet, and was nearly dead when found by her friends. So terrible is the shock she may never recover her reason. In Winnipeg a great deal of sympathy is felt for her and her children, and a subscription list has been started for them, as they are penniless.

The transfer of the Bankers and Merchants' Telegraph property to the United Lines Telegraph Company has been consummated. Under the reorganization the bonded indebtedness will be reduced from $10,000,000 to $1,200,000.

FOREIGN.

Among recent victims of the plague in Spain is the Archbishop of Seville. The epidemic has extended to Barcelona, Bilbon, San Sebastian, Huesca, and Tolosa. The disease is also increasing in France.

All the London newspapers printed copious accounts of the funeral of General Grant. All agree that the outpouring of the people on the occasion, and their deep grief, as indicated by the dispatches, was something wonderful. The Times had a special dispatch three columns long detailing the scenes and incidents of the funeral, and also printed a leading editorial praising and recalling many personal traits of the dead General. It expresses unbounded admiration for the conduct of the American people concerning the burial of Gen. Grant, and pronounces the funeral "a spontaneous outburst of national admiration and gratitude, which, although it can do nothing for its actual object, is not therefore the less to be commended."

Over 10,000 Christians have been massacred by the Black-flags of Tonquin in the provinces of Biendilo and Phyen. Murders and incendiary fires are of daily occurrence.

Great mortality is being caused among the Russians on the Afghan frontier by cholera and dysentery.

The cholera panic at Marseilles is increasing, and the number of departures from the city averages 2,000 daily. Of thirty-five new cases reported in Madrid fifteen were on one street. The plague has broken out in Hoi-Phong, Tonquin, where it caused seventeen deaths in a single day. Several cases resembling cholera have appeared in the suburbs of Odessa, Russia, where all arrivals from Marseilles have been prohibited.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Two hundred Indians are said to be on the warpath between Swift Current and Battleford, Northwest Territory.

Small-pox has been declared epidemic in Montreal by the local Board of Health. The public hospital contains thirty-six patients.

Sixteen mills at Saginaw City are now running on eleven hours' time, and only four ten-hour mills are in operation.

John Oate, an aged farmer, living alone near Missouri City, Mo., was found dead in bed, with his hands and feet bound, and several wounds in his head. There is no clew to the murderers or their motive.

In the Chickasaw Nation, I. T., David Hunter shot and killed Samuel Smiley in a quarrel about some horses. Hunter fled, but was pursued by Smiley's friends and slain.

Wheat in Minnesota, north of St. Paul, has been damaged by blight and insects, and south of St. Paul by hot weather and storms. Corn in the same territory is doing well. In Indiana there is an increase in the acreage of buckwheat and tobacco and a decrease in the acreage of flaxseed and potatoes as compared with 1884.

Afghan troops are said to be massing at Herat.

Germany's supremacy in the possessions claimed by its subjects in Zanzibar has been conceded by the Sultan, under the potent influence of a formidable squadron which had taken a position in front of his Majesty's palace.

In a speech at Wimbernminster, Lord Randolph Churchill denounced the Radicals for wishing to tax the poor man's beer, which, he said, was food equally with bread. He repudiated the charge that he desired war with Russia for the sake of securing votes.

The extreme heat prevailing at Marseilles has given the cholera there a fresh impetus, the number of new cases and deaths having been materially increased. The autumn manœuvers in the south of France have been abandoned on account of the pestilence.

James Horace Jones, a wife-murderer, was executed at Troy, N. Y. He made the following will: "I give and bequeath to Roy. Peter Havermans, my spiritual adviser, my body. I hope and trust he will see it buried decently and protected from mutilation. I also give and bequeath my heart to Rome and my soul to heaven. I appoint Father Havermans executor of my will." Jones walked to the scaffold with a steady step and was wonderfully cool while the final preparations for his execution were being made. He refused to say anything, and appeared anxious that there should be no delay.

Several tenement houses took fire from a barrel factory in Jersey City, and before the flames were subdued six three-story buildings, occupied by seventy-five families, were burned to the ground. The tenants all escaped in their night clothes.

Secretary Manning has issued an order forbidding the reopening of accounts in the Treasury Department after they have been closed, except in cases where material evidence is discovered after the settlement. The order is aimed at a flagrant abuse of long standing.

The following is a technical description of the new immediate-delivery stamp: A line engraved on steel, oblong in form; dimensions, 1 3-16 by 1 7-16 inches; color, dark blue; design on the left, an arched panel bearing the figure of a mail messenger boy on a run, and surmounted by the words "United States;" on the right, an oblong tablet, ornamented with a wreath of oak and laurel surrounding the words, "Secures immediate delivery at a special delivery office." Across the top of the tablet is the legend, "Special postal delivery," and at the bottom the words "Ten cents," separated by a small shield bearing the numeral "10."

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—At Hancock a 10-year-old boy named Zimmerman killed a playmate with a base-ball bat.

—There are over 100 visitors at the springs at St. Louis that register from Cincinnati.

—Sparta has two base-ball clubs named "The Paralyzing Jim Dandies" and "The Get There Elis."

—This season has been the most favorable for harvesting that Shiawassee County has known for years.

—Mrs. Ignace Navarre, of Frenchtown, Monroe County, dropped dead while on her way to call on a neighbor.

—The price of salt was advanced by the manufacturers at Bay City to 50 cents a barrel, owing to the recent strike.

—The abstract of title of the postoffice site at Detroit covers 1,400 sheets of legal cap, and contains the record of 110 instruments.

—William Elsenman, a Hillsdale College graduate of 1882, has been made Superintendent of the Denver (Colo.) public schools.

—Nearly $300 worth of standard books will be added to the Ludington Public School Library before school begins in September.

—Zion Store, Salt Lake City, is the largest general store in the world, and that of Hannah, Lay & Co., Traverse City, the next in size.

—Contracts aggregating $2,375 have been let for the new St. James' Catholic school at Grand Rapids. It will cost $3,500 when completed.

—A reward of $100 has been offered for the body of Horatio L. Ide, missing from Ransom. He is believed to have been foully dealt with.

—Owosso's Union School has furnished five officers for the order of Good Templars from its recent graduates, who were duly installed last week.

—L. Wolier's 8-months-old twin boys both died near Adrian last week. Both children were taken sick at the same time, and died about the same hour.

—The ninth annual exhibit of the Colon Floral, Horticultural, and Art Association will be held Sept. 8, 9, 10, and 11. The management is under the supervision of amateur lady florists principally.

—The committee in charge has decided to abandon the State Encampment of Knights Templars at Grand Rapids this year, the sentiment of Knights throughout the State being against the encampment.

—The firm of Cossett & Homer, of Owosso, have just fitted up their extensive shops with new machinery. A little while ago the largest iron wheel ever manufactured in Shiawassee County was produced by this firm.

—A tract of land was bought by the city of Ishpeming, recently, for cemetery purposes. The old cemetery was so full that not a foot of available space was left, and graves had been made in the roadway. Burials have been made at Negaunee the past several months.

—J. D. Hodgkins is the owner of a tenement-house in Negaunee which has been a refuge for beggars and squalid poverty. He has been notified by the City Recorder to clean and repair the place at once. It is known as "Castle Garden," and has long been a disgrace to the city.

—A little boy fell off the dock at Houghton recently. His mother saw the fall, and, rushing to the spot, she stripped off her skirt and held it over the sinking boy, who clasped it and was saved. Her joy at the rescue did not prevent her from enforcing the lesson with a good sound spanking, publicly administered.

—The salt inspection in the State during during the month of July was as follows:

	Barrels.
Saginaw County	114,213
Bay County	75,758
Huron County	44,916
Iosco County	23,864
Midland County	5,793
Manistee County	43,487
St. Clair County	10,250
Total	325,317

The total inspection for the year up to date is 1,828,228 barrels; for the corresponding period of 1884, 1,738,015 barrels.

—The movement in this city for the organization of a society and the building of an apparatus to cremate the bodies of the dead is only one of several similar enterprises in the larger cities. In Cincinnati a crematory of most elegant design is about being erected. Before the end of the century this custom will have become, if not common, at least not exceptional. There will be probably enough found in Detroit who desire incineration for themselves and their families to support a modest establishment for the purpose.—Free Press.

—Capt. C. H. Manly, of Ann Arbor, President of the First Regiment of Michigan Volunteers, makes the following announcement: "There will be a reunion of the old First Regiment of Volunteer Infantry at Devil's Lake, Lenawee County, Michigan, Aug. 27, at 10 o'clock, to which we hope all ex-members of the old regiment will be present, that we may once more see old familiar faces, that each may take by the hand his old comrade once again before the bugle shall sound for us to pass before the great Captain in the final review, to whom our beloved chieftain has so lately been called to report."

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

MARY is the commonest name in France, where, as in Italy, the custom prevails of giving the Virgin's name to a boy, in conjunction with a distinctly male appellation. Thus Hugo was Victor Marie, and the late Pope was Giovanni Maria. After Mary come in order of frequency Louis, Joseph, Charles, Henry, John, Francis, Peter, Paul, Julius, Maurice, Anthony, Eugene, Leo, Victor, Augustus, Edward, Ernest, and George.

THE storms that occur in the West, with heavy electric discharges and more or less wind, but no rain, are to be investigated most carefully by the signal service. "If it be conclusively shown," says Nature, "that thunderstorms occur unaccompanied by any rain, a contribution of no ordinary importance will be made to the theory of the thunderstorm. In this department of meteorology, accurately observed facts continue still to be the great desideratum."

THE late Dr. Samuel Irenæus Prime was for a long time editor of the "Editor's Drawer" in Harper's Magazine. When he took the "Drawer" in charge he had been editing the Observer thirteen years without saving a cent. For his services in conducting the "Drawer" he received $100 a month. This he religiously laid away in bank, and at the end of five years he had $6,000 cash. With this he made his first payment toward his shares in the New York Observer, which afterward brought him wealth.

"I HAVE not read Miss Cleveland's book," said Colonel Ingersoll to a reporter; "but if the author condemns the poetry of George Eliot she has made a mistake. There is no poem in our language more beautiful than 'The Lovers,' and none loftier and purer than 'The Choir Invisible.' There is no poetry in the 'beyond.' The poetry is here—here in this world where love is—in the heart. The poetry of the 'beyond' is too far away—a little too general. Shelley's 'Sky Lark' was in our sky, the 'Daisy' of Burns grew in our ground, and between that lark and that daisy is room for all the real poetry of the earth."

THE article at present most in demand in the medical world of Germany is—old cheese. A young physician, Dr. Deneke, assistant at the Hygeine Institute of Gottingen, has recently discovered in old cheese an infinitesimally small and hitherto unknown fungus which in form, character, and growth, closely resembles the genuine comma-shaped baccillus discovered by Prof. Koch, and which has been used in vaccinating animals without any injurious effect. Dr. Deneke has been able to cultivate the fungi; and the imperial hygienic office has taken the matter in hand so far as to address a circular to 150 medical men, urging them to investigate the subject and report their observations to them.

SAM JONES, the revivalist, has his route mapped out for nearly a year. It takes him successively from Georgia to Mississippi, Alabama, parts of Tennessee, Virginia, South Carolina, St. Louis, Baltimore, New Orleans, and Galveston. Relative to his literary style Mr. Jones says: "I have adopted the language of the people, the language of the street, the office, and the shop. When a man means business he takes all the nigh cuts, even in his language, and so do I. I am always in a hurry." At one time a gentleman presented him with $1,500. "No," he said, "I'll take $300 of that, and request you to divide the remainder among those saloonists who have reformed and destroyed their stock, to their own considerable loss."

SENATOR FRYE, like ex-Senator Hamlin, is a noted fisherman. He has a camp at Rangely, where he usually spends the season. He is now on an excursion in Canada, and recently sent a splendid salmon to a friend with the following letter: "I am away up in the Canadian woods, three hundred miles north of St. John's, on one of the most beautiful rivers I ever saw. This noon a salmon took my fly, and in an hour and three quarters I had the gaff into his side. He fought for life like a king, sprung four or five feet out of the water nine times; I finally captured him two miles from the spot where I struck him." The salmon, when taken from the box, three days afterward, weighed twenty-six and one-quarter pounds.

A PHILADELPHIA paper says "Ouida" is forty-five years, and, if flesh be grass, is a weedy old bale of hay. This idea is derived from an old contest between George D. Prentice, of Louisville, and John Brough, of Cincinnati. Mr. P., at that time in his prime, delighted in picking at Mr. Brough, a man abundantly supplied with adipose tissue. Among other things that Mr. Prentice wrote in the Louisville Journal was this:

> If flesh be grass, as people say,
> Then Johnny Brough's a load of hay.

Promptly in the next issue of Mr. Brough's Cincinnati paper came the reply:

> If flesh be grass, as Prentice hath it,
> Then he's an ass for nibbling at it.

The Louisville man ceased nibbling for a few days.

A BOSTON legal authority says that the young lady who has been jilted has the right to read the recreant's letters in her breach-of-promise suit, but she must not weave them into a novel and copyright them. That privilege belongs to the gentleman. She may, however, demand the return of her own letters as her property. This is not the popular idea, but there have been many decisions. George Washington kept copies of his letters and bequeathed them to his nephew, who had them published. A compiler of another biography of Washington copied them. There was a lawsuit. The Judge said that Washington did not part with the ownership by sending the letters to his correspondents, and he declared this doctrine applicable to all letters, whether of literary value or not.

A DISCUSSION is going on in Europe concerning the distance at which large objects on the earth's surface may be visible. Emil Metzger mentions that he once saw, with some difficulty, Keizerspickt in Sumatra, when distant 110 English miles; and he also made out Gug Merapi, in Java, when 180 miles away. From the Piz Muraun, near Dissentis, E. Hill has seen Mont Blanc, the intervening space measuring about 110 miles. J. Starkie Gardner states that Mont Blanc is visible from the Piz Langard, though distant about three degrees. In Greenland Mr. Whymper beheld a mountain from which he was separated by 150 miles; and from Marseilles Zuch saw Mont Canigon at a distance of 158 miles. The whole range of the Swiss Alps has been looked upon by J. Hippisley while 200 miles away, while Sir W. Jones has affirmed that the Himalayas have appeared to view from the great distance of 224 miles.

AS THE smallest details concerning the personality of great men are interesting, says a London paper, the subject of the bodily weight of Prince Bismarck might be suggested as one fit for the serious consideration of any enthusiastic German professor who would take it up. Does "the man of blood and iron's" poundage vary with his popularity, or do the cares of state affect him more in some years than others? At any rate, statistics religiously preserved by the person who keeps the weighing-machine at Kissingen read as follows: In 1884 the Prince weighed 207 pounds (German); in 1875, 213 pounds; in 1876, 219 pounds; in 1877, 230 pounds; in 1878, 243 pounds; in 1879, 247 pounds; in 1880, 237 pounds; in 1881, 232 pounds; and in 1883, 202 pounds; the latest return being 205 pounds. It will be seen that the Chancellor's bulk is decreasing. But there is a lot of him left yet.

THE Rev. W. H. H. Murray, of Adirondack and buckboard wagon celebrity, and long the petted pastor of the fashionable Park Street Church in Boston, claims to have been where no other white man ever was, and to have sailed for days upon the vast fresh-water sea, which, he says, is many times bigger than Lake Superior, and yet it is not on any map or in the knowledge of any other white men, save those who have heard the Indian agents of the Hudson Bay Company tell marvelous tales of its immensity and the vast wilderness in which it lies. Mr. Murray is keeping a little oyster-house in Montreal. It is a neat little box, and the waiters are pretty women. Murray stands near the door, and to every customer who enters he bows and says, "Your servant, sir." As a special favor to friends or distinguished visitors, he sometimes presides at the open coal fire-place, cooking oysters in batter or butter, or broiling a bird or fish.

HUMOR.

A PICTURE from still life—a Bourbon-painted nose.

WHEN a sovereign has pants for fame he generally makes breaches of peace.

"BOY, what is the reason you are not up?" "Well, father, it is so dark yet I can't see to wake up."

TWO WAYS of looking at it: He (reading a paper): "A Georgia man has sold his wife." She: "What a shame!" He: "I don't know about that. He got $200 for her."

"GREEK? Do I undershtandt Greek?" said a jolly German. "Vell, I shoost can schmile. Vy, ven I vas a leetle poy, I alvays swim in dot greek inshteadt of dot riffer."

RALPH WALDO EMERSON said: "The joy of the spirit indicates its strength," and the distillers of Old Medford Rum replied in chorus: "Right you are, Mr. Poet!"—Barbers' Gazette.

MISTRESS (to amiable servant maid): "I am going to the opera this evening, so I shall probably be home late." Amiable maid: "O, you needn't apologize to me for that. Tim will be here."

WHAT did Claude Melnotte take Pauline for when he said "Neigh, dearest, neigh?"—Ex. He no doubt thought she was a little hoarse, but it will be remembered that he took her "for better or worse."—Norristown Herald.

THE REVISED VERSION.

They've finished their work, the revisers,
And like a wet blanket 'twill fall,
'Twill be numbered among the surprises
That they revised it at all.
It will go out to every region
In the range of humanity's ken;
But they can not revise the religion
Of peace and good-will toward men.
—Boston Courier

WHEN the Indian is up to devilment he paints his own mug red to begin on; but when the urchin from the cattle ranch becomes the active partner of Satan, somebody else provides the groundwork for the fresco.—Chicago Ledger.

JOURNALIST to his wife: "I feel very bad this morning. I don't see that it's worth while to go to work, for my head aches so painfully that I can not think." Wife—"Don't try to think any to-day, dear. Stay at home and work on your book."

A LAWYER received this indignant postal from a client to whom a typewriter letter had been sent. "I want you to understand that you needn't print letters sent to me. I can read writing, even yours; and I don't want to be insulted by reflections on my education."

"WHEN I grow up I will be a man, won't I?" asked a little Texas boy of his mother. "Yes, my son. If you want to be a man, you must be industrious at school, and learn how to behave yourself." "Why, ma, do lazy boys turn out to be women when they grow up?"—Texas Siftings.

"Have you heard the news, Pat?" said a jester to an Irishman. "An' phat's that, sor?" "The devil is dead." "Take that, sor. It's all I have by me, or I might do better," said Pat, handing him a penny. "What's that for?" "I niver sind an orphant away impty-handed, sor."—Chicago Ledger.

NOT SO BAD AS THAT.

In Sing Sing I dwell,
I have poisoned a well,
I have turned on the gas in the dark;
I have kidnaped a lad,
I am awfully bad,
My murders have caused some remark.

I have broken bank locks,
I have robbed the poor-box,
I've deserted my children and wife;
I have taken my lot,
In a dynamite plot,
But I never ate peas with a knife.

THE New York Ledger says: "A rich man can hardly afford to die, now-a-days, on account of the cormorants of the law who aim to gobble up a large part of his estate in contesting his will." This obstacle may be easily removed. If Mr. Bonner will exchange fortunes with us, we shall cheerfully risk the "gobbling up" process, when the time comes. We don't suppose he ever thought of that.—Norristown Herald.

A YOUNG police-court lawyer, after a fee, slipped around among the prisoners, and, selecting the toughest-looking one in the crowd, he nudged her just a little, and she looked around. "You'll get six months in the Works," he whispered. "I don't doubt it," she answered. "Well, I'm a friend of yours, and I—" "Keep still," she sung out; "don't give it away. I'll get six months more if the Judge ever gets on to it." He didn't give it away further.—Merchant Traveler.

The Use of Fans.

When fans were first introduced into Europe they were used by men as well as women, but it was soon discovered that the awkward hands of masculinity had nothing in common with an implement so light and graceful, and soon it became the sole prerogative of woman to carry a fan. In her hands it became a means of fascination, of grace, of love-making, of coquetry, and of a kind of silent talk on all kinds of subjects. To it she confided her joys, her hates, her revenges, and after the combat she would kiss it as a duelist sometimes does his sword. A French lady of the time of Louis XV. declared that, however agreeable, graceful, and elegantly dressed a lady might be she would necessarily be ridiculous unless she knew how to handle a fan; that you could tell a Princess from a Countess, a Countess from a Marquise, a Marquise from an untitled lady, by the delicate movements of her fan, and that this subtle instrument, by its opening and closing, its raising and falling, its sweeping and waving, its pointing and beating, conveyed an encyclopedia of meaning.

FRIGHTFUL MINE ACCIDENT.

A Gas Explosion in a Coal Mine Near Wilkesbarre, Pa., Kills Eighteen Men.

[Wilkesbarre (Pa.) special.]

The most disastrous mine accident of recent years in the anthracite coal fields occurred to-day at Macanaqua, on the east bank of the Susquehanna River, fourteen miles from this city, and opposite the town of Shickshinny. Nearly a score of sturdy miners who left their homes this morning light of heart and in the best of spirits are now cold in death, having been suffocated by the deadly gas.

Fifty-eight men went to work in the mine in the morning, and at half-past 8 o'clock it was discovered that the machinery that ran the fan that supplies the air was broken. The fan stopped and the gas accumulated before the men could be notified of their peril. A few escaped by their own efforts, but nearly all were overcome and met gasping deaths.

Twelve bodies have been recovered. Following are the names of the dead:

James Whalen, aged 53; leaves three children. William Price, aged 25; unmarried. Peter Bovastski, aged 27; unmarried. Anthony Bovastski, brother of Peter Bovastski, aged 23; unmarried. William Zerkie, aged 24; unmarried. Nicholas Berteh, 45 years old; leaves a wife and five children. James Fry, 32 years old; leaves a wife and two children. John Bilby, aged 46; leaves a wife and four children. Anthony Borskie, aged 24; unmarried. Wilson Rymer, aged 36; leaves a wife and three children. Anthony N. Yurski; unmarried. John Broskoski, aged 28.

Thousands of excited people are loitering about the vicinity of the disaster, and willing volunteers take turns in going into the mine to rescue those who may yet be alive, and to remove the bodies of the dead. Six more dead bodies were discovered at nine o'clock this evening.

The fans are not yet at work, but an air-passage has been made through a second opening in the mine, and it is thought that the rescuers will soon be able to penetrate further into the slope.

The scenes in the town of Shickshinny and about the mines are indescribable. The friends and relatives of the doomed ones are gathered by hundreds. Women and children are mourning and weeping. Strong men shed tears, and the sobs of the bereaved wives of those who have been taken out are heartrending.

Every train brings hundreds from the surrounding towns, and it is estimated that at least a thousand people are gathered in the vicinity of the disaster.

The Salem Coal Company suspended work at the mines, and all hands are helping to recover the bodies in the mines.

JAMES W. MARSHALL.

Death of the Original Discoverer of Gold on the Pacific Coast.

He Dies in Extreme Poverty—The Romantic Story of His Life and Struggles.

[Placerville (Cal.) special.]

There has just died at his home, in Coloma, a poverty-stricken, disappointed old man, four years past the allotted three score and ten, who laid the foundation of California's wealth by his intelligence and sagacity. This man, whom California has so shamefully treated, was James W. Marshall, who, in January, 1848, made the discovery of gold at Sutter's Fort, and worked such a revolution in a wilderness country that in less than three years thereafter it was received into the sisterhood of States.

The history of Marshall's life reads almost like a romance. He was born in Hope Township, New Jersey, in 1812. After receiving a plain education he learned the trade of a coach and wagon builder. He was smitten with the "Western fever" when about twenty-one years old, and, having traveled in Indiana and Illinois, bought a farm on the Platte Purchase, near Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. His health was poor, and his doctor said he must either die or seek a change of air. May 1, 1844, he joined a train of 100 wagons bound for that, at the time, almost unknown land, California. The party reached its destination in June, 1845, and camped at Cache Creek, about forty miles from where Sacramento now stands. From that point its members took their several ways. Marshall and a few others went to Sutter's Fort, Sacramento County, where he entered the service of Gen. Sutter.

About a year after this, and after Marshall had begun life in the stock business on a farm of two leagues in area, the Mexicans made an attempt to prevent a body of American emigrants from entering California. This led to the Bear Flag war, in which Gen. Sutter, Marshall, and others assisted, as volunteers, Gen. Fremont, of the United States military post at Sutter Buttes, in the defense of their countrymen. Fighting was frequent and severe. Marshall took part in all the engagements of the campaign, which resulted in a treaty signed March, 1847, recognizing the independence of California. Marshall procured his discharge and returned to Sutter's Fort. Upon his arrival he found that most of the cattle he had left on his farm had been stolen or strayed during his absence. He therefore gave up his farm and began arrangements to start in the lumber business at Coloma, Amador County, as active partner with Gen. Sutter, who undertook to furnish the necessary capital. Work was begun on the mill in August, 1847.

The 18th of January following Marshall was superintending the building of the mill-race. After shutting off the water at the head of the race he walked down the ditch to see what sand and gravel had been removed during the previous night. He strolled to the lower end of the race and stood looking down at the mass of debris. At this juncture his eye caught the glitter of something that lay lodged in a crevice on a riffle of soft granite. He stooped and picked up the substance. It was heavy, of a peculiar color, and different from anything he had seen in the stream before. He was satisfied that he had indeed made an important discovery. In several days he collected a few ounces of the precious metal, and as he had occasion to visit Sutter's Fort in a short time he took the specimens with him. He informed Sutter of his discovery, but the General was incredulous, and it was not until chemical experiments had settled the question beyond all doubt that he would admit the mineral was gold. At last all doubts faded, and the excitement began to spread. The news flew over the country like wildfire, and those whites who were then in California went into the quest for gold with great ardor and energy. Additional revelations were made daily, and the news of the discoveries was spread.

Then came the mad rush from the East and the old world. It was a furious race for wealth. In 1849 every sailing vessel and steamer landing at San Francisco was crowded with adventurers. They knew that gold had first been found in Coloma, and many went thither. Without inquiry or negotiation they squatted upon Marshall's land about the mill, seized his work oxen for food, confiscated his horses, and marked the land off into town lots and distributed them among themselves. Thus robbed of his property he perforce became a prospector, but never succeeded in finding much gold. The neighbors who had spoiled his possessions added insult to injury by presuming that he knew the whereabouts of rich deposits of gold and refused to give information to them, and persecuted him on these false suppositions. To add to his troubles his title to the land he had purchased prior to his great discovery was questioned, and he lost it all. The State has helped him a little, but only a little, in his hard fight against poverty, all the more severe by reason of his advanced age.

PENNSYLVANIA GREENBACKERS.

Proceedings of the State Convention—The Platform and Candidates.

The State Convention of the Pennsylvania Greenback or National Labor party was held at Erie on the 12th inst. Twenty-one counties were represented by forty-two delegates. William Wilhelm, of Schuylkill County, was made permanent Chairman. Speeches were made by several delegates, and the resolutions submitted by Thomas A. Armstrong, of Pittsburgh, were adopted. They indorse the National platform adopted at Indianapolis in 1884, denounce the policy of hoarding money in the Treasury, favor the issuance of full legal-tender money in place of national bank notes, demand the enforcement of laws prohibiting railroad discrimination, and demand that the right of petition shall never be abridged by State or National Governments. A resolution to submit prohibition to the popular vote was tabled. Dr. N. C. Whitney, of Warren County, was nominated for State Treasurer, and T. P. Ryder, of Butler County, was made Chairman of the State Committee.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

One of the pawn Democrat names a number of newspapers in Northern Michigan which are nominally neutral but really republican, and says "there are several more of the milk-and-water 'good Lord, good devil' sort. They style themselves "non-partisan" and "independent"—industriously struggling to straddle two stools, in order to keep out competition—but they neglect no opportunity to give aid and comfort to the republican party. While this class of newspapers continues to receive the support of the leading democrats, the party will always remain in a hopeless minority and without organization. Until the democratic party of this section takes the control of the press out of the hands of the republicans, Michigan will never join the democratic column."

The New York World has completed its pedestal fund of over one hundred thousand dollars, and has taken hold of the Grant monument fund. The fund is pretty certain of success.

On Sunday, Aug. 9, the New York World printed and sold 230,220 copies. Verily it is a great and a successful newspaper.

Notes and News.

"DEAR EDITOR:—How can I cultivate freckles?—CITY BELLE." Go to the bare-foot milkmaid, thou beauteous one, consider her ways and be wise,—likewise freckled.—[Brezee's Herald.

The Bay City Lumberman's Gazette figures that the strike has resulted in a loss of $200,000 in wages to employees and a gain of $200,000 to the salt operators and $40,000 to lumber manufacturers by the advance in prices.

"The peach crop in Michigan is short, the apples light and pears on old trees fair this year," remarked Judge H. G. Ramsdell, the famous Traverse City fruit grower. "Owing to the severity of the winter the buds were nipped and many of the trees killed outright. Last winter was an awful frigid one and no mistake, and it is a surprise to me that so many trees lived."

A man who becomes bondsman of a liquor dealer now-days assumes considerable financial responsibility. A young man living near Fenton became intoxicated last winter and while in this condition had both feet and hands frozen so badly that amputation was necessary. A suit for damages brought by the young man's father has been decided in the Genesee circuit by a verdict of $2,777 which the bondsman will have to pay.

Tally another for Judge S. S. Fallass! The appointment of Mr. Alexander as postmaster of Ludington, to fill vacancy caused by resignation, was so discomforting to the masses of Democrats of that city, who had united on one more worthy and entitled to the position, and an ex-soldier at that, and the quiet way the appointment was brought about, so enraged them, that they took concerted action, and one of the results of Judge Fallass' late visit to Washington was the withholding of Mr. Alexander's commission by President Cleveland, and the appointment of Captain Fayette Johnson to the position, the appointment being made within a few days after the Judge's visit. The result is harmony among the Ludington Democracy, and the strengthening of the party throughout the Ninth District. It is now in order for the Detroit Post to again tell its readers how Judge Fallass was snubbed by President Cleveland.—[Big Rapids Herald.

Buckboard Democracy.

The most marked exhibition of Jeffersonian simplicity made by President Cleveland was when he recently carried himself and his administration, "with all its fears, with all its hopes for future years," into the Adirondack mountains on a buckboard. We do not recall any event better calculated to jeopard the safety of his administration than his tranportation of it a distance of forty-two miles on a buckboard. It was a brave undertaking, and one which, we cannot but believe, approached recklessness. When one pauses to consider the possible consequences if the buckboard had spilled, there is apparent at once great reason for admiring the heroic simplicity of the present representative of Jeffersonian days.

It should be remembered that the buckboard is a machine adapted to testing the courage of the bravest of men. The simple, manly manner in which the President of the United States trusted himself to its possibilities furnishes, therefore, fresh proof of his confidence in the immutability of his fate, and offers a pleasing picture of that gemini democratic simplicity which he unflessly encounters the spare hillocks of life in its shirt-sleeves. At the same time it provides a contrast which warrants the assumption that Grover Cleveland in some way has not ceased to be very human and artless because he has become president—a fact which prompts us to mention that we do not remember to have ever heard of Mr. Arthur riding forty odd miles over a rocky road on a buckboard.—(Detroit Journal.

Only a Few Cents.

It is quite a common thing for those who are in favor of high taxes and large expenditures or who are instrumental in causing them to say to the complaining tax-payer—"Why, the item you complain of increases your taxes but a few cents and amounts to nothing."

So it goes through the whole list and all the time the burdens of taxation are being piled higher and higher until they have actually become oppressive.

It is an easy matter to vote away the people's money but it is getting to be no easy matter for the people to pay the money demanded of them by the insatiate tax-eater.

Has it ever occurred to those who vote high taxes that, taking our whole population, "half a cent a day remitted from our excessive taxation would take off one-seventh of the whole burden, amounting to $100,000,000 a year.

The half cent a day for each person may seem to be nothing, but is not a saving of one hundred million dollars a year of wages and earnings of the people employed in gainful occupations some-thing?

It is the constant drain of the cents, by our varied and oppressive forms of taxation, that keeps so many people poor. And it is, as Mr. Edward Atkinson states it, "on such fractions as these prosperity or adversity depend."

It may be set down as absolutely true that no country ever has prospered or ever can prosper, if its productive industries are burdened with heavy taxes.—Jackson Patriot.

For the Stomach's Ache.

Joe Howard, a veteran New York journalist, who has wrestled successfully with a hundred epidemics and drank enough whisky to float a gunboat, gives the following advice to persons whose aching stomachs warn them of the approach of cholera or something like it: "First and foremost, avoid brandy, whisky and gin. They allay the pain temporarily, but they excite, exasperate and inflame the stomach, and worse remains behind. Avoid all 'cholera medicines,' which are all made of laudanum, peppermint, red pepper and camphor. They, too, allay the pain, but the latter effect is excessively unpleasant. They are a delusion and a snare. In this case, as is nearly everything in life, the simplest and easiest is the best. Take a spoonful of the essence of ginger in a wineglass of water, the hotter the better, and make it palatable with a little sugar. It acts like magic, and after a few trials the pain and all unpleasant symptoms disappear, and you are hunki-dori. Aside, however, from the disputed point of what is the best remedy, is the fact that so many careful, prudent people just now are suffering with this weakening and demoralizing trouble, and the further noticeable fact that so many men die suddenly from its effects."

The World's Pedestal Fund.

New York, August 10.—The World will announce to-morrow the completion of its great Bartholdi pedestal fund of $100,000. The subscription has been running 147 days; average receipts per day, $6.90. The highest amount received from any one source was $2,800 from the Brighton Beach races benefit and the largest receipts on any one day were $3,525, received June 21. Only two individuals have given as much as $1,000, Pierre Lorillard and Joseph Pulitzer, editor of the World. The next largest sum to come from a single family was $600 given by Hon. R. P. Flower, his wife and two children. About thirty men have given $250 each and a half dozen individuals have given $100 each. Only about $10,000 of the $100,000 was collected in sums of $100 or more. Very few contributions have been in sums of $25 or $50, none to speak of in sums of $10 even. Fully $80,000 has been collected in sums of less than $1. The grand total foots up $102,006.39 contributed by 120,000 persons.

About a year ago we had the mis fortune to crush the balance staff and the jewels of a watch. New parts were replaced by C. R. Bellinger, and the watch set with standard time. It has been carried constantly since that time without further regulation or change, and has varied but three minutes in the year.

We learn that the pleasure yacht Countess which was in port a couple of weeks since, with a party of gay and festive youth from Chicago met with a disastrous return voyage. A storm was encountered, and they arrived in Chicago with the mast swept away, the bulwarks staved in and five feet of water in the hold.—Resorter.

A party of about 80, mostly from Charlevoix, gathered at O. D. Hilton's last night to celebrate Miss Carrie Hilton's twenty third birthday, and a very pleasant social gathering it proved. The excursion to Petoskey on the Grand Rapids last Thursday was not attended with all the et ceteras of pleasure, especially on the return. The severity of the storm, both rain and wind, made it exceedingly tiresome, especially to those liable to seasickness. The boat was watched by many anxious eyes while coming in to Charlevoix. after she came in sight off the point. The waves frequently washed over the upper deck, and spray was thrown over the smoke stack.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL of July 30th, contains a good sized photographic view of the young city, its harbor, summer resorts, etc. In the back ground may be seen the beautiful Pine Lake, dotted with its shipping, and hedged in with the loftiest and grandest body of timber that man ever put an axe into. What an invitation is here given to energy and enterprise! Gold can be had on the banks and borders of northern Michfor the mere asking.—[Eaton Rapids Journal.

The gale last Thursday struck just at the right time to finish the wreck of the schooner Ketchum, on which T. D. Smith has been at work since last season. He had her raised clear from the rocks, and in a few hours more would have had her on the way to the Charlevoix harbor, but the storm drove her back on to the rocks with such force as to completely ruin her bottom, as well as much of the material with which she was being raised. She will now be abandoned, except such material as is worth bringing here. If the wind had held off a few hours Mr. Smith would have made a nice little profit on his investment and labor.

Two Men Drowned.

Last Saturday morning, the fish tug Sea Wing returned from Lake Michigan earlier than usual, bringing an open fish boat which had been found about 15 miles out, full of water and containing the dead bodies of two men. The boat was recognized as one built for Wm. Gibson, of Beaver Island. A crowd gathered at the dock and Smith Campbell at once recognized the men as Wm. Gibson and Ed. Gallagher, of Beaver Island. An inquest was held and a verdict returned in accordance with such facts as were obtainable. Steps were taken to dress the bodies for burial, to be returned to their friends at the island. A subscription paper was circulated to raise funds to defray the expense, and over sixty dollars were raised before night.

During the afternoon, Capt. Miller, of the life-saving station, arrived, having been in search of the bodies since the day previous. On Sunday morning, the Sea Wing took the bodies, ready for burial, to the island.

Gibson was a married man, and leaves a wife and three children. Gallagher was unmarried.

Reports from the island are that the two men were fishing at Gull Island, had lifted their nets, and were returning home when the squall struck them. They were seen to capsize, and a boat put out to assist them, but could do nothing. When found, the boat was dismasted, and right side up, but full of water. The men were lying face downward, one in each end, and the bodies were lashed to the thwarts. Their faces were bruised and bleeding, and the features were almost unrecognizable, because of the pounding they had received from the timbers of the boat tossed by the waves.

It is evident that the men realized the danger before them, and lashed themselves to the boat, possibly hoping to ride out the gale, or, in the event of death, that their bodies would be carried ashore, found and receive christian burial. They were in the water about 38 or 40 hours before they were found.

IN SLEEP ETERNAL.

The Body of America's Hero of Heroes Consigned to the Dust.

The Casket Bearing His Ashes Borne to the Tomb by the Hudson.

The Solemn Pageant Swelled by Bare-headed and Sorrow-Stricken Myriads.

The funeral pageant in New York in honor of Gen. Grant was the most imposing ever witnessed in the United States, or perhaps in the world. At 9:47 in the morning the great procession, under command of General Hancock, was set in motion at the City Hall. It marched north through Broadway, receiving continual accessions from the intersecting thoroughfares, and when completely formed the number in line was fully 75,000 men. Marching compactly and rapidly, over five hours were consumed in passing Madison Square, and it was not until after 5 o'clock in the evening that the funeral-car reached the place of sepulcher in Riverside Park, where the remains were entombed with impressive ceremonies. The President, Vice President, members of the Cabinet, Judges of the Supreme Court, Senators, Representatives, ex-Presidents, Governors of States, and Foreign Ministers were among the distinguished persons who participated in the demonstration. The entire city was clothed in the emblems of mourning, and the multitudes which viewed the pageant defied computation. We print below as full and accurate an account of the obsequies as our space will permit.

REMOVING THE REMAINS.

Final Scenes at the City Hall—The Funeral Car Started for Riverside.

Four o'clock had passed and the gray dawn had deepened into red daylight when the blue-coated veterans of Meade Post, of Philadelphia, 500 strong, came tramping up to the City Hall to the dirge music of the trumpets. The veterans entered the plaza and marched past, while muffled drums timed their footsteps. A heavy gun boomed out toward the sea. The chimes of old Trinity pealed mournful notes, and the sound of muffled drums grew fainter and died out. At 6 o'clock Wilson Post, of Baltimore, marched by, followed by a Chilean organization. The corridors had been picketed by fifteen police, while outside 125 more men were at rest. The last guard of the Grant G. A. R. Post, save the thirteen who attended the body to the tomb, had been moved at 5 o'clock. At 6:30 Capt. Barry and men of the Seventy-first Regiment went on the plaza. Muffled drums and dirgeful trumpets marched in at one side and took position at the east side. The players constituted the Davids Island Military Band. At 8:50 Gen. Hancock and his brilliant staff trooped slowly into the plaza from Broadway and presented front to the City Hall, then moving to the end of the plaza on Broadway, where they rested.

At this time 100 members of the Liederkranz Society filed up to the steps, and, led by four instruments, sang with impressive effect the chorus of "The Spirits from Over the Water," Schubert, and the "Pilgrim Chorus" from Tannhausor." The guard of regulars filed into the open space at 9 o'clock; Company A, Fifth Artillery, under Col. W. B. Beck, and Company E, Twelfth Infantry, under Maj. Brown. The companies and guard of regulars were under the command of Col. Beck. The regulars took position beneath the trees opposite the City Hall and stood at rest. Then came the original guard of honor that was on duty at Mount MacGregor and which lifted the remains to-day. Filing into the corridors of the City Hall these took their places beside the remains, and these were under the command of John H. Johnson, Senior Vice Commander of Grant Post, Brooklyn.

At 9:55 the imposing funeral car, drawn by twenty-four jet black horses in black trappings, halted on the plaza directly in front of the City Hall steps. Inside the corridor Commander Johnson was waiting. "Column in position right and left," was his command. The veteran guard of honor was erect. "Lift the remains," was the next command in clear but low tones. The twelve men stooped to the silver rails with gloved hands. "March," was the word. The body moved. Out upon the portico were born the remains, Commander Johnson immediately at the head. Down the steps with measured tread across the open space to the steps of the black and white car. Commander Johnson stepped aside. The silver mountings glistened as the burial case and its honor-laden was carried up and placed upon the dais in the mounted catafalque. The veterans retired down the steps. The body was alone for all to view, but deeply guarded. The honor guard, next to the hearse on either side, took the same relative positions they had maintained to the remains while being borne to the hearse. The steps were drawn away from the funeral car. Commander Johnson took his place in the center and immediately behind the funeral car. At his left and right on either rear corner of the car were Comrades Downing and Ormistice, of Wheeler Post, Saratoga. Next and directly behind these were representatives of the Loyal Legion abreast as follows: General John J. Milliam, General C. A. Carleton, Paymaster George D. Barton, Lieutenant Colonel Floyd Clarkson, Lieutenant Colonel A. M. Clark, and Captain E. Hunt.

The clergy and physicians had paid respect to the remains by alighting from their carriages and accompanying them from the steps to the hearse. They then entered carriages on either side of the plaza near Broadway as follows: Rev. Dr. Newman, Bishop Harris, Bishop Potter, Rev. Dr. Chambers, Rev. Dr. Field, Rev. Dr. Bridgeman, Rev. Dr. West, Rev. Father Deshon, Robert Collyer, Rabbi Brown, and Doctors Douglas, Shrady, and Sands. Col. Beck, in command of the regulars, commanded his companies to position, Company A on the right and Company E on the left of the hearse. Colored men were at the bridles of the seven four black horses. Sixteen men of Meade Post, of Philadelphia, of which Gen. Grant was a member, were abreast directly in front of the team of black leaders, and the Davids Island Band preceded them. A signal was given and the line of coaches with clergy moved off the plaza onto Broadway. The band stood waiting at the head of the funeral cortege. Col. Beck advanced to the head of the line of black horses before the coach. "Move on," were his words of command with uplifted sword. The leaders stepped forward, led by the colored men, and in an instant the black line of horses had straightened their traces and the wheels beneath the remains were moving. The hour was 9:47. The band played a dirge, the tramp of the regulars and honor guard beat upon the pave, thousands beneath the trees and crowding the sides of the square looked silently on, and the black funeral car rolled over the curb into Broadway. The black coaches of the City Hall were silent. Gen. Grant's last journey was begun.

Then at 9:52 Mayor Grace, Comptroller Loew, and Aldermen Sanger and Jachne emerged from the City Building and entered a carriage that had drawn up in front. The members of the Common Council followed and entered carriages, as did the Police Commissioners. They followed out on the plaza as fast as disposed of in carriages, and when it was ten o'clock the police lines were withdrawn and the people streamed across the plaza without hindrance. The last scene there was ended.

THE PAGEANT UNDER WAY.

Starting the Solemn Cortege—Some of the Principal Persons in the Line.

The plan of the parade was in brief as follows: The militia rested upon Broadway, stretched along from the City Hall as far as Thirty-fourth street on the east side of the street. The veteran troops were stretched along the west side of the street. When Gen. Hancock and staff and the regular army and navy contingents proceeded from the City Hall up to Thirty-fourth street the militia fell into marching order and closed in behind the regulars. The catafalque was then placed in line, followed by the mourners, the President and other distinguished persons in carriages. As these proceeded up Broadway the veteran troops wheeled into line and followed them. The civil organizations moved in from side streets after the veterans passed. By the time the last of the civic bodies joined the procession the head of it was nearly to Riverside Park.

At precisely 11:05 Gen. Hancock reached the head of the column, which was then at Twenty-third street and Broadway. Riding along the whole line of formation from the City Hall on his coal-black charger, in front of his brilliantly uniformed staff, he was the cynosure of all eyes. He rode with easy grace, and as the people caught sight of the commanding figure of Gettysburg they were inspired with expressions of admiration, which were only partly suppressed by the solemn character of the occasion. On arriving at the head of the column the General issued the order to march, and the mournful cortege began to move, wending its way slowly up Broadway to the solemn music of the bands, en route to Riverside Park.

The members of the Grant family, with the exception of Mrs. Grant, decided to await the arrival of the funeral procession at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Dr. Douglas joined them at the hotel at 9 a. m. Mrs. Sartoris was deeply affected during the meeting, and sobbed convulsively as she shook the hand of the physician who bore such an important part in the closing days of her father's life. At precisely 10 o'clock carriages drove up to the entrance, and the members of the family took seats in them as follows: Col. F. D. Grant, and Mrs. Sartoris and Mrs. Fred Grant took seats in the first carriage. The second carriage was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. U. S. Grant and Senor Romero. Jesse Grant and wife entered the third. In the fourth were Mr. and Mrs. Cramer. The next carriage contained Gen. Creswell and wife, and was followed by Potter Palmer and Mr. Monroe. In another and last carriage were Mr. Morton and Mr. Drexel.

At 10:30 a. m. President Cleveland appeared at the entrance of the hotel and immediately entered his carriage. He was accompanied by Secretary Bayard. The President was dressed in a plain black suit, black high silk hat, and carried an umbrella. Following the carriage of President Cleveland and those of the Grant family were carriages containing Vice President Hendricks and the delegations of the United States Senate and House of Representatives. These carriages formed in Twenty-third street, three abreast, in a line extending toward Sixth avenue, waiting the arrival of the catafalque. So elegiably did the procession move that the funeral car did not reach Twenty-third street until one o'clock, and President Cleveland, having become tired of waiting, left his open carriage and returned to his room in the hotel, accompanied by Secretary Bayard. Vice President Hendricks followed their example soon after and returned to the reception-room on the first floor, where he was soon surrounded by a crowd of friends. The President's example was followed by many others, who were in carriages and who stepped out upon the sidewalk, and Twenty-third street for a time contained on its sidewalks a gathering composed of the leading Generals and statesmen of the country.

During the passage of the procession the desire to see the grand and imposing pageant was so great that many of the occupants of carriages which were to follow the funeral, ascended upon and stood on the top of the coaches or occupied the seats of the drivers. At 12:30 p. m. President Cleveland appeared at a side window of the second story of the hotel and gazed long and earnestly at the vast crowd assembled in the streets and in Madison Square. After another long halt the procession again began to move forward, whereupon the President retired from the window, and when the funeral car approached he resumed his seat in the carriage.

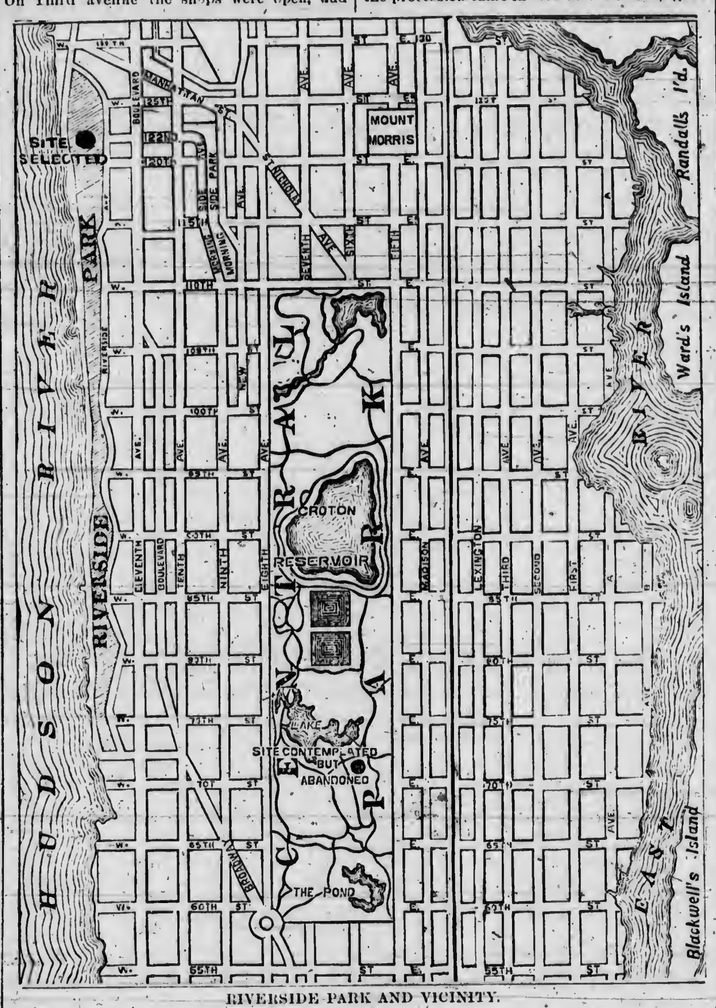
The other carriages fell quickly into line without confusion. The Congressional committee and other officers from Washington were distinguished by broad white sashes. Speaker Carlisle and ex-Speaker Randall rode with Congressman Ellsworth, of New York, and Reed, of Maine. One carriage held Congressman John D. Long, of Massachusetts; Randolph Tucker, of Virginia; Ben Butterworth, of Ohio, and Gen. King, of Louisiana. The Senatorial delegation paired off as follows, the Senators riding in twos: Senators Morrill, of Vermont, and Cockrell, of Missouri; Sherman, of Ohio, and Ransom, of North Carolina; Ingalls, of Kansas, and Harris, of Tennessee; Palmer, of Michigan, and Miller, of New York; Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, and Manderson, of Nebraska; Brown, of Georgia, and Evarts, of New York. Congressmen Hiss, of Brooklyn, and Ward, of Chicago, rode together, and Gen. Bingham, of Tennessee, Wheeler, of Alabama, and Lowry, of Indiana, were in one coach. One of the carriages containing members of Gen. Grant's military staff carried Gen. Horace Porter, Rufus Ingalls, C. B. Comstock and William S. Smith. In another rode Gen. Parker. Grant's Military Secretary during the war, who was present at the meeting between Grant and Lee at Appomatox, and still has in his possession the original draft of the terms of surrender in Grant's handwriting. It was given him as a keepsake by his chief. With Vice President Hendricks rode his Secretary, Mr. East, his friend Mr. Depauw, of Indiana, and Senator Blair, of New Hampshire.

Governor Hill rode, in a plain civilian's dress and black silk hat, together with his military secretary, Colonel L. W. Othiette. Seventeen staff officers, mounted, followed. Governor Hill was the only Governor who was attended by a mounted staff. Indian Commissioner Vincent Colyer, John K. Boise, and John Charlton occupied seats in one coach together.

TO THE PLACE OF REST.

Incidents of the Progress of the Solemn Procession Through the City.

At Twenty-eighth street and Broadway the crowd was so great that those persons who stood nearest the street on the sidewalk were forced into the roadway and so badly upon the members of the Forty-seventh (Brooklyn) Regiment, which was passing at the time, as to compel the mounted police to come forward and force them back. The streets up-town, parallel with Broadway, were occupied by a throng which moved rapidly, with no apparent end in view. On Third avenue the shops were open, and here and there along the road. In the midst of handsome residences were tucked numerous little huts. Rude in construction, patched with rough timbers, neither painted nor adorned, seemingly thrown together, they looked very plain and humble, and when some of the worn veterans realized this point in the line of march and saw fastened to these simple houses a narrow, heliragged, faded piece of black in token of the dead hero a deeper sense of sorrow went through these solid ranks. The foot-sore troops now found relief on the broad macadamized boulevard and the Riverside drive. To many of them the route was unfamiliar and it was a pleasant change to be beyond the rows of closely built dwellings, which obstructed the passage of the air and to see wide spaces of land not long to remain unoccupied, costly residences here and there, built with a full appreciation of the possibilities of the western part of the city; shanties of sovereign squatters; the broad Hudson, glistening in the sun and relieving its unhrageous banks, and the well-laid walks, smooth lawns and noble trees of Riverside Park. No less manifest was the popular disposition to pay tribute to the honored dead at this stage of the route than when the lines were formed at the City Hall. It was here that chiefly the humbler classes of society formed the human barrier on their side of the funeral throng. Their reverence in presence of the dead was apparent; the farther from brick walls the procession moved, the more strongly did nature impress the hearts of those who marched.



RIVERSIDE PARK AND VICINITY.

people seemed to buy and sell, though not very vigorously.

When the escort had passed the Windsor Hotel, at Forty-seventh street, there was a break of at least three-quarters of an hour. The crowd had awaited the catafalque and the funeral car, but it did not come. The crowd filled into the street and the police were powerless. The wildest rumors prevailed. It was said that the crowd had become so great and had pressed so close to the funeral car that it was impossible to move on. The facts were that several persons had fainted and ambulance surgeons were attending them. At 1:30 o'clock the crowds were driven back and the car proceeded. All along the line the police had great trouble with the crowd, which was quiet and respectful, but curious. The police detail was insufficient, and at Forty-second street the Eleventh Company, which paraded with the Eighth Regiment, was ordered out of line and charged on the crowd with fixed bayonets. One man was stabbed, but not seriously.

At Fifty-seventh street and Fifth Avenue, where center the wealth, luxury, and fashion of New York, the procession had fairly got itself into proper swing and observance of distance between its subdivisions. Here, from a window of Secretary Whitney's house, the spectacle was at its best. Steady regulars in their plain garb, more gorgeous national guardsmen, well trained to street marching, marines, and soldiers, their faces bronzed by tropic suns, marched well in order, while at the head, stately and strong, rode Hancock, "the Superb," as they used to call him in the Army of the Potomac, rather older and grayer, but even more impressive than when at Williamsburg he turned to his brigade and said: "Now, gentlemen, the bayonet."

The catafalque loomed solemn above the hushed crowd which lined the streets, the following carriages to some extent marring the funeral effect. This incongruity was forgotten, however, when the members of the Grand Army marched by. There were true mourners—comrades and followers of the dead man in battle, faithfully paying their last tribute of respect. No attempt at pomp or ceremony marred this part of the column. These men in plain clothes typified the true genius of the republic and its saving strength in the stalwart courage which in the hour of the country's need could calmly lay down the implements of peaceful industry, substitute the musket, fight four years for a sentiment, and at the conclusion quietly drop back into the peaceful ranks of society. With admiration was mingled a feeling of sadness as the eye marked gray hairs and bent forms when memory recalled the fresh faces and vigorous figures of twenty years ago.

There were three blocks before the boulevard could be reached. The tired marchers who bravely kept their place in the line wiped the perspiration from their brows and curled their lips in slight contempt at those who had withdrawn. If there was a feeling in the breasts of any soldiers that there would be fewer eyes to gaze upon their glittering trappings it must have been quickly dispelled. The sea of faces was still unbroken, reverent here as before, bowed and bared while the black car rolled on. This was now in preparation for the tired cohorts. They held themselves more erect, the lagging limbs quickened their pace, the muffled drums beat with quicker and even the saddle horses stiffened their ears and seemed surprised that the crowd of humanity was as thick as ever. On the private houses, on the towering apartment building, which mark this part of the city, the occupants were present. They were no feeble for the masse with which they were living.

At Fifty-ninth street the escort was allowed the route-steps. The grasp of the guns was loosened and the head of the column halted, and there was a chance for rest. "Forward, march!" came the order again. The ripple of movement followed down the long line. Now the column had left the thickly built portion of the city, as solitary blocks of dwellings stood here and there along the road. In the midst of handsome residences were tucked numerous little huts. Rude in construction, patched with rough timbers, neither painted nor adorned, seemingly thrown together, they looked very plain and humble, and when some of the worn veterans realized this point in the line of march and saw fastened to these simple houses a narrow, heliragged, faded piece of black in token of the dead hero a deeper sense of sorrow went through these solid ranks. The foot-sore troops now found relief on the broad macadamized boulevard and the Riverside drive. To many of them the route was unfamiliar and it was a pleasant change to be beyond the rows of closely built dwellings, which obstructed the passage of the air and to see wide spaces of land not long to remain unoccupied, costly residences here and there, built with a full appreciation of the possibilities of the western part of the city; shanties of sovereign squatters; the broad Hudson, glistening in the sun and relieving its unhrageous banks, and the well-laid walks, smooth lawns and noble trees of Riverside Park. No less manifest was the popular disposition to pay tribute to the honored dead at this stage of the route than when the lines were formed at the City Hall. It was here that chiefly the humbler classes of society formed the human barrier on their side of the funeral throng. Their reverence in presence of the dead was apparent; the farther from brick walls the procession moved, the more strongly did nature impress the hearts of those who marched.

SERVICES AT THE TOMB.

The Remains Laid Away Amid Simple but Impressive Ceremonies.

At 1:15 o'clock a squad of mounted police came up to the drive, heralding the entrance of the funeral cortege into the park, and sailors bearing curiously marked little flags ran to the edge of the bluff and began to wave dispatches to officers on the deck of Rear Admiral Joutt's flagship in the river below. Two minutes later the procession came in view and the heavy guns of the warship, which for a few minutes had been silent, boomed forth again, thundering a mournful greeting to the earthly remains of the greatest chieftan of his age. As the flames belched from the mouths of the heavy pieces of cannon the reports went rolling back over the green-clad palisades, reverberating again and again like the sound of rumbling thunder in the distance. First came Gen. Hancock in an open carriage. His horse had taken sick at One Hundred and-Fifth street, and the stately old warrior was compelled to use a carriage provided for just such an emergency. Behind him rode his staff in bright uniforms. Conspicuous among them could be seen the soldierly forms of ex-Confederate Gens. Fitzhugh Lee and J. B. Gordon. The former rode between two Union officers, and wore a Derby hat of confederate gray, while across his breast stretched a broad sash of material of the same color. Other ex-Confederates were there, and they talked in subdued tones of the days when they met on the battle-fields of the South.

When the hub of the column reached the circle within which is the tomb of the hero the soldiers marched down the east drive—artillery, marines and blue jackets—and were massed in pretty form on the knoll just to the north. Then came the Twenty-second and Seventh Regiments, which were drawn up in a long line in the westerly drive. Below them was a battery of light artillery, whose pieces were trained and pointed toward the New Jersey shore. The heavily laden funeral car was so heavy that its progress was necessarily slow, so that it was more than three hours after the head of the column reached the tomb before the car came in sight. During the interval the companies of the Seventh Regiment marched over from their position, and, reverently uncovering their heads, passed through the narrow, temporary home of the loved dead, while they and others inspected the structure. The privileged few who held passes gathered within the enchalked inclosure back of the vault, and in low tones talked of the dead hero.

From Claremont over the intervening trees came the tolling of a great bell, its sonorous notes falling heavily on the ear. At precisely 3:30 o'clock the sad strains of music gave notice of the approach of the catafalque, and the waiting soldiers came to order. In a few minutes a string of carriages came into view and shortly drew up in front of the tomb. From them alighted, first, Rev. J. P. Newman and Bishop Harris. Following them were Gens Sheridan and Buckner, Sherman and Joe Johnston, Gen. John A. Logan and George W. Bontwell. Then came the funeral car, preceded by the band and surrounded by the members of George G. Meade Post, of Philadelphia. Behind them, and coming slowly down between the ranks of soldiers at present arms, were the family and mourners, among whom were President Cleveland, Vice President Hendricks, ex-Presidents Arthurs and Hayes, Senator John Sherman, and other notables. When the car had reached its place before the door of the tomb the Governor's Island Band, stationed on the knoll to the north, started to play, and all down the ranks muffled drums beat a sad tattoo. When the steps prepared for the purpose were placed at the back of the car the veterans of Meade Post, who were chosen as pallbearers mounted to it and, under command of an officer below, bore the casket to the cedar box on the ground before the door.

Behind them came Colonel Grant, with his wife, his brother's wife, and little Nellie. They took their places to the south of the casket. President Cleveland and General Hancock were directly behind, while Dr. Newman, Bishop Harris, and the soldiers and prominent officials ranged themselves at the north and west sides. When the casket had been placed in the cedar lead-lined box the members of Meade Post stepped forward, and, as was their right, began the last services over the body of their dead comrade. The services were very brief. Post Commander Alex. Reed, stepping forward, said:

"We are assembled to pay the last sad tribute of respect to our late commander and illustrious comrade, U. S. Grant. Let us unite in prayer. The Chaplain will invoke the divine blessing."

Post Chaplain C. Irvine Wright then said:

"God of battles! Father of all! Amidst this mournful assemblage we seek Thee with whom there is no death. Open every eye to behold Him who changed the night of death into morning. In the depths of our hearts we would hear the celestial words, 'I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.' As comrade after comrade departs and we march on with ranks broken help us to be faithful unto Thee and to each other. We beseech Thee, look in mercy on the widows and children of deceased comrades, and with thine own tenderness console and comfort those bereaved by this event which calls us here. Give them the oil of joy for mourning—the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Heavenly Father! bless and save our country with the freedom and peace of righteousness, and through Thy great mercy, a Savior's grace, and Thy throne in heaven, and to Thy great name shall be praise forever and ever."

At the close of his address a grizzled bugler came out of the throng, and, standing directly over the body, sounded "taps." Then Bishop Harris came forward, and, while a gentleman standing near shielded his head from the sun, which beat fiercely down, he began the beautiful burial service, which commences, "I am the resurrection and the life." When he had concluded he read from Corinthians xv., 41, and following verses: "There is one glory of the sun and another of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another in glory," etc. Then Comrade Lewis E. Moore laid a wreath of evergreens on the casket, saying: "In behalf of the post I give this tribute, a symbol of undying love from comrades of the war." Comrade John A. Wiedersheim laid flowers upon the coffin and named them symbols of purity. Another wreath of laurel was laid upon the casket by Comrade J. A. Sellars as a last token of affection from comrades in arms. Then Rev. Dr. Newman read the rest of the burial service. Then came an address by Rev. J. W. Savres, Chaplain-in-chief of the Department of Pennsylvania, G. A. R., in which he spoke, according to the formula prescribed for such occasions, of another comrade's march being over, whose virtue all should cherish, whose example all should emulate.

Then again came the grizzled bugler to the front. In his eyes were tears, and his lips quivered. With trembling arm he lifted the instrument to his lips, and there broke upon the still air the beautiful and sad notes of the soldier's long farewell, called by them "Rest." As he played the tears ran down his cheeks and the notes quivered soft and low. Grim Phil Sheridan turned and looked at the bugler. He put his hand to his face and then turned to that old war horse, Gen. Sherman, whose eyes were fixed on the player in sympathy. Little Nellie, too, peeped between the tall forms of the soldiers, and then looked askance at her father, whose head was bowed upon his breast. With the last quivering notes of the soldiers' "Good night," a gun from the Alliance in the river below boomed out. But one gun was fired, and as its echo died away in the Jersey hills the casket was placed in the steel case and taken to the tomb. Undertaker Merritt closed the doors, locked them, and, putting the key in a velvet-covered case, handed it to General Hancock, who gave it to Mayor Grace, the latter in turn delivering it to President Crimmins, of the Park Commissioners.

Just as the casket, inclosed in the cedar box and steel case, was placed in the tomb John Hawkins, the colored coachman who drove Gen. Grant, when President, stepped within the vault and reverently placed a bouquet of roses on the top of the steel case. When all was over the members of the family of the dead turned sadly away and entered their carriages. All the friends went away in their coaches, while the military departed some by railroad and some by steamer. The crowd dispersed as quickly as its enormous proportions would permit, and taxed every means of conveyance to the utmost in the haste of its departure.

The work of sealing up the tomb began at 6:30 p. m. Fifty-six bolts of steel were driven into the outer wall of the case, making it absolutely air-tight and waterproof. At 10 p. m., everything being completed, Undertaker Merritt locked the great door with a huge key and handed it to Police Captain Beattie. Then the police formed and marched away, leaving the tomb in charge of Captain Fessenden, with a guard of eight regulars to act as sentinels for the night.

The hardest work of the day was that of the four stalwart men who walked beside the catafalco. They carried heavy poles with steel hooks at the ends, and with these pushed up all low-lying telegraph wires. The poles weighed twenty-five pounds apiece and were in constant use from the time the catafalco left up-town until long after the funeral was over. At Fifty-seventh street and Sixth avenue the obstructions were so near to the ground that the plume was removed to prevent its being knocked off the great hearse.

THE COTTAGE AT MT. McGREGOR UNDER GAURD.

ELSEWHERE.

Honoring the Memory of the Dead Hero.

In all sections of the United States unprecedented honors were paid to the memory of the old commander. In Chicago the day was observed in a becoming manner, notwithstanding the inclement weather. The city was profusely draped, and business was universally suspended. The procession, which comprised many military and civic organizations and representatives of various branches of the public service, was one hour and a half in passing a given point. In the evening memorial services were held at Battery D Armory, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. In all the leading cities of the United States, and in hundreds of towns and villages, similar tributes were paid to the memory of the illustrious dead. At Baltimore, Louisville, Charleston, Atlanta, New Orleans, and many other Southern cities, demonstrations were made in which ex-Confederates took a conspicuous part. At the military posts the honors of war were accorded to the late Commander in Chief. The American legations abroad were closed during the day, and memorial services were held in Paris, the City of Mexico, and other foreign capitals.

A RACE ROMANCE.

Descended in Three Generations from the Five Great Race Divisions.

Smith Dandridge, who is one of the best-known and most highly respected colored citizens of Akron, Ohio, was born in slavery at Martinsburg, Va., in 1841. Mrs. Dandridge, whose maiden name was Margaret Kaponia Maquet, was born in the Village of Mowe, on o. s of the Sandwich or Hawaiian Islands, in the year 1848. The history of each prior to their meeting and marriage partakes of the nature of a romance. Mrs. Dandridge's father, Charles Maquet, was a native of the Island of St. Helena, and during his childhood days had often seen Napoleon Bonaparte during the closing days of that celebrated Corsican's banishment. Early in life Maquet grew weary of his native island, and on board a whaling vessel that touched at St. Helena he sailed away. He left the ship at Mowe, the Sandwich Islands port already named. Soon after his arrival there he married the daughter of a native mother and a Chinese father. Their only child was Margaret, and the Malay-Mongolian mother died when she was yet an infant. She was given by her father to an American lady, Mrs. Lewers, wife of a wealthy lumberman and sugar planter then residing there. Mrs. Lewers returned to the United States in 1855 and brought her Sandwich Islands protege—then almost a woman—with her. Meanwhile Dandridge, in whose veins coursed some Caucasian blood, had worn the galling bonds of slavery until he was 21. Then, in 1862, he ran away from his master to join the Union army while it was passing Martinsburg. In that section of the Union forces was the regiment of Col. Buckley, and to it the colored fugitive attached himself. The same year the Colonel paid a visit to his home in Akron, and brought Dandridge with him. Here he worked two years upon the farm of A. B. Matthews, who also owned another farm at West Middleton, Pa., and is now a wealthy Western cattle owner. In 1865 Dandridge was sent by Matthews to act as overseer on the Pennsylvania farm, where Mrs. Lewers, sister to Matthews, together with Margaret Kaponia Maquet, the Sandwich Islands girl, was then stopping for a time. The friendship which naturally followed the meeting of Dandridge and the latter soon ripened into love, though born at points almost antipodal upon the earth's geography. They were wedded in 1866 and soon after went to Akron. They have three children, who may justly claim to have within their veins the blood from four of the five great race divisions of mankind. Dandridge combines by the relation of consanguinity the essential element of descendancy from both Caucasian and African races—a thing not uncommon before the war—while Mrs. Dandridge has but to trace her lineage back to grandparents on her mother's side to introduce, as already stated, Malay and Mongolian stock. Could it be established—as is believed by some—that the natives of St. Helena had their origin in the Indian race, the children of Smith Dandridge and Margaret Kaponia Maquet might claim direct descent, within three generations, from the five great race divisions.—Chicago Herald.

Allspice and Cloves.

The home of the allspice tree is South America and the West Indies, especially Jamaica. The tree is a beautiful evergreen. The flowers are small, and do not make much display. In Jamaica the tree grows without any care; but the fruit is worth so much that the planters give more attention to this crop than to any other. The berries must be picked before they are ripe, or they lose their pleasant flavor. One hundred and fifty pounds of the fruit are sometimes gathered from one tree. The crops are uncertain. It is only once in five years that it is abundant.

The clove tree is a native of the Molucca Islands. It is said to be the most beautiful, elegant and precious of all trees. It is conical in form, and lives from one hundred to two hundred years. The spice is not the fruit, as is generally believed, but it is the blossoms, that are gathered before they unfold. About a dozen of these blossoms form a cluster at the end of each branch and twig of a tree. Cloves are gathered in December, and dried quickly in the shade.

In the year 1521 the Molucca Islands were inhabited by a great number of people who were industrious, enterprising and happy. They devoted most of their time to the cultivation of the clover tree. Cloves were carried to all parts of the civilized world from these islands. At this time the Spaniards and Portuguese came and took the first ship load of cloves to Europe. About one hundred years later the Dutch drove away the Spaniards and Portuguese. They also sent ships to these beautiful islands and destroyed every clove tree. Any of the natives who dared to set out a clove tree was put to death. The natives all died or were carried away as slaves. Then, to raise the price of cloves, the Dutch burned a part of the crop every year. These annual burnings continued until as late as 1824.—Anon.

SOME time ago the discovery was made by M. Ch. Montigny, by means of a beautiful instrument called the scintillometer, that blue largely predominates in the twinkling of the stars when there is much water in the atmosphere, and that the preponderance of green or violet is indicative of great dryness. A late series of tables by the Brussels savant indicates that he has hit upon a law by which a wet or dry season may be predicted with great certainty.

A Daily Defalcation.

The Hon. John Kelly, the head and front of Tammany Hall, a man of strict integrity, an indefatigable worker, early at his office, late to leave, so burdened with business that regular meals were seldom known by him, with mind in constant tension and energies steadily trained, finally broke down!

The wonder is that he did not sooner give way. An honest man in all things else, he acted unfairly with his physical resources. He was ever drawing upon this bank without ever depositing a collateral. The account overdrawn, the bank suspends and both are now in the hands of medical receivers.

It is not work that kills men. It is irregularity of habits and mental worry. No man in good health frets at his work. Bye and bye when the bank of vigor suspends, these men will wonder how it all happened, and they will keep wondering until their dying day unless, perchance, some candid physician or interested friend will point out to them how by irregularity, by excessive mental effort, by constant worry and fret, by plunging in deeper than they had a right to go, they have produced that loss of nervous energy which almost invariably expresses itself in a deranged condition of the kidneys and liver, for it is a well-known fact that the poison which the kidneys and liver should remove from the blood, if left therein, soon knocks the life out of the strongest and most vigorous man or woman. Daily building up of these vital organs by so wonderful and highly reputed a specific as Warner's safe cure, is the only guarantee that our business men can have that their strength will be equal to the labors daily put upon them.

Mr. Kelly has nervous dyspepsia, we learn, indicating, as we have said, a break-down of nerve force. His case should be a warning to others who, pursuing a like course, will certainly reach a like result.—Sunday Herald.

Will a Southern Man Lie?

John Locker lives in Fayette County, this State, at present, but he was raised in North Carolina, where he spent most of his life. He is about sixty years of age and is bearded like a Russian bear, with scarcely a silver thread discernible. His eyes are small and black, and when he talks to you he gives you the impression that he suspects you are doubting his word, and wants to beat the liver out of you for it.

His stories of experience in "Caroline," however, are not all as tough as the one following, which, by the way, he swears is as true as the Bible.

"We farmers," said he, "used to hev rough times down in Caroline. Everything's improved, nowerdays. That ar set o' gears on the hoss"—pointing to a harnessed animal hitched to a wagon—"aint wrought on a hait by the weather—'specially ef you keep 'em we. greased. I've seed the time when a hull set o' gears wuz made up of a big wooden collar an' a pair o' old raw-hide traces, that wuz as stretchy in wet weather ez the seventh commandment. I recollec' one time we run out o' wood an' I druv to a piece o' timber fer a load. The best I could afford in the way of a team them days wuz a mule an' a four-wheeled cart—with raw-hide traces 'sted o' shalves. Wal, I hadn't more'n got to the woods when it began to rain like fury; an' hit jes' kep' pouring down the hull time I wuz loadin'. When I got through I mounted the mule an' started home. I noticed on the way that the load 'peared to be gettin' heavier an' heavier, tell we fetched up at the woodshed, which wuz a pull o' about a quarter mile. When we got thar' the mule wuz well nigh fagged out, an' he hed to brace hisself to keep from droppin' back on his haunches.

"When we pulled up at the cabin it hed quit rainin' an' the sun wuz out bright an' warm. I jumped back to unload. Now you may guess how amazin' suprised I wuz to find no wood or wagon behind us—but I seed the traces wuz pulled out tight as fiddle-strings, an' reached back along the track to the timber line, whar' I lost sight o' the durn things.

"While I stud thar' lookin' like a fool—jes' es you're lookin' now—I act'ally seed thet wagon with the wood on it come creepin outen the timber, follerin' the raw-hide traces es they drawed up in the sun. You see, the rain had slackened 'em; an' sure es I'm here, they hed stretched an' stretched, an' I b'lieve in my soul the load didn't start tell the mule got to the cabin an' braced hisself."

"Did the wagon come up all right?"

"Oh, yes; but the work o' dryin' an' contractin' the traces wuz slow, an' ef I hadn't haltered the mule to a stump I reckon he'd a give back. Ez it wuz, the load pulled up in about fifteen minutes, an' stopped in a couple o' yards o' the mule's heels. When I outied the beast he staggered around tell I thought he'd faint, but he didn't.

"Now, ef you don't credit this story, I kin take you back to Caroline an' show you the very identical piece o' timber—tho' the cabin's been tore down twenty year or more, an' the mule turned up his huffs a short time after I lef' the State."—Indianapolis Herald.

An Arctic Appetite.

If intensity of appetite is the measure of the pain suffered by persons who are starving to death, it would seem that to die in the arctic regions is a much greater agony than to die in the tropics, for cold sharpens hunger. Lieut. Greely says that his party had ferocious appetites during all the long sojourn in the north, each man eating with relish three meals of animal food and two lunches every day, and craving fat, though not to the extent some arctic travelers report. As a means to fortify the system against cold or brace it up for forced marches, whisky, rum, and other alcoholic stimulants were regarded as of little benefit.

DON'T take that "cocktail in the morning." If you have a "swelled head," nauseated stomach, and unstrung nerves resulting from the "convivial party last night," the sure and safe way to clear the cobwebs from the brain, recover zest for food, and tone up the nervous system, is to use Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." Sold by all druggists.

"WHAT have you to remark about my singing?" asked an irate vocalist. "Nothing," replied a spectator; "it is not remarkable."

He Kept the Whole House Awake

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Mr. F. O. McCleary, a prominent solicitor of patents of this city, was troubled for several weeks with a severe cough, which not only deprived him of sleep but annoyed others. The only thing which did him any good, he says, was the new preparation Red Star Cough Cure, a purely vegetable compound, free from opiates, narcotics, or poisons of any kind.

How to Tell a Tornado.

A Western man who has lived among tornadoes all his life, who was raised with them, as it were, says that it is easy to distinguish a tornado from an ordinary blow. A cyclone or tornado north of the equator always comes from the southwest. Its first appearance is that of a local cloud. It always comes when the temperature is low. It is nothing more than an electric storm. The earth refuses to receive the electricity that is constantly being generated, and it accumulates in a mass. When the cloud extends from one side of the horizon to the other, there is no danger of a cyclone.—Atlanta Constitution.

If Your Liver Reminds You

Of its existence by dull pain or sharp twinges in the right side, or beneath the dexter shoulder-blade, accept the reminder as a warning, and regulate the organ without loss of time, by the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The above symptoms are usually accompanied by yellowness of the skin, constipation, furred tongue, disorder of the stomach, sick headache and morning nausea. But a reform is promptly instituted by the bitters, the best possible substitute for calomel, blue pill, and other super-potent and hurtful drugs erroneously designated as remedies for biliousness. Appetite and digestion are restored, and the bowels resume activity, when an impetus is given to the functions of health by this sterling anti-bilious medicine, which also has the effect of enriching and purifying the circulation, and fortifying the system against malarial infection in air or water. It is also highly beneficial for rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles.

THE London Board of Works has under its control 1,800 acres of land devoted to parks. Of these Blackheath is the most spacious, Hampstead Heath and Clapham Common coming next. Southwark Park affords an instance of a somewhat unpromising spot, being being now "a much valued place of resort," in the midst of a large population. The Thames Embankment Gardens, covering altogether fourteen acres, adorn the banks of the river, and conduce to the enjoyment of multitudes who in this respect possess a privilege unknown to a previous generation. To the space commanded by the Board in the shape of parks, it is to be hoped that the seventy-two acres offered by the Goveror of Dulwich College will be added by the authority of Parliament in the present session.

Never Open Your Mouth

except to put something to eat into it, is an excellent motto for the gossip and the sufferer from catarrh. But while the gossip is practically incurable, there is no excuse for any one's suffering longer from catarrh. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is an unfailing cure for that offensive disease. It heals the diseased membrane, and removes the dull and depressed sensations which always attend catarrh. A short trial of this valuable preparation will make the sufferer feel like a new being.

IF there had been another woman and a lawyer in the garden of Eden, Eve would have probably got a divorce and married the devil.

THE only reliable cure for catarrh is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

THE striped stick candy must go. There is enough poison in one hundred and sixty-five pounds of it to kill a boy. Just think of it.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot; 600 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stage, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union than at any first-class hotel in the city.

IF a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, is a mole on the face worth two in the ground?

"Put up" at the Gault House.

The business man or tourist will find first-class accommodations at the low price of $2 and $2.50 per day at the Gault House, Chicago, corner Clinton and Madison streets. This far-famed hotel is located in the center of the city, only one block from the Union Depot. Elevator; all appointments first-class.

Amputation of the Leg.

Money is the universal necessity, and none but a cynic or a fool will affect to despise it. Mr. Abram Ellsworth, of Port Ewen, Ulster County, N. Y., had realized this truth. His disease involved the whole of his thigh-bone, and the suffering man looked forward not without apparent reason, to death as his only deliverer. The family physicians refused to amputate the limb, asserting that the operation would kill the patient on the spot. Dr. David KENNEDY, of Rondout, N. Y., who was consulted, held a different opinion and amputated the limb. The Doctor then administered freely his great Blood Specific, FAVORITE REMEDY, to afford tone and strength to the system and prevent the return of the disease, and Mr. Ellsworth remains to this day in the bloom of health. It is gentleman's disease was the offspring of foul blood, and Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY purified the blood and restored to him the power once more to enjoy his life. Are you suffering from any disease traceable to the same cause? Try Favorite Remedy. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a bottle. Bear in mind the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, N. Y.

To Keep the Blood Pure is the principal end of inventions and discoveries in medicine. To this object probably no one has contributed more signally than Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., in the production of a medicine which has become famous under the title of the "Favorite Remedy." It removes all impurities of the Blood, regulates the disordered Liver and Kidneys, cures Constipation, Dyspepsia, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females.

DROPSY TREATED FREE.

DR. H. H. GREEN,
A Specialist for Eleven Years Past,

Has treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; uses vegetable remedies entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.

Cures patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.

From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.

Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of my treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing, cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Send for 10 days' treatment; directions and terms free. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted and dripped water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.

Epilepsy ills positively cured.

Unto the Least of These.

What have you done to-day, my friend,
To comfort the weary and strengthen the weak?
Ar't ready from out of thy store to lend
To Him who hath promised a recompense sweet?

Did you ever think, as you looked around
With a feeling akin to selfish pride,
If you in your brother's place had been found
You might have been just as sorely tried?

Oh! hearts that are cold as the pitiless grave;
Hands that have never been stretched out to save
A brother from depths of sin and woe,
Less cruel than you were even the grave.

For even the grave seems to promise them rest,
And the sweet flowers blossom as freely o'er them
And the sun shines as brightly as tho' they were blest
With lives pure and blameless as thine may have been.

The Two Pledges.

Little Dennie was the only son of a clergyman, who, some years since lived on the shore of Lake George. This was before the commencement of the temperance reformation, when every family kept intoxicating liquors constantly on hand and used them as an occasional, if not a daily beverage. Taught by the example of his father and guests the little boy contracted a love for strong drinks that gave his parents most painful apprehensions on his account and was the subject of their frequent but unvailing remonstrance. At length, at a barn-raising he had been permitted to attend and where he had free access to a keg of liquor, he became dead drunk and was laid upon a board under a tree. The rest of the story we copy in the language of the author.

About four o'clock his father called to accompany him home; not seeing him he eagerly inquired for his child. They pointed him to the place where he lay. With a heart full of sorrow he carried him home to his mother and sisters. Together his parents watched beside his bed during the tedious night that followed, not knowing but that dreadful stupor would result in his death, but fully resolved, if he lived not to leave untried any effort that might promise to save him.

It was not until evening of the second day that he was restored to perfect consciousness. His parents thought it best not to speak to him of the cause of this illness for some days hoping his own reflections would do him much more good; but in this they were disappointed—he did not exhibit the first symptoms of remorse or consciousness that he had done wrong.

About a week after the event just related his father invited him one pleasant moring to take a walk. Their road lay along the shore of the lake and was lined with stately trees on either side. For a time they walked along in silence.

"Dennie," said he, "do you know what made you so sick the other day?"

"Why, I suppose I drank too much rum," he artlessly replied,

"Why, my son, do you know that I think you are in danger of becoming a drunkard."

"Why, father, I know you tell me so but I am not afraid of it. You drink rum every day and you are not a drunkard; and when I get old enough to know how much it will do for me to drink then I can keep from being drunk too."

They both seated themselves on a rock near the shore and most faithfully did his father speak of the evils of intemperance. Then, taking a small gold watch from his pocket, which Dennie had long desired to call his own, he said: "Dennie, if you will promise me that you will never drink any more rum I will give you the gold watch. Will you do it?"

Rising from his seat, he replied: "I will tell you, father, what I will do. If it is wrong for me to drink it is wrong for you, and if you stop drinking I will."

Had a flash of lightning burst from the cloudless sky above them his father would not have been more startled. How could he preach or perform the laborious duties of a pastor without his daily glass of bitters? How could he get up in a cold winter's night and go and pray by the bed of some dying parishioner without something to prevent him from taking cold! How could he attend the various ecclesiastical meetings of the church without something to help him bear the fatigue of the journey? The sacrfice was indeed great but the welfare of his child demanded it.

And, summoning all his resolution, with a faltering voice he said: "I will do it, my son." And thus they pledged themselves to total abstinence there, the lake, the trees and the pure blue sky being the only witnesses, save the Holy Being who is everywhere. As they retraced their steps, the father, taking the little watch, from his pocket, gave it to Dennie and said: "My son, you have long wished that I would give you this watch. It's now yours so long as you keep your promise. Should that ever be broken I shall expect you to return it to me. Until then let it be a token to you of this promise we have now made."

Years have passed and the same little Dennie is now a distinguished clergyman in one of the most populous western cities. Four bright little boys call him father. The same little gold watch decorates his wall and often does he point to it and tell of his danger and escape from the whirlpool of intemperance.—Ex.

The Unprotected Workingman.

Here in Michigan where lumber, salt, copper, iron, and in fact every thing that the state produces, is highly protected, what portion of the profits does the laboring men receive? The last census shows that we had $92,930,959 capital invested in manufactories; that 77,591 persons were employed in manufacturing; that $25,313,682 was paid out in wages; that $92,900,269 was paid out for materials and that the value of the gross manufactured product was $150,715,025. If we divide the amount of wages paid out ($25,313,682) by the number of hands employed (77,691) we have a yearly salary of $326.24, or a trifle over $1 per day for the 313 working days of the year, which certainly does not show that a high protective tariff has the desired influence of raising the wages of wage-workers after all. But it does have the effect of securing very liberal profits to the employers. Add the wages paid ($25,313,682) and the cost of material used ($92,900,269) and the sum is $118,213,957. Subtract this from the value of the gross product ($150,715,025) and there is left $32,502,074—which represents the net profits of the business. It will be observed that the net profits ($32,502,074) is greater than the amount paid out in wages ($25,313,682). The wages average $326.24 per hand, and the profits average $418.89 per hand; the investment paid almost forty per cent annually, or more than doubled itself every three years. The employer received $745.11 for each hand's work, or more than double what he paid his help—he retained from each hand $418.89 for being boss, and handed the residue, $326.24, over to the workmen for doing the work.

Plainly then, the person protected under the high tariff is not the workingman, but the employer; and it is no wonder there is so much discontent among the workingmen of the state where the employers take more than half their earnings for their share of the profit.—[Monroe Democrat.

Something Missing.

There is something missing in the republican organs since the machinery for turning the rascals out got fairly at work. It is the daily congratulation of the country on the honesty of the g. o. p. There is one especially noticeable vacancy in the column which used to be devoted to the statement about collecting the revenue without losing a cent.

This vacancy is due, possibly, to the disclosures which have been made as to defalcations and loss during the past twenty years. The story that comes from New Orleans is especially instructive in this regard. In that period the government has lost in that single city, through the carelessness, dishonesty, and misfeasance of its officers, about $1,500,000. In the sub-treasury two of the first republican officeholders were in default to the government $700,000. By a third the government lost $5,700; and by the treasurer who is about to retire it will lose $25,000, the amount embezzled by a confidential clerk.

In the internal revenue branch of the government at the same city the dead loss has been nearly three-quarters of a million, to say nothing of a few thousand dollars collected from the bondsmen of defaulting officials. The balance of the loss, so far as ascertained, was in the postoffice and custom house with the returns not all in yet. It is not to be wondered at, under the circumstances, that the republican organs prefer to talk about Keiley rather than the financial glories of the g. o. p.—[Free Press.

Clippings.

While the metropolitan press publishes the news of the world, nation and state, the country press is not behind in publishing its full quota of ripe opinions. It takes a large sheet to hold the news, but real editorial opinions may be condensed into very small space and still be equally as forcible. —[Ovid Union.

The middle and western states freight association will meet at the Arlington, Petoskey, September 10th and 11th, and that will be an important event in railroad and business circles. All the railroads west of Pittsburg and Buffalo and east of the Mississippi will be represented and rates will be agreed upon for freight.

N. Clark, Register of U. S. Land Office at Reed City, in writing to the Western World, says: "On the first of June we had about 50,000 acres of land in this district subject to entry. This is pine plains, covered with small pine and oak grubs. It is chiefly of a sandy soil, has good water, and is in a healthy part of the state. In addition to the above lands there are about 5,000 acres on Bois Blanc Island, in the Straits of Mackinaw, of good hardwood land, that will soon be open for entry, and about 13,000 acres in Emmet county, also good hardwood land, in dispute between U. S. and the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw R. R. Co."

Perry Hannah, of Traverse City gave his opinion on newspaper advertising as follows to one of the press excursionists to that city: "There is no man in Michigan who owes more to newspapers than I do. Advertising has made my money for me. True I've paid my printer's bills, when they have asked me, but I feel grateful for all that to the newspaper.

The following is the recipe for the government harness-dressing:—Mix well together with a gentle heat,—neat's foot oil, 1 gallon; bayberry tallow, 2 pounds; beeswax, 2 pounds; beef tallow, 2 pounds; castor oil, 2 quarts; lamp black, 1 ounce. Strain while hot through a fine cloth, and allow to cool. This is said to be a superior dressing.—[U. S. Gazette.

The registers of the U. S. land offices are holding on to their offices by the courtesy of a democratic administration, and show their appreciation of the undeserved liberality by continuing to bestow the patronage of their offices upon rabid republican newspapers. This is calculated to make all the democratic newspapers thus left out in the cold unanimously and enthusiastically in favor of President Cleveland's renomination.—[Resorter.

The postmaster general has designated the following postoffices in Michigan as special delivery postoffices, where on the first of October messenger boys will deliver immediately letters bearing a special 10-cent stamp: Adrian, Alpena, Ann Arbor, Battle Creek, Bay City, Coldwater, Detroit, East Saginaw, Flint, Grand Haven, Grand Rapids, Ionia, Ishpeming, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Manistee, Marquette, Muskegon, Niles, Pontiac, Port Huron, Saginaw, West Bay City, and Ypsilanti.

If nothing else had been accomplished by the election of a democratic president, the simple fact that it has demonstrated that the government can be intrusted with safety and honor to the party which has for twenty five years been denounced as unfaithful to the constitution, defiant of the laws and incapable of an honest and intelligent administration of public affairs, would be amply sufficient recompense for more blunders than have been committed since President Cleveland's sinauguration. The pretense that a party embracing half the people of the United States is dishonest, disloyal and incapable can no longer impose on the most credulous or prejudiced citizen. It has been shown that the democracy can not only govern but can govern honorably, honestly and beneficially to all the interests of the country, and this gives strength and permanency to our institutions. It has been shown that the southern people are as true to the constitution and as jealous of the honor and integrity of the union as it is possible for any northerners to be, and this kills forever the sectional issue which republican politicians are endevoring to revive, even over the grave of Gen. Grant.—World.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Sixteen persons were injured at Philadelphia by an explosion of dynamite in the steamer S. M. Felton, which had just left her dock with over two hundred passengers. A frightful panic followed the report, which was with difficulty allayed. It is believed that the explosive was placed under the head of the boiler maliciously.

There were 30,000 less emigrants landed at Castle Garden, New York, since January than during the corresponding period last year.

Within twelve hours three brothers named Truby met violent deaths at or near Martin's Valley, Pa. One fell into a cattle-guard and broke his neck, another was drowned in a quarry pit, and the third was suffocated in a grain-bin. The news has so affected the widowed and now childless mother that she is also expected to die.

Ellis & Lessig, iron workers at Pottstown, Pa., last week notified their heaters, helpers, and other employes that their wages would be increased, with the prospect of the mill going on double time.

A case of yellow-fever is reported from New York. The victim is a sailor who recently arrived in port.

There are 190 persons serving life-sentences in the prisons of New York State, thirteen of whom are women, all for murder in different degrees.

The New York Canal Conference, in session at Utica, last week, elected the Hon. Horatio Seymour Chairman. It was stated that the Erie Canal delivered at the port of New York during the season of 1884, 37,501,424 bushels of grain, while the total receipts by all the railroads were 28,049,020 bushels, an excess in favor of the canal of 9,452,404 bushels.

William Carleton, a variety performer, aged 58 years, committed suicide in New York by turning on the gas and shutting off all ventilation in his room.

The New Jersey census has been completed, and shows that the total population of the State is 1,276,825. The net increase since 1880 is 142,709. Three counties in the State show a decrease—Hunterdon, 1,150; Morris, 447; Sussex, 1,138. Revised census returns show the population of Albany, N. Y., to be 96,356.

At Utica, N. Y., a large number of corsets, smuggled from Canada, have been confiscated by revenue officials. The smuggling operations have been carried on for some time in an ingenious manner through the agency of women.

WESTERN.

The Piegan Indians lost but one man in their recent skirmish with cowboys at Billings, Montana, instead of twenty, as at first reported.

The Illinois State Department of Agriculture received a letter from State Entomologist Forbes stating that great damage was being done by grasshoppers to crops in the northern portion of the State.

Maxwell, the alleged murderer of C. Arthur Preller, reached St. Louis on the 16th inst., and was met at the railway station by several thousand curious people. The prisoner still maintains a dogged silence whenever questioned about the hotel tragedy.

Fort Bowie (Ari.) dispatch: "Scout Leslie has just come in and reports that the command of Major Davis met a party of Indians, killed Chief Nana and seven others, and captured eighteen squaws and Chief Geronimo and one buck. Geronimo is badly wounded." Fort Reno (Ind. Ter.) dispatch: "News has been received of a desperate fight between a number of cowboys, occurring at the ranch of Frank Murray, thirty-five miles southwest, in the Chickasaw Nation. A party of twenty-five cowboys rode up to the ranch and fired about 100 shots at the boys inside the ranch cabin, with whom they had a quarrel over stock. The boys inside, being well armed, returned the fire with deadly effect, killing Dick Covart and seriously wounding Dick Jones and Bob Woods, of the attacking party. This makes four that have been killed over the trouble at this ranch since April."

A mill was fought near Braidwood, Ill., between George Mulvey and Adam Patterson, heavy-weights, the latter being knocked out in the 126th round. Both men were badly punished.

D. M. Sullivan, of East Saginaw, Mich., in the games at St. Catherines covered the hop-step-and-jump of 31 feet 7½ inches, beating the best American record by two feet and five inches.

In the regimental shooting contest at Fort Snelling, Minn., Lieut. J. T. Kerr, of the Seventeenth Infantry, made the remarkable total of 179 out of a possible 200.

A Federal Judge in Oregon has decided that pre-emption entries can only be canceled by proceedings in the courts. The General Land Office will not change its practice of canceling such entries for cause until the Supreme Court passes upon the question.

A Norwegian bark infected with yellow fever has arrived at San Francisco.

The Oklahoma boomers have broken up their camp and are returning to their homes, the recent action of the President having convinced them that the administration intends to deal fairly both with the cattle men and would-be settlers.

Three men, while fishing near Peoria, Ill., were killed by lightning.

The house of John Failing, at Tekonsha, Mich., was destroyed by fire, and his wife, three children, and himself were terribly burned. One child died.

The office of the Fruit Journal at Cobden, Ill., was entirely destroyed by fire Aug. 17.

H. A. Fretz, the absconding express and railroad agent of New Albin, Ia., now in jail at Waukon, traveled over four thousand miles in the Territories and British America between the date of his flight in January last and his arrest in Dakota a few days since.

Since March 1, 3,365,000 hogs have been packed in the West, as against 2,835,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

Postmaster General Vilas left Madison, Wis., last week, for Ashland and Bayfield, whence, after attending to some business interests, he will go into camp on the Blue River, in Northwestern Wisconsin, and indulge in trout fishing.

SOUTHERN.

Waldo P. Johnson, a prominent lawyer of Missouri, died at Osceola, in that State. He represented Missouri in the United States Senate at the outbreak of the war, and was expelled for disloyalty. He was afterward a member of the Confederate Senate.

Capt. S. H. Buck, recently appointed Postmaster at New Orleans, has resigned the Director Generalship of the new exposition, but will remain at the head of affairs of the old company in liquidation.

The wife and three children of Emile Lirett, of Terre Bonne Parish, Louisiana, were killed, and himself and two other children badly wounded, by an explosion of gunpowder in his house.

The United States steamer Yantic, on her way from New Orleans to the Isthmus, where yellow fever has been prevalent, to convey silver to Washington, is quarantined at the mouth of the Mississippi.

The net earnings of the Atlantic system of the Southern Pacific Company for the first half of 1885 were $1,510,749, an increase of $567,247 as compared with the corresponding period of 1884.

While cars were ascending and descending the inclined railroad at the Cabin Creek Coal Mines, near Charlestown, W. Va., the loaded car broke loose and collided with a car in which were Layton Oakford, President of the road, and three other persons, all of whom were killed.

An old man named Willis Roach, having money on his person, was attacked by four unknown men near Frankfort, Ky. A young son of Roach came to his father's assistance, and with a pistol shot and killed two of the men, fatally wounding a third, the fourth man making his escape.

Special reports covering the entire South, from Virginia to Texas, show that the prospects for crops and the outlook for business in that section are highly encouraging. The acreage of cotton, corn, and tobacco is the largest on record, and the yield of these and all other crops excepting wheat will be the heaviest ever known. Many new railroad and manufacturing enterprises are being projected, and the fall and winter trade promises to be better than for many years.

WASHINGTON.

The Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office has declined to issue any more patents to the Northern Pacific Railroad until the legal status of the road shall have been fixed.

The Army and Navy Journal, in addition to the list of army officers who will be ordered back to their regiments, having been on detached service more than four years, publishes the following list of officers who will be exempted from the operation of the order, having been put on detached service by the Secretary of War: Col. John C. Tidball, First Artillery, artillery school, eleven years and three months; Lieut. Col. Robert N. Scott, Third Artillery, war record, seven years and eight months; Maj. Richard Loder, artillery school, six years; Capt. A. B. Blunt, military prison, eight years and three months; Capt. F. N. Greene, military academy, thirteen years and four months; Capt. Richard H. Commissioner Thoman gives it as his opinion that the messengers to be selected for the immediate delivery of letters will be appointed under the civil-service law.

POLITICAL.

Ex-Mayor Powderly, of Scranton, the well-known labor agitator, will be urged to accept the Democratic nomination for State Treasurer of Pennsylvania.

The Iowa Democratic State Convention, which met at Cedar Rapids on the 19th of August, declared in favor of the repeal of the prohibitory liquor law and against the adulteration of intoxicants. A license fee, to range from $250 to $1,000, was recommended. President Cleveland's administration and the Democratic policy in general were indorsed. Charles E. Whiting, of Monona County, was nominated for Governor; E. H. Gillette, of Des Moines (Greenbacker), for Lieutenant Governor; W. F. Brannon, of Muscatine County, for Justice of the Supreme Court; and F. W. Moore, of Davis County (Greenbacker), for Superintendent of Public Instruction.—Robert Lowry, the present Governor of Mississippi, was renominated by the Democratic State Convention, which met at Jackson.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Executive Board of the Knights of Labor on the 18th instant ordered a strike of all members of the organization employed by the Gould railway lines west of the Mississippi River. The strike was of small dimensions, comparatively few members of the Knights of Labor remaining in the service of that company. The Executive Board of the order resolved to employ counsel to defend imprisoned members of the organization, prosecute the Wabash Company for conspiracy, and impeach Judges Treat, Bremer, and Krekel, of the Federal courts.—The drivers employed by the Memphis Street Railway Company struck against a reduction in wages, and cars were only moved under police protection and at irregular intervals during the day. Several of the new drivers were assaulted and a number of strikers were arrested.—Employes of the Michigan nut and bolt works, at Detroit, went on a strike against a ten per cent. reduction in wages.—At Yonkers, New York, a number of striking weavers attacked four men working in the carpet-mill of Smith's Sons, when one of the latter drew his revolver, and a riot was only prevented by a plucky Catholic priest, who, gun in hand, dispersed the crowd and marched one of the men to the police station.—The situation at the Marion coal mines in Alabama is threatening. Twenty-three of the Italian laborers have been arrested at the instance of the strikers for carrying concealed weapons, and serious trouble is feared.

Senator Edmunds, who has just returned from England, says that trade in that country is very much depressed. He attributes this to overproduction.

Bayliss W. Hanna, United States Minister to the Argentine Republic, sailed for his mission last week from New York, accompanied by his wife and three children.

Officers of the Pacific Mail steamer Rio Janeiro, which last week sailed from San Francisco for Yokohoma and Hong Kong, refused to receive United States mails.

The New York Produce Exchange estimates the visible supply of wheat at 40,380,195 bushels, and of corn at 5,270,158 bushels. Exports of produce from New York last week were valued at $7,294,973.

The Rev. Dr. Farrar, Archdeacon of Westminster Abbey, Wednesday cabled Mr. Cyrus W. Field from London that he would deliver three lectures in New York, the time to be named later.

The American Bar Association held its eighth general session at Saratoga, N. Y., last week. The annual address was made by the President, the Hon. John W. Stevenson, of Kentucky. He spoke in favor of advancing the science of independent jurisprudence and of promoting the thorough administration of justice, and urged the necessity of uniformity of legislation throughout the several States.

Between six and seven hundred men and boys employed in a colliery at Shenandoah, Pa., struck against a 10 per cent. reduction in wages, and assaulted the Hungarians and Poles working about the mine, who repulsed them after an hour's battle, ten or twelve men being badly hurt. The cloak and clothing manufacturers of New York find themselves seriously embarrassed by the pending strike of journeymen tailors in that city for higher wages. Complications have arisen between the glass manufacturers of the country and their employes, and a general strike of the latter is apprehended.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Cairo states that a civil war has broken out at Khartoum, and that the Mahdi's successor and other officials have been killed.

A sensation has been created in London by the marriage of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge to Miss Amy Augusta Jackson Lawford. The ceremony, which was performed quietly at the residence of the bride's mother, is said to have been hastened by threats of an action for breach of promise against his lordship. The bride is an English woman of 30, whose acquaintance Lord Coleridge made on the steamer in which he returned from America two years ago.

Cable advices are to the effect that all Europe enters upon its vacation season with a prospect undisturbed by war.

Lord Chief-Justice Coleridge, who was recently married to Miss Lawford, says in a letter to the papers that he cannot see why the details of his private life should interest the public. The father of Lord Coleridge's bride was formerly a Judge in Bengal. The woman is 32 years old.

Dr. Reehard, sole survivor of the German International Exploring Expedition, is reported to have been killed by a native in Zanzibar.

A man was arrested in Bombay, recently, on suspicion of being a Russian spy. It is now believed that he is Olivier Pain, although he denies it.

Indignation in Spain over Germany's annexation of the Caroline Islands is increasing.

Confirmation has been received of the report that fifty per cent. of the European employes in the Congo region have died.

Mr. Gladstone is reported to be enjoying his vacation in Norway, and to be in excellent health. He recently walked eighteen miles in one day.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The wife of ex-Governor B. Gratz Brown, of Missouri, died at Lake Minnetonka, of apoplexy.

By the first count of the census the population of South Dakota is given at 261,550. The official count of North Dakota places the population at 152,199, making the total of the Territory 413,759, against 135,177 in 1880.

The Sheriff of Reeves County, Texas, died with his boots on and three bullets in his body, after killing one man and wounding another who attempted to arrest him for drunkenness.

Jacob Graup, owner of a mill near Morgantown, W. Va., was returning home from camp-meeting in a carriage, in which were also his wife and two grandchildren, when the horses ran away, dashing the vehicle to pieces, and all four of the occupants were seriously injured.

Eighteen lives are said to have been lost by the wrecking of a British ship bound from Astoria, Ore., to Liverpool, forty miles north of San Francisco.

The National Association of ex-Union Prisoners of War, in session at Philadelphia, elected John H. Longnecker, of Bedford, Pa., President, and J. H. Mack, of Sandusky, Ohio, First Vice President, and adjourned to meet in Buffalo Aug. 20, 1886.

I. H. Aufdemorte, recently redemption clerk in the United States Sub-Treasury at New Orleans, who absconded in June with $25,000 of the Government funds, has been arrested at Monterey, Mexico, with two alleged confederates, one of whom, Rice Shepherd, is a notorious counterfeiter.

Small-pox is on the increase in Montreal. The theaters have all been closed, and the streets sprinkled with disinfectants. Boot and shoe manufacturers reports that the fall orders from the West are being canceled on account of the epidemic.

The Ohio Democratic Convention at Columbus renominated Judge Hoadly for Governor. John G. Warwick, present incumbent, for Lieutenant Governor, Gibson Atherton for the Supreme Bench, Peter Brady for Treasurer, James Lawrence for Attorney General, and Henry Welbie for member of the Board of Public Works. Gov. Hoadly made a speech defining his course in office. President Cleveland's administration was strongly indorsed. Hoadly and Warwick were nominated by acclamation.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The Sault Ste. Marie Town Hall will face two streets.

—Detroit complains of corruption, gangs, rings, and things in her city government.

—Henry Henselman, of Harrison, agent for an East Saginaw brewer, has been missing since July 30, and his friends are thoroughly alarmed.

—President Willets, of the State Agricultural College, is in favor of manual labor of some kind being done by the students in connection with their studies.

—Cold weather has knocked all the enthusiasm out of the upper peninsula tourists, and most of them are returning home or sending for their winter duds.

—The G. A. R.'s have postponed the reunion which was to have been held at Owosso in August. The State encampment next year will be held at that place.

—Will Carleton, the poet, is soon to issue a volume of new poems, under the title of "City Ballads." It will be a companion piece to the "Farm Ballads" of his earlier days.

—Israel Smith, of Grandville, Kent County, brutally assaulted last winter by three robbers now doing time at Jackson for their crime, died recently as the result of his injuries.

—The Agricultural College people are testing the vitality of seeds buried in sealed bottles six years ago. The seeds which thus far prove to have most vitality are those of common weeds, their percentage being from 90 to 100, while plant seeds did not germinate freely.

—Roland Root, for half a century a prominent citizen of Branch County, died at Coldwater, aged 71. He had been totally blind for the past year. He served four years in the lower house of the State Legislature, and was First Lieutenant of Company A, First Michigan Light Artillery.

—Out of twenty-seven houses in Plainfield, near Howell, nine are now empty as a result of the Air Line of the Grand Trunk Railroad running three miles away and the starting of the village of Gregory about a year ago. One man has locked up his store-room and built a new store at Gregory, because his trade has all gone to the latter place.

—The Chief Engineer of the Michigan Central Railroad states, in the Railroad Gazette, that steel rails purchased for that road do not survive as long as guaranteed, and that rails laid as late as 1884 have already been removed on account of crushed ends. An explanation of these faults is given in the Scientific American, which says that the demand of the railroads for cheap rails has led manufacturers to work in slag and cinder with the steel, and in that way turn out a fair-appearing shoddy rail, in the manufacture of which there is a small profit, and the demands of the railroad companies for low-priced rails are satisfied.

Hygienic—Bulletin from the State Board of Health.

Sanitary authorities have claimed that the sanitary work which they have recommended to be done as a preparation for cholera—such as preventing and abating nuisances, attending to drains, sewers, privies, and cesspools, cleaning up generally, and unusual carefulness in regard to foods and drinks—would reduce the sickness and deaths from other diseases, even if cholera did not come. The weekly reports for July, 1885, to the Michigan State Board of Health, by physicians in different parts of the State, indicate that this claim is being realized in Michigan, so far as relates to the lessened sickness, it having been lessened from nearly every disease, and greatly lessened from fevers and from diarrheal and other diseases believed to be specially influenced by sanitary conditions; and this is true, notwithstanding the meteorological conditions in that month were rather more than usually unfavorable to health.

It is proper to state, however, that the sickness in any month is influenced by the met orological conditions in the preceding month, and that the meteorological conditions in June, 1885, were favorable to health.

Observations in Michigan for many years have shown that in July the meteorological conditions especially unfavorable to health are high temperature, excessive humidity of the atmosphere, and deficiency of ozone. The bulletin of "Health in Michigan, July, 1885," says: "For the month of July, 1885, compared with the average of corresponding months for the seven years, 1879—1885, the temperature was slightly higher, the absolute and the relative humidity were more, and the day and the night ozone were less."

"Compared with the average for the months of July in the seven years, 1879—1885, remittent fever, intermittent fever, dysentery, consumption of lungs, cholera infantum, diarrhea, cholera morbus, measles, and whooping-cough were less prevalent in July, 1885."

A large part of this decrease in sickness has undoubtedly been due to the medical and sanitary journals and the newspapers, which have constantly kept before the people the necessity for sanitary work and the facts as to the spread of cholera in Europe.

It remains to be seen to what extent efforts for the exclusion of cholera from this country, and the general preparation for cholera by Boards of Health and the people, shall prove effectual; but, even if cholera shall not be entirely prevented, there will remain the belief that the measures which have so greatly decreased the sickness from other diseases cannot but have had their influence in decreasing it; and, if cholera does not occur in this country, it seems quite probable that, by reason of the suffering elsewhere, there may be as many cases of serious sickness prevented in this country as there have been cases of cholera in Europe. But this may not continue without unceasing vigilance and effort.

HENRY B. BAKER,
Secretary State Board of Health.

UNITED HOSTS.

Iowa Democrats Form a Fusion with Greenbackers to Face a Common Enemy.

The Prohibitory Legislation of the State Denounced as Hostile to Temperance.

The Iowa Democratic State Convention convened at Cedar Rapids on Wednesday, the 19th of August, and was called to order by Hon. L. G. Kinne, Chairman of the State Central Committee. After prayer by the Rev. Dr. Ringgold, an address of welcome was delivered by the Hon. C. H. Preston, of Cedar Rapids. Col. Kestley, editor of the Council Bluffs Globe, was made temporary Chairman.

Fred W. Lehmau, of Des Moines, was selected as permanent Chairman, and made an eloquent address on taking the chair, and stamped his personality closely upon the convention. He is short in stature, clean-shaven, and speaks rapidly, clearly, and distinctly, with conviction and earnestness in every tone. He proved a capable Chairman, and managed to keep tolerable order during the most exciting scenes of the day. In the course of his address he referred to the "three R's—reading, riting, and 'rithmetic," not the other "three R's," and his hit was so happy that the convention was convulsed. He reviewed the Oklahoma question, and paralleled the action of Republican and Democratic justice on the subject. He dwelt upon the Prohibition issue, and said the Democratic candidates must go squarely before the people in opposition to this accursed law. As showing the unanimity of feeling upon this question, the applause which followed the allusion to the accursed prohibition statute and demanding its repeal was most earnest. Mr. Lehman said that if prohibition in Iowa accomplished all that was claimed for it he would not exchange such results for those of trial by jury, which it abrogated. He said the Democratic party should be one in language, law, faith, and destiny, as it has been one in history.

The liquor plank in the platform was a point of contention, a portion believing that the minimum should be $500, but it was soon shown that to carry the solid vote the minimum should be lowered, and the platform was adopted after discussion by a unanimous and enthusiastic vote.

Col. A. R. McCoy was first upon his feet for the nomination of a candidate, and presented the name of Capt. Merrill. He said Merrill was a soldier's candidate, an ultra-Democrat, and a strong anti-Prohibitionist. Messrs. Finn, of Story, and Smith, of Scott, followed, seconding the nomination. Mr. Keatley, of Council Bluffs, nominated Senator Whiting, and this action was seconded by Capt. Bell. Mr. Bolton, of Harrison, followed in a strong speech, seconding the nomination. Mr. Bolton spoke until the friends of Merrill called "Time?" when cries of "Go on!" "Go on!" filled the house and gave the first indication of the solid strength of Whiting's forces.

Horace Boies, of Waterloo, was then put in nomination. His strong point was that he came from Buffalo.

Senator Jones, of the Dubuque delegation, put in nomination William G. Stewart, of Dubuque. Jones spoke from the stage, and was interrupted by the Chairman of the Dubuque delegation, who wanted to know if the Colonel had any authority for his action. The doughty old gentleman replied that he spoke upon the authority of an American citizen and a Democrat, and as no second was entered his authority went unquestioned.

When the balloting began it was evident that Whiting and fusion on a Democratic basis stood in the lead, and at the end of the call of counties Kinne had received 42, Merrill 290, Whiting 315 votes, lacking eight of nomination. A break from Kinne followed to both candidates, and a grand change began. The wildest confusion ensued, in which the Chairmen of numerous delegations were yelling for recognition. Order was finally restored and when the changes were recorded the result gave Whiting the nomination.

Capt. Merrill promised the hearty support of himself and his friends, and upon his motion the nomination was made unanimous.

Mr. Brennan was nominated for Supreme Judge, and then came the question of fusion. When it was moved that the convention proceed to nominate a candidate for Lieutenant Governor, a bitter contest followed, but the motion was carried and the nomination of Mr. Gillette, the Greenback candidate, followed.

THE PLATFORM.

The convention, after a sharp debate on an amendment to increase the license to a five hundred dollar maximum, passed the following resolutions:

The Democratic party of Iowa announces the following platform of principles:

1. We approve of and adopt the principles of the late Democratic National Convention.

2. We declare in favor of the repeal of the prohibitory liquor law of the State of Iowa as unjust and hostile to temperance.

3. We pledge ourselves to favor and use our best efforts for the enactment of a license law of two hundred and fifty dollars, with power to increase the same from two hundred and fifty to one thousand dollars, as may be deemed best for the public interest in the various localities of the State, as expressed by the legal constituted authorities of such location.

4. We pledge ourselves to favor and use our best efforts for the enactment of a law which shall punish as criminal the manufacture and sale of all adulterated liquors, such adulteration being the direct cause of intemperance, and destructive of the health of the people.

5. We condemn as disgraceful and tyrannical the action of the Republican executive of the State in driving out with muskets and fixed bayonets a one-armed soldier elected by the people in time of profound peace, before any judgment of a civil court had been rendered against him, thus making the civil power of the State subjective to the military power. We denounce such acts as truly destructive to civil liberty and an insult to the people.

6. We urge upon Congress the prompt enactment of appropriate legislation to open to settlement the forfeited railroad lands in the State.

7. We approve the action of the Democratic Senators of the Twentieth General Assembly in voting unanimously in favor of the prompt consideration of the bill known as the Cassat mining bill, and condemn the action of the Republicans in promising the miners of this State adequate legislation, and then denying them even a fair hearing.

8. That, while we oppose all monopolies, we recognize the right and duty of the Government to give the greatest possible liberty to every citizen consistent with the rights of every other citizen; and we believe, and announce it as one of the fundamental principles of the Democratic party, that labor is the foundation of wealth, and that the laborer should be the special object of the care of the Government.

9. That in President Cleveland the country has found a man of solid judgment, conscientious integrity, unswerving fidelity, patriotism, and courage equal to that of Andrew Jackson; and in his efforts for economy; for the exposure of criminal acts of the Republican party and its officers; for his unflinching firmness in dealing with the cattle kings; for his zeal in behalf of reform; for his efforts to restore the public lands to the settlers; for his efforts to enforce the law against polygamy; and for his constant watchfulness of the public welfare he deserves to receive the hearty thanks of the Democracy of Iowa and its unswerving support.

10. With these principles we go before the people of Iowa, calling upon all who believe a change is demanded, and that the books shall be opened and examined, and all who are tired of fanaticism and folly, whether Democrat, Greenbacker, or Republican, to unite with us in bringing about the results to which we are hereby pledged.

The resolution indorsing the administration was received with enthusiasm.

WONDER if the Republican donkeys in charge of the Ohio campaign will send an invitation to the deceased Senator Morrill, of Maine, to stump the State, as they did last year. If they still insist on having a dead statesman, perhaps they might galvanize Blaine into campaign life by offering as a reward the empty honor of the next Republican nomination to the Presidency.

Mud-Slinging Batteries of a Partisan Press Without Ammunition.

Remarkable Record of Reforms Made by the Present Administration.

[Washington special to Chicago Times.]

The administration vacation may be deemed to have begun, although most of the Cabinet Ministers are here. It has been in power a little over five months, and it is not too early to begin to ask what kind of an administration it is. The extreme difficulty the New York Tribune and the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette are having in keeping up an opposition to it is pretty good evidence that it is not an easy administration to attack. It has made some mistakes, but the most violent of the Republican organs have to content themselves with a ridiculous belittling of the good work of the administration, and an equally absurd exaggeration of those small errors which every finite government must make. It is evident from the Republican papers that they are getting very little campaign ammunition out of this administration.

Take the Treasury Department. It has been the practice for years to excite the cupidity of Congressmen by publishing a statement of our surplus revenues, which, while technically correct, was substantially a gross exaggeration. That has been changed, and the real available surplus only is now stated. A man who is not a banker or an expert accountant can now find out how much gold and silver the Government owns. Every effort is being made, and with full assurance of success, to prevent the substitution of the silver for the gold standard in commercial transactions until Congress shall meet and have a chance to amend legislation. The legal-tender issues have never been so secure as since the department has adopted the policy of setting aside from its assets $100,000,000 of gold as a fund to protect and redeem them. The pernicious practice of pension agents of keeping on hand, that is in the banks of friends of theirs, vast sums of money for which they had no immediate use, has been stopped. Whatever may be said of Arthur Chenowith's attitude on the civil-service question, he has done the good service of exposing a most disgraceful state of affairs in the coast survey office which his predecessor might have exposed, but he never did. Auditor Day has been the means of putting a stop to the practice of beating the Government out of large sums of money due it by getting accounts reopened and resettled on ex-parte evidence in the interest of some man who owed the Government. Custom houses that don't pay expenses, and that were established merely to afford places to political workers, are beginning to disappear. The Bureau of Printing and Engraving has been put in the charge of the man who above all others is best fitted to manage that great workshop. A long stride has been taken toward the destruction of the consignment system in New York, whereby American importers have been unable to compete with the agents of foreign houses.

Take the Interior Department. In the general Land Office a substantial check has been given to the vast fraudulent entry business, and the rights of the settlers in the indemnity lands have been asserted. In the Indian Office the illegal career of the cattle barons in occupying Indian lands and fencing the public domain has been brought to an end. In the Pension Office there are fewer employes spending their time in politics and more of them working for the disabled veterans than ever before. There was never before a time in the history of the office when it worked so rapidly and efficiently as it does now, and all that the Republican organs can say in reply to this is that a man whom the President appointed a Pension Agent took the responsibility of employing an ex-Confederate as his chief clerk.

In the War Department there is a feeling that merit instead of influence is to determine promotions of officers, and justice and the public good are to determine details, such as has not prevailed there for many years. Mr. Lincoln was an excellent Secretary and would have accomplished more in the direction of reform if President Arthur had not had so many friends. President Cleveland has no friends in his mind when the public interest is in any way involved.

In the Department of Justice it is already apparent that there is an Attorney General who devotes his entire mind to protecting the interests of his client—the Government. We have had Attorney Generals who looked out for everybody except the Government.

Take the Postoffice Department—the department that comes the closest to the people. Forty or fifty thousand dollars a year was saved on the contracts for official envelopes. About $30,000 was saved on contracts for printing postage-stamps. Leases of premises for long terms of years at exorbitant rentals, procured evidently for pecuniary or political considerations, have been declared invalid in accordance with an opinion by the Attorney General. What Postmaster General have we had lately who would have sacrificed the opportunity of distributing $400,000 among the owners of American steamship lines, not to promote the efficiency of the postal service, but simply to add to the gains of the owners? Mr. Vilas did that, and the result is that not only are the mails carried as well as ever, but to Cuba and Central and South America the mails are carried more expeditiously than ever before, because, instead of an all-water route, a part rail and part water route has been substituted. Out of nearly five hundred Presidential postmasters who have been appointed, it has been learned that one or two were bad appointments, and to the unspeakable disgust of the Republican organs these have been promptly revoked. Out of 2,500 fourth-class postmasters appointed since Mr. Stevenson succeeded Mr. Hay, it has been found necessary to revoke the appointments of five.

So much for the departments. Is there any Republican so hide-bound in his political prejudices that as he looks over this record he will continue to feel alarm lest the Democratic party will ruin the country, bankrupt the Treasury, pay the rebel debt, disgrace itself abroad, reverse the political results of the war, or do any other of the things not only that campaign speakers predicted, but that many simple-minded Republicans really feared a year ago? But take the new class of officials personally. A man who has lived in Washington for the past few years has a good many friends among the outgoing Republican officials, and for that reason he hesitates about making comparisons. But one of the last Republican officials to leave the Treasury said recently to the writer: "My duties bring me in contact with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Law Assistant Secretary, the Solicitor, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. There is no question that Mr. Manning, Mr. Fairchild, Judge McCue, and Mr. Miller are abler men and much better fitted for their positions than the Republicans they succeeded. Ex-First Comptroller Lawrence is probably as able a lawyer as his successor, Mr. Durham, but he had no executive ability, and his office fell into disorder. Mr. Durham is not only a good lawyer, but he and Mr. Garrison, the new Deputy, are good executive officers." Without being unpleasantly personal, it is unquestionable that some of the auditors are decided improvements on their predecessors. Col. Vilas and Mr. Stevenson can afford to allow themselves to be compared with any of their predecessors, and the Postmaster General looms up head and shoulders above some of the able Republicans who preceded Mr. Hatton. The affections of Mr. Atkins for the red men may be no warmer than those of Mr. Price, but Mr. Atkins is certainly not second to Mr. Price in the matter of clearness or vigor. Nor will the public lands suffer at all from the substitution of Mr. Sparks for Mr. McFarland. Whatever Mr. Colman proves to be, and so far as he has had a chance he has justified his appointment as Commissioner of Agriculture, he can not fail to be a more intelligent, efficient, and economical public servant than Dr. George B. Loring.

The sum of the whole matter is this: Five months of Democratic administration have proved that instead of there being only one, there are two parties in this country, either one of which is perfectly capable of carrying on the Government. This is gratifying news to people who are Americans first and party men afterward, but who have grown a little uneasy lest the preaching of the Republican politicians was right, and that there was only one political organization that contained enough brains and patriotism to run the Government without running it into the ground.

WESTERN GOVERNORS.

Gov. Martin, of Kansas.

John A. Martin was born March 10, 1839, at Brownsville, Fayette County, Pa. While a mere lad he learned the trade of printing in the office of the Brownsville Clipper. In the spring of 1857 he went to Pittsburgh and worked at his trade for a short time. In October of the same year he emigrated to Kansas. He located in Atchison, and for a short time set type for the columns of the Squatter Sovereign. He purchased the Squatter Sovereign in February, 1858, changed its name to Freedom's Champion, and on the 20th of the same month commenced his long editorial career in Kansas by the issue of the first number of the paper with which he has since been so honorably identified. Since that time he has been elected to several offices, filling them to the utmost satisfaction of his constituents. He was Secretary of the Wyandotte Constitutional Convention, and was elected State Senator before he was twenty-one. He served as delegate to the Territorial Convention, at Lawrence, of April 11, 1860. During the summer of 1861 he assisted in organizing the Eighth Kansas Infantry, of which he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel. Early in 1862 he was appointed Provost Marshal of Leavenworth, and in March of the same year his regiment was ordered to Corinth, Miss., and thereafter during the whole war it served in the Army of the Cumberland.

Lieut. Col. Martin was promoted to be Colonel on the 1st of November, 1862, and was Provost Marshal of Nashville, Tenn., from December, 1862, to June, 1863. The regiment under his command took part in the battles of Perryville, Ky., and Lancaster, Ky.; the campaign against Tullahoma and Chattanooga; the battle of Chickamauga; the siege of Chattanooga; the storming of Mission Ridge; the campaign in Eastern Tennessee in the winter of 1863-4; the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta; and the subsequent pursuit of Hood northward. Col. Martin commanded the Third Brigade during the siege of Chattanooga; and commanded the First Brigade, Third Division, Fourth Army Corps, from August, 1864, until his muster out at Pulaski, Tenn., Nov. 17, 1864. Returning home, he resumed control of the Atchison Champion early in January, 1865. He has been Commander-in-chief of the State Encampment, Grand Army of the Republic; a delegate from Kansas to the National Republican Conventions of 1860, 1868, 1872, and 1880; a member of the United States Centennial Commission and one of the Vice Presidents of that body; was elected by the two houses of Congress one of the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Homes in 1878, and re-elected in 1882, being Second Vice President of that body until 1884, and was elected Mayor of Atchison in 1865. He was elected Governor of Kansas in 1884, defeating ex-Gov. Glick, the Democratic candidate, by 40,000 majority.

Gov. Dawes, of Nebraska.

James W. Dawes, Governor of Nebraska, was born at McConnellsville, Ohio, on Jan. 8, 1845. Removed from Ohio to Wisconsin in 1856, locating in the town of Newport. Received a common-school education; worked on farm summers, attending school winters. From October, 1864, to October, 1868, clerked for G. J. Hansen & Co., general merchants, at Kilbourn City, Wis. Studied law at Fox Lake, Wis., and was admitted to the bar Jan. 10, 1871. Was married at Fox Lake, May 11, 1871. Located at Crete, Neb., Sept. 5, 1871. Engaged in mercantile business from Sept. 5, 1871, to March, 1877. Was elected State Senator in 1876. Engaged in the practice of law since 1877. Held the position of Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Nebraska from May, 1876, to September, 1882. Elected delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, June, 1880, and was named by delegation as member of National Republican Committee for Nebraska for term of four years. Trustee and Secretary of Doane College, at Crete, Neb., since 1875. Elected Governor of Nebraska November, 1882, and re-elected November, 1884.

"Oh, missus, I's tarible skeered. Las' night I dreamed mos' all night I wuz a-dyin', an' I's 'feared I ain't long fer dis world."

"Why, you shouldn't be alarmed; you know dreams work by the rule of contraries."

"No, missus, I kan't see dat, coz night fo' last I dreamed I felled down a well, an' shuah I doan' understan' how I could fall up one."—Harper's Bazar.

A NEW TARIFF BILL.

The Randall Wing in Congress Has Agreed to a Revenue-Reform Measure.

[Philadelphia telegram.]

The Press prints the following Washington special regarding a recent tariff deal among the Democrats:

"The apparent non-committal attitude on the question of the tariff is the result of recent conferences in which the more moderate Democrats, including the President himself and Secretary Manning, have thrown out the tub which is intended, at least for the present, to satisfy the free-trade whale. In the conference which has led to this result, which took place recently in Washington, Congressman Randall took a leading part, and in many respects his views had much to do in shaping the new Democratic policy.

"First of all it was agreed on all sides that the tariff must be revised. At last, after much discussion, in which the advice of certain well-known protectionists was sought and freely and frankly given, the moderates agreed to give the immoderates a $40,000,000 reduction in customs during the coming session, the moderates, however, to reserve the right of creating a sort of inner-circle tariff commission to be run during the months preceding the coming session of Congress as a sort of side-show to the Treasury Department.

"It must not for a moment be supposed that a reduction of $40,000,000, which involves the acceptance and support on the part of the free traders of a bill prepared entirely by the Randall wing of the Democratic party, was agreed to without other and still more substantial promises in the immediate future. It has been practically agreed upon that the Treasury Department, aided and abetted by such manufacturers as may be found willing to co-operate with the Secretary, will present a bill, the basis of which will be, as I have said, the reduction of $40,000,000, or at least an apparent reduction of that amount.

"To this end the Treasury Department has employed several experts, who are now engaged in obtaining opinions of manufacturers throughout the country, and such information as it is enabled to gather in relation to the cost of production at home and in competing European countries. All this information will be tabulated and a bill framed after the fashion of that proposed (and finally passed) by Secretary of the Treasury Walker, and which is known as the 'Walker bill of 1846.'

"On paper and viewed as a whole, this is a splendid scheme. The moment, however, the bill, as proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury, comes into the House and is taken up—as it most assuredly will be—line by line, the Democratic party will be in the same condition as it always has been on the tariff question. A struggle over the proposed Treasury bill will, in fact, develop the old struggle again. The least objectionable measure may be passed, but a measure that contemplates the reduction of $40,000,000 of customs duties will, in the opinion of some of the leading Republicans here, utterly fail."

THE BOOMERS DISPERSE.

Oklahoma Home-Seekers Have Given Up the Struggle and Broken Camp.

[Washington special.]

It is learned that satisfactory evidence has been submitted to the Attorney General of the intention of the Oklahoma boomers to abandon all idea of further attempts to invade Oklahoma or violate the President's proclamation, and have broken camp. This evidence is said to come from the boomers themselves and from Congressmen and others in position to know the facts and vouch for the sincerity and good faith of the statements. The explanation given is that the boomers are satisfied with the policy of the administration, which they regard as just, and do not care to resist the Government when it applies the same restrictions to the cattlemen as it does to themselves. They have become convinced that the administration intends to protect the Indians, and they concede that this is right, their claim having been based upon the idea that they had as much right to occupy the lands as the leaseholders and cattlemen who were permitted to do so. Attorney General Garland is said to be fully satisfied with these assurances, and it is understood that he will at an early day direct the discontinuance of contemplated prosecutions against the invaders.

POUNDMAKER A CONVICT.

He Is Found Guilty of Making War Against the Queen and Sentenced to Three Years in Prison.

[Winnipeg (Man.) special.]

Poundmaker, Chief of the Indians who fought Col. Otter's flying column at Cut-Knife Creek, and afterward attacked and captured a supply-train of thirty-one wagons in the Eagle Hills, was convicted at Regina of making war against the queen and sentenced to three years in the Penitentiary. The Chief, when he heard the sentence, asked that he be hanged right away rather than be imprisoned. Before sentence was passed on him he said: "I was good all summer. People told lies. I saved a lot of bloodshed. I can't understand how it is that after saving so many lives I am brought here. I could have been on the prairies still if I would." Then waving his hand majestically he said, with a smile: "I am a man. Do as you like. I am in your power. I gave myself up. You did not catch me."

AN AWFUL CRIME.

A Philadelphia Ferryboat Wrecked by Dynamite Maliciously Placed Under Her Boiler.

Sixteen Persons More or Less Injured and Over 200 Lives in Jeopardy.

An explosion occurred on the steamer S. M. Felton just after she had left her dock this morning on her trip to Wilmington, Del. As she was opposite Pier No. 8, south wharves, the passengers and crew were startled by an explosion which shook the boat from stem to stern, and when the smoke cleared away it was found that the entire forward part of the vessel above the water-line had been badly damaged and a number of passengers injured, some of them severely. The pilot house and the entire upper deck were lifted and fell to the lower deck. The bow presented a scene of complete wreck. Tugs proceeded at once to the injured vessel, and with the assistance of the police tug William S. Stokley, which was lying near by, at once proceeded to remove the injured. The ambulance of the Pennsylvania Hospital soon arrived and took most of the injured to that institution. The list of wounded numbers sixteen, as follows: Jesse Bradley, of Philadelphia, ankle dislocated; J. B. Chester, of Chester, side injured; Geo. Cockaine, of Philadelphia, back and thigh hurt by falling woodwork; Samuel Cooper, of Frankford, hurt about the chest and head; George Erwin, a deck-hand, severely injured in the side; James E. McDonald, a child, of Chester, leg broken; Silas Reed, of Philadelphia, slightly injured; George Mitchell, deck-hand, of Bridgeton, N. J., right hand severely cut and ankle sprained; John McCusker, passenger, injured about the breast; Edward Spear, of Philadelphia, injured internally—it is thought he will die; John Stevenson, of Camden, N. J., slightly injured; Charles Quinlan, of Philadelphia, badly bruised about the body; James Valentine, of Wilmington, Del., engineer of the Felton, cut about the head by flying glass; John L. Vantine, of Chester, Pa., complicated dislocation of ankle; Edward Young, of Wilmington, Del., fireman of the Felton, injured about head and face; George L. Wilson, the engineer, who was standing on the wharf when the explosion occurred, was thrown backward over a bench, and sustained injuries of the right wrist.

The passengers were mostly women taking babies for a fresh-air trip on the river. Their escape is accounted for by the providential fact that but few of them were in the forward part of the steamer, as the forward canvas awning had not been set, and the sun shining there made the passengers seek cooler spots in the stern of the boat.

Edward Young, the fireman, says that when the explosion occurred he was carrying only thirty-five pounds of steam to the square inch.

Andrew Linker said to-day that he inspected the boiler last May and found it in good condition. The iron was tested. It is stamped 50,000 ponnds, and broke at 56,000 pounds. The indentation in the head of the boiler, however, shows beyond doubt that the explosive force came from without, and not from within.

Capt. Wiley, Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Mershon, and Mr. Linker made a careful examination of the wreck for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of the explosion. The investigation established the fact that the explosion was caused by dynamite. The explosive had been placed forward, directly in the head of the boiler. The steamer came up from Wilmington at 8:30, and lay at her wharf until 10 o'clock last night. She lay at Wilmington in charge of Andrew Jones, of Bridgeton, N. J. He could not be communicated with to-day, but Capt. Wiley says that if a stranger had boarded or attempted to board the steamer last night the watchman would have informed him of that fact.

While the steamer lay at her wharf this morning the passengers came aboard and took chairs on the hurricane deck or aft. The officers and deck hands were busy, and no attention was paid to the movements of passengers. Several of them carried baskets, so that a bundle or package might have been carried aboard without attracting attention.

The official report made to H. F. Kennedy, Superintendent of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company, under whose supervision the steamboat is operated, says: "The head of the boiler was indented and cracked about a foot in length. The explosion is believed to have been caused by a cartridge of some kind placed under the head of the boiler maliciously."

Detectives have been put on the case.

Bogus Beer Stamps.

[Washington special.]

The officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau are working with the officers of the secret service in the investigation of an extensive system of frauds in New York City. So far their attention has been particularly directed to the counterfeit beer stamps. Up to within a few weeks ago there was not the slightest suspicion that anything of a "crooked" nature was going on, but an examination of the receipts of the local internal revenue office showed quite a falling off. A more careful examination developed the fact that it was confined exclusively to the brewers. Then came the discovery that counterfeit beer stamps were in use. Up to date about $14,000 worth have been seized, and the end is not yet. The officials here are very reticent over the affair, and decline to give out the particulars for publication. It is learned, however, that they have discovered a conspiracy in which brewers from nearly all the principal cities of the country are concerned. The evidence is now being gathered, and it is understood that at the proper time there will be a series of arrests and seizures which will partake of the most sensational description.

Claiming Everything.

[Houston (Tex.) special.]

Three hundred and eighty suits have just been filed in the District Court in this county for the heirs of Mary E. Weatherford, of Tennessee, which embrace 335 acres of land in this city and three blocks on Main street. Suits for 27,000 acres of land in Cherokee, Henderson, Rusk, Coryell, Bexar, Medina, Lampasas, and Houston Counties, and $40,000 worth of property in Austin, have also been entered.

The second annual reunion of the Michigan soldiers' and sailors' association will be held at Reed City, commencing Sept. 8, and continuing three days. Fifty Grand Army posts are expected to be in attendance.

Mr. Faulkner, of the Traverse Journal, has taken as a partner in the office, Mr. R. D. Coy, an experienced newspaper man, "and a good democrat." While the Journal is an independent paper, politically, it will lose nothing by having good democratic judgment diffused throughout its management.

Kalamazoo Vanity Fair shows up a newspaper fraud named Jackson, who prowls around the country, swindling newspapers and ruining young girls. He is described as "about 6 feet in height, has a stubby black mustache, blue eyes and black hair. When here he wore a black felt hat, and grey suit of clothes. He walks as though lame, and is a rapid talker."

The Toledo Blade opposes the nomination of Baumbach, the republican candidate for the legislature in that district, because he is a saloon keeper. The Blade says the nomination was an insult to the party, deliberate and premeditated, and that it will prove a grave mistake in view of the election next winter of a United States senator. The nomination was undoubtedly made to catch the German vote.

Inland Marine gives the dimensions of the floating palace, the new steel steamer City of Cleveland, now building at Wyandotte, as follows: Length of keel, 270 feet; over all, 283 feet; breadth of beam, 40 feet; breadth over all, 70 feet; depth of hold, 17 feet. Cost, $300,000. The propelling power is to be a low-pressure condensing beam engine, of 2,400 horse-power, with a cylinder 60 inches in diameter and 12 foot stroke.

The following items are samples of what may be found in almost every newspaper now-a-days, and show that business is improving all over the country: "The Sturgis Democrat is pleased to note that in St. Joseph county, business is looking up; that traveling men are selling larger bills and the store keepers note increasing sales to farmers, who are in good spirits over the good harvest and fine corn crops."...."Business at all of the Northern Michigan resorts is immense and the Harbor Springs Resorter says: "Instead of competing for its portion of the custom this year, each hotel is anxious to secure outside accommodations for the rush of guests with whom it is besieged."....The iron trade is looking up. Many firms report orders for months ahead, and there are signs of an early revival of general business. Let us hope the worst is over.—[Philadelphia Inquirer.....Following this, a paper from Black River Falls, Wis., notes the establishment, at that place, of a sixty-ton furnace for the manufacture of pig iron, by a company of Minneapolis capitalists, to utilize the extensive iron mines and abundant timber of that place. The gentlemen composing the company are practical business men and not speculators, and their intent is to establish a permanent business, taking advantage of cheap material and labor to build the works and be ready for the boom which is sure to come.

Useless Weapons.

It was at El Teb that I was first struck with the inferior quality of the English bayonet and sword bayonet. At Tamai, in the rush and scurry, it was put to a severer test than anywhere else in the Soudan, In that battle the Hadendowas, as they rushed out of their grass cover with their short spears, fairly pitched themselves upon the weapons of our Black Watch and 65th. The triangular bayonet oftentimes bent and twisted. On the whole, however, it stood the test better than the sword bayonet. Like the sword bayonet, it often bent like hoop-iron when a thrust was made, if a bone interposed, and became corkscrewed in the struggle.

It has two serious drawbacks, not so observable in the sword bayonet. The wound it makes is slight, so that a fanatical savage or infuriated man requires several thrusts before he is placed hors de combat, giving him a chance to run much among civilized troops. In the second place, the triangular bayonet, when thrust violently, goes too far, and there is great difficulty of freeing it. At Tamai, a stalwart soldier hooked his opponent in such a manner that he had to draw the body twenty yards, as we were retreating, before liberating his weapon. This was the most conspicuous instance of the kind I saw, but it was by no means the only one.

The sword bayonet has weight without breadth, and, with the cutlass, frequently lacks temper. I have seen a blue jacket's cutlass-sword bayonet at Tamai, as well as some in the battles up the Nile, bend into a semicircle and remain in that shape, unfitting it for a second "point." The use it was put to did not justify the giving way of the weapon. The fact that it did not regain its form further proved that the quality of the blade was of the poorest. It would have gone the same way had it been driven awkwardly into a sack of flour.

There can be no real difficulty with our mechanics and workshops in producing bayonets that will bear the brunt of rough usage in a campaign. What I have said of the bad quality of the cutlass applies equally to the sword bayonet. Many a soldier at Ablu Klea, saw with dismay his bayonet rendered useless at the moment when there was no chance to load his rifle, and when he most stood in need of its services. There also I saw sword bayonets bend and twist with the facility of soft iron rather than steel. After that fight you might have noticed brawny foot guardsmen, herculean life guardsmen, and the deft fighters of the mountain infantry, all of whom had stood shoulder to shoulder in the square, straightening their bayonets across their knees or under foot. Others there were who discarded their weapons and picked up some dead comrade's from the field.—London Telegraph.

For the Stomach's Ache.

Joe Howard, a veteran New York journalist, who has wrestled successfully with a hundred epidemics and drank enough whisky to float a gunboat, gives the following advice to persons whose aching stomachs warn them of the approach of cholera or something like it: "First and foremost, avoid brandy, whisky and gin. They allay the pain temporarily, but they excite, exasperate and inflame the stomach, and worse remains behind. Avoid all 'cholera medicines,' which are all made of laudanum, peppermint, red pepper and camphor. They, too, allay the pain, but the latter effect is excessively unpleasant. They are a delusion and a snare. In this case, as is nearly everything in life, the simplest and easiest is the best. Take a spoonful of the essence of ginger in a wineglass of water, the hotter the better, and make it palatable with a little sugar. It acts like magic, and after a few trials the pain and all unpleasant symptoms disappear, and you are hunki-dori. Aside, however, from the disputed point of what is the best remedy, is the fact that so many careful, prudent people just now are suffering with this weakening and demoralizing trouble, and the further noticeable fact that so many men die suddenly from its effects."

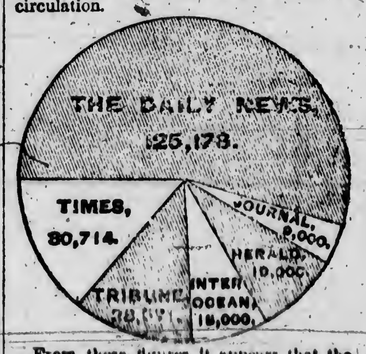
OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 15,270 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best typical American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only Press paper in the West that possesses this first essential in a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket-sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture.

A new windmill derrick has been erected near the old one on the Charlevoix resort.

A polo match between Charlevoix and Petoskey clubs is advertised for to-night at the Charlevoix rink.

Services at the M. E. church next Sunday. Preaching by the pastor. All who can come will be welcomed.

East Jordan has attempted to revive the spelling match craze which swept over the country a few years ago.

C. S. Hampton will send a dozen back numbers of the Daily Resorter to any address in the United States for 25 cts.

One by one our summer guests are returning home. Next month will see quite a scattering of families whose children attend school.

Preaching at Black's school house next Sunday at 3 o'clock. The Sunday school lesson will be illustrated from the blackboard.

Mrs. French has purchased the J. M. Clark house, near Eaton's twin cottages on Mason street, and it is being fitted up for occupancy by Mr. H. V. Rifenburg, of the gristmill company.

O. I. Wheat commenced the foundation of Mrs. Litney's new millinery shop, opposite the Bridge Street House, last Tuesday morning.

Ground was broken Monday morning for a brick block to be erected by E. H. Green, on the lot adjoining the one just put up by W. P. Brown.

The north front of the Woodbury lot has been cleared of brush and graded. Several other lots on the upper terrace have also been cleared.

Last Thursday afternoon, Dr. Crouter and A. B. Hunt, of Chicago, went to Susan Lake and in two hours caught about 25 pounds of fine pickerel.

The Daily Resorter of Aug. 26, contains a prize puzzle, and offers the Northern Independent one year to the first person who sends a correct solution.

New sidewalks have recently been finished on the Chicago resort, the latest being one from the top of the terrace near Mr. Moore's cottage, connecting with the walk to the dock.

Upright, Emrey & Co.'s delivery horse took a whirl around the corner yesterday morning, piling the wagon up against the fence, and throwing the horse flat on the sidewalk. No one hurt, and nothing broken.

The farmers in this vicinity will do well to sow to wheat this fall, all the ground they can prepare. The mill to be erected here this fall will need every kernel that can be raised within ten miles of Charlevoix for a number of years.

The Boyne City boat club is now fully organized and a four oared gig has been purchased. It is a good boat 38 feet long and our neighbors may look for a good team from Boyne City in next year's regattas. Our boys are full of pluck and muscle.—[Statesman.

During the past week the Charlevoix resort people have built a large amount of new sidewalk, besides making numerous other substantial improvements. The old south line fence has been removed, and a new fence built around the southern lot,—making the whole as one enclosure.

Chas. Plass, the boat builder, is now with F. W. Wilcox. He has just finished for I. R. Krum, of St. Louis, Mo., a handsome clinker row boat, 16 feet keel, and four feet two inches breadth over all, that contains, in the building and ornamenting, eight kinds of wood, as follows: Oak, ash, pine, linden, birch, birds-eye maple, butternut, and walnut. Mr. Wilcox keeps on hand at all times a select stock of these and other kinds of choice lumber for use in his business. As a boat builder, Mr. Plass has few equals. He has a medal from the Michigan state agricultural society for the best ten oared barge, and numerous letters of recommendation from prominent gentlemen of Detroit. He was for fifteen years steward of the Excelsior boat club, at that place. There is no doubt of the excellence of work from Wilcox's boat house while Mr. Plass continues to look after the details of model and finish.

Mr. H. V. Rifenburg late of Muskegon is here this week, preparing to erect the new flouring mill. The plans and specifications may be seen at the Fountain City house, where bids will be received for constructing the building. The intention is to let the entire job at once to the lowest responsible bidder for building foundation and frame and finishing ready for the machinery, the successful bidder to furnish all necessary material and give a bond for the faithful performance of the contract. The work is to be pushed as fast as possible, in order to be ready to receive the crop now being harvested.

Miss Carrie Hilton's birthday party, last Wednesday night, was also a "housewarming" for O. D. Hilton's new residence which is nearly completed, the dance having been conducted on the lower floor. It is a two-story house, 32x24 feet and will have a wing 24x18 feet. There is a cellar under the main building with walls two feet thick. The house fronts the north, and occupies a commanding position. On each side are two handsome dormer windows. From those on the west, one has a fine view of Traverse Bay and Lake Michigan, and on the east, a large extent of neighboring farms. The inside work is not yet entirely finished, but when it is, we hope to mention it again. The house will be heated by a furnace.

It was his first visit to this place, and like many others, he expressed surprise at the evidences of enterprise and beauty of surroundings everywhere visible here.

H. V. Rifenburg and son, with their families and household goods, have arrived, and are quartered at the Fountain City house until they can get settled. The elder gentleman will occupy the J. M. Clark house on Mason street, and the son a part of Dr. Lewis' double cottage on Dixon avenue.

Report of Sunday School Convention.

The seventh annual meeting of the Charlevoix county Sunday school association, held in Charlevoix, Aug. 19th, had a larger attendance of ministers and prominent workers than usual, but the attendance of children was very small, and there being no morning boat from Boyne City, only two schools located on Pine Lake were represented by delegates; nevertheless the discussions were very interesting, particularly on the question, How to increase the adult membership of our Sunday schools? and the prevailing opinion seemed to be that parents and church members should pay more attention to their responsibility on that subject.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President, Rev. J. Blake, of East Jordan.

Vice president, A. W. Chew, of Hayes township.

Secretary and treasurer, R. W. Kane, of Charlevoix.

Quite a lively, but good natured strife arose between the friends of Boyne City and East Jordan with regard to the place of holding the next convention. East Jordan enterprise carried the day, and also developed one feature in the growth of the work, namely, that some of our people realize the difference between a convention and a Sunday school celebration.

State Teachers' Institute.

Institute opened Monday at 10 a. m., forty teachers enrolled. Prof. John Goodison, of the state normal school, gave a lecture Monday evening, at the Presbyterian church; subject, "Origin and meaning of geographical names." Prof. W. E. Romson, of Stanton, gave a lecture Tuesday evening; subject, "A practical education." Both lectures were largely attended. A good deal of interest is manifested by teachers, and the attendance will exceed that of last year.

Card of Thanks.

D. H. Rhodes and wife wish to publicly return their thanks to Mrs. H. L. Clifford, Mrs. W. C. Newman, Mr. O. W. Smith, and other citizens of Charlevoix, for their assistance and many acts of kindness during the late fatal sickness of their child.

CLASS SONG.

BY GEO. K. BARRETT.

We stand upon a green plateau,
Where wide the prospect opes;
We gaze far down the way below,
On winding paths and sunny slopes.
But what appears so fair to-day,
We found a rough and rugged way,
And wearily did toil and strive
To bear the Cross of '85.

If steep and rugged was the ground,
And far the goal for which we tried,
Yet blithe the comradeship we found,
And strong and true each trusted guide.
They watched our footsteps first begun,
Till now with every task well done,
With fears dispelled, and hopes alive,
We hold the Crown of '85.

Beyond, above, the lofty height
Allures us to still onward go,
Where others, kindled by the sight,
Have passed the ways we do not know.
And may the path hold as pure joys,
As rich rewards, as few alloys,
As those through which we used to strive
To gain the Height of '85.

If trumpet call shall loudly sound
In life's high noon the honored name
Of one who at this board is found,
And hold it proudly up to fame,
How then our hearts will list the call
And thrill with memories dear to all,
Of one from whom we will derive
The crowning Prize of '85.

Not all who, pilgrim staff in hand,
Essayed with us the mount to climb
Are numbered in our joyous band
At this our graduation time.
Alas! some had not strength to come;
Some duty called; the gods loved some Whom memory still keeps alive
Among the Class of '85.

In Lifetime's prime, though blessed with joys,
We'll live our happy school days o'er,
And travel in our girls and boys
The well-beloved paths once more;
And when adown Life's hill we go,
Our hearts with early warmth shall glow,
And nothing from our minds shall drive
Love of the Class of '85.

MEMBERS OF THE BAR.

BY MORRIS REDWING.

Night was fast approaching, and I was anxious to find shelter before the storm broke that had been threatening now for nearly an hour.

The distant growl of thunder had increased to a loud peal, and the far-off glow of the lightning was now one almost continuous glow. It would not be long ere the storm broke in mad fury, and with it the night would be doubly dark.

My horse was jaded from a long drive, my buggy wheels spattered with mud, and myself in anything but a pleasant state of mind. This seemed to be the worst country I had ever encountered.

As the agent of Williams & Jones, I had come to this out-of-the-way region to look after their interests in a suit that was pending in the Circuit Court of one of the northern counties.

Forty miles over barren oak plains, and through pine and hemlock woods, with the buggy jolting and bounding over roots and stones, through mud and water a good part of the distance, was not calculated to render one good-natured, to say the least.

Jones, junior member of the firm, had been on the ground for a week, and it was a dispatch from him that brought me on this journey.

"Your testimony is absolutely essential to the success of our claims," were the exact words indited by Mr. Jones, and so I had set out at once, hiring my horse at the railway station nearest the county seat for which I was aiming. Many thousands of dollars were involved in the suit, and I realized the importance of my arriving on the ground in due season.

It was a long, lonely road from the station, and I began to fear that I might have lost my way, when the sight of smoke and the gray of a roof loomed in sight. I urged my horse forward, and drew rein in front of a dingy-looking house in the center of a small clearing.

I noticed a faded signboard bearing the name "Cottage Inn" upon it.

Great drops of rain began to fall, and a terrific peal of thunder shook the very earth. This was accompanied by a red gleam that was simply blinding.

I glanced down the road at the black wall of swaying trees, and then leaped from my seat to the ground.

A man came to the door at my call, a grizzled, unprepossessing fellow, who said he would put out my horse.

"Better git inside quick, stranger; it's goin' ter rain like great guns."

I needed no second invitation, but strode into the open door, and found myself in a narrow, low-ceiled room, across a portion of one side of which extended a dingy bar. A jug and a few black bottles sat on a shelf next the wall, and the end of the bar next the end of the room was occupied by a bucket of water, the long handle of a tin dipper showing itself above the side of the vessel.

I sat down on a stool and glared out into the falling rain. The thunder crashes came thick and fast, and one continuous glow of red, blue, and white electricity shot through the gathering shadows without. It was a terrible night, and I felt thankful for the shelter that the old wayside tavern afforded.

In a little time the man who had taken my horse to the stable came in and shook the water in a shower from his shaggy great-coat.

"Mighty bad night, stranger," articulated the man. "You hadn't an idee of goin' furder to-night?"

"When I left this morning I had. How far is it to Pine Creek?"

"Eh? Be you goin' there? Wal, it's a matter of six miles. I wouldn't advise you to go on to night."

"I shall not, if this storm continues."

"It's likely to. Have some supper?"

I was fatigued, and felt in need of something strengthening, so I answered in the affirmative.

Lighting a lump first, my host then shuffled into the next room, and I heard him giving orders to a woman about supper for a hungry traveler. When the man came back he removed his coat and hung it up behind the bar, then he seated himself and proceeded in an attempt to look me out of countenance.

"You said you was goin' to Pine Creek," he questioned, in a hoarse drawl. "Mebbe you've got business ter court?"

"Maybe I have."

"I was up thar ter-day. Big case comes off ter-morrer. Johnson agin Williams & Jones. Mebbe you wasn't goin' up on that suit?"

The grizzled head leaned nearer to me, and a queer look, full of curious questioning, filled the little gray eyes. I felt annoyed at the fellow's impudence.

A crash of thunder silenced a quick retort from my lips, and second thought prevented my giving vent to my true feelings at all.

"I am a witness in the case of Johnson against Williams & Jones," I said, in a pleasant way, in spite of my feelings. "I desired very much to get through to-night."

"You can easy make the Creek afore court sets in the mornin'," said the landlord. "What's the odds whether you stay here or there to-night? You'll be fresher to stop here, I reckin."

I nodded, without reply. The host rose, after another close scrutiny of my face, and shuffled into the next room. I was left to myself for a time. I was not favorably impressed with the proprietor of "Cottage Inn," and only the necessities of the case would have induced me to remain.

In a little time supper was announced, and I went into the next room, where a frowsy-headed woman of middle age ponred tea and waited on the table. I seemed to be the only guest. The man of the house, anxious that I should not suffer from loneliness, however, came in soon, and entertained me with a stream of talk about hunting that was of a sufficiently interesting nature to accomplish the desired object. When I returned to the front room again the storm had abated, and the prospect was brilliant for resuming my journey.

"Wouldn't undertake to go to-night on no conditions," said Mr. Banks, for such was the name he had given. "Another shower's likely to come up, and mebbe the creek's full to overflowin'. You'd be in a bad fix entirely if you should git caught in the woods sich a night, with the bridge over Pine Creek gone. Take my advice and wait till mornin', Cap."

It was sensible advice, surely. Court would not meet until nine at the earliest. I could rise at daybreak and get to Pine Creek two hours before court commenced, which would be all the time necessary for consultation with Mr. Jones. After debating the subject for some time, I concluded to pass the night at "Cottage Inn."

"We'll make it as pleasant as possible," said mine host.

An hour later I was conducted up a narrow, rickety stairs to a straw bed in the loft. A dingy room it was, with low rafters looking like skeleton omens extending upward from the low walls. I was tired, not entirely used to roughing it, and as soon as Mr. Banks had disappeared from sight down the rickety stairs I sought the low couch of straw, removing only my coat, and was soon in the land of dreams. Confused dreams they were, too. All sorts of sounds visited my ears, and the tramp of many feet was quite confusing.

"Come, Cap, wake up! wake up!"

Some one was shaking me rudely by the shoulder, and the glow of a light filled and dazzled my eyes.

"Is it morning?" I queried, involuntarily coming at once to a sitting posture.

"No; but you're wanted below," said Mr. Banks, whose grizzled visage peered into my face, a tallow candle held aloft in one grimy hand.

"Wanted! for what?" in a dazed way.

"Some members of the bar here come, and they want to see Jake Brown awful bad."

"Well, that's my name," I muttered; "but I think they might have deferred their meeting until morning."

"So I said; but twan't no use arguin' the p'int, and so I come to you. If you won't go down I——"

"Of course, I'll go."

I sprang up, donned my coat, and proceeded at once to follow the proprietor of the wayside inn to the room below.

Three men were there, and each rose the moment I entered the room. Two of the men were young and wore good clothes and shining plug hats; the third one was roughly clad and held a whip by the butt, which he swung about in a way that betokened long association with the lines. "A born teamster," was my mental conclusion at the first glance.

"This is Mr. Brown, I suppose?"

One of the men with shining hat extended his hand.

"That is my name," I answered.

"Jacob Brown, of the firm of Williams & Jones?"

"The same."

"Then you are the man we seek. Mr. Jones sent us for you. We, Mr. Kames and myself, are members of the Pine Creek bar, and employed by Williams & Jones in the case of Johnson versus Williams et al."

The man held his hat in hand and bowed low, plucking at his mustache and smiling blandly.

"Mr. Jones expected me to-night?" I questioned.

"He did, and is in a grand stew to think the suit is likely to go against him for lack of your evidence. Court was in session this evening, and opens again at eight in the morning. These pioneer judges dispatch business, I tell you. Mr. Jones is very anxious to see you to-night. The storm has abated, and you can just as well go on as not. I'll give you a seat in my buggy, so your horse can rest until to-morrow, when Mr. Jones will send a boy for him."

Mr. Clement was a smooth-tongued fellow, but I could not but wonder that my employer should send two lawyers after me instead of the teamster alone. I mentioned the strangeness of the circumstance.

Mr. Clement laughed rather amusedly. "We wasn't sure of meeting you at all, but Jack here was to go on if we did not find you at the inn. We wanted a little fresh air, which is delicious since the storm. A good moon renders the night just splendid."

Mr. Kames also put in a word, and I finally consented to accompany these two distinguished members of the bar to Pine Creek.

There was a moon, as Clement had said, but when we penetrated the pine woods it scarcely served to light the way.

We occupied a double-seated buggy.

Silence, save for the crack of the driver's whip and his chirp to the horses, reigned during the jolting drive. The road was new to me, and I was full of my own reveries, so that I indulged in conversation only when addressed by one of the members of the bar.

An hour passed, and then the "whoa" of the driver brought the vehicle to a halt.

The darkness was intense. The air was damp, and a distant rumble of thunder announced the gathering of another storm. I felt a cold chill creep down my spine.

"What is the trouble?"

"We stop here."

On the instant A strange aroma filled my nostrils. I felt a hand pass to my face, and realized that something dreadful was about to happen. I made a desperate struggle, but a vain one. Strong hands held me fast, and a deadly weakness stole over me. I seemed to be floating on a perfumed sea, with the distant rhythm of fairy bells ringing in my ears.

"He won't make no fuss," said a gruff voice, jarringly.

"He goes off to sleep like a daisy."

Then came a jarring laugh, followed by intense joking, the darkness of insensibility. Everything was blank until I opened my eyes hours later, to find myself lying on the damp ground in a narrow apartment, apparently a cellar.

I struggled to a sitting posture and gazed about. Four damp walls met my gaze in the dim light. Darting pains shot through my brain, and I felt ill indeed. I soon remembered the past, and fancy pictured the smiling faces of the two members of the bar as I had seen them last at the old tavern.

With some difficulty I gained my feet, and staggered to the wall. The slime and damp chilled me. I shrank back and fixed my eyes on the few rays of light that stole in through a narrow aperture under the oak floor above.

I was in a cellar, I felt quite sure, and began to realize that a base trick had been played upon me, a trick that I could now understand. The members of the bar had doubtless been employed by Johnson to keep the most important witness from the court-room until the great suit should be decided.

Perhaps I was to be murdered or driven from the country with the threat of death. I ground my teeth when I took in the outrage in all its bearings.

"I'll outwit these scoundrels yet," I muttered, going to the little opening and trying to peer outside. I was not tall enough, but grasping the top plank of the wall I drew myself up and peered forth through an opening too narrow to admit of escape unless enlarged.

I realized that time was precious. The trial was on to-day and might come to a conclusion without my presence. If it should prove to be the last day of the suit, my absence might result in ruin to my employer. Such thoughts rendered me desperate. I must escape. With the fury of desperation I drew myself up once more to the top of the wall, and attempted to enlarge the opening through which the light entered, with my hand.

One effort and then I drew my hand away, lacerated and bleeding. Rough stones imbedded in the earth surrounded the narrow opening. I fell back to the bottom of the cellar with a groan. For a time I was completely unnerved at the outcome of my venture. At length I cried aloud for help. It was a forlorn hope that some one might be passing and come to the rescue. Vain hope! I was hoarse from the exertion, and gave over the task.

Directly over the center of the cellar, some two feet above my head, was a small trap door in the floor. This I made several ineffectual attempts to raise. I labored under great disadvantage, since I could only reach the top by springing upward and striking it with my hand. The solid concussion led me to believe that the trap was weighted down.

I was indeed a prisoner without hope of escape. Sinking down at last in one corner of the narrow cellar, I meditated long and seriously upon the situation. I had been basely deceived by those slippery villains who pretended to be members of the bar; that they were not what they professed to be was now a self-evident fact. If I ever made my escape I would revenge myself on the smooth-tongued scoundrels, I inwardly vowed.

Hours passed. Time after time I essayed to break from the bondage of that accursed cellar, to no purpose. With each renewal of effort came added weakness, and as my strength failed me, a feeling of despair entered my heart. Was it possible that these demons in Johnson's employ would leave me here to starve?

While thinking upon this, a sound fell on my ear that startled me as nothing had ever done in my life before.

I listened, then sprang to the middle of the cellar, with a shudder of horror, while beads of perspiration oozed forth from every pore of my body.

I listened. The sound was not repeated, but on gazing back at the spot I had lately occupied, I caught the gleam of two bloody eyes. Then a glitter of shining scales, and I knew that I was face to face with a horrible death. Starvation would have been terrible, but to die under the fangs of a venomous serpent was more so.

The heavy eyes held a horrible gleam as the head rose and pushed itself forward over the edge of the wall into the cellar. Instinctively I glanced about for some weapon of defense; nothing, not even a pebble was in sight—only my loose hands to contend with the wrath of a rattlesnake.

Reader, put yourself in my place at that moment, and imagine if you can the horrible nature of my feelings. You can not do it, nor approximate to it. I dared not move or utter a cry. There we were, face to face, the rattlesnake and I. I never want again to pass through such an experience. I kept my eye fixed on the serpent, not daring to look away, until it seemed as though I was fascinated, as I had read of birds becoming, under the gaze of a serpent.

The eyes of the serpent grew into monstrous size—great round orbs, full of mingled colors and scintillating gleams. The yellow and green predominated, filled the whole atmosphere in fact. Dizziness, and a strange ringing filled my brain. Gradually I yielded to that horrible fascination, and began to move toward the serpent—going to my doom.

Would nothing break the spell?

Something did break it. At the moment when all my senses seemed lost in a terrible fascination, a sharp report filled the outer air, followed by a scurrying around, and a slender animal darted under the floor, and the next instant fell to the damp floor of the cellar in the coils of the rattlesnake. With a shudder and a gasp I came to myself. My presence of mind returned to me, and I glanced at the struggling objects on the floor—a rabbit in the embrace of a rattlesnake. The poison of the serpent would soon finish the poor hare; but I realized that this was my opportunity, and I at once proceeded to improve it.

I soon succeeded in getting my heel upon the head of the serpent, crushing it into the gravelly soil. I breathed easier when the venomous reptile ceased to squirm.

"Dad blast the luck, anyhow?"

I was interrupted in my work of destroying the serpent by the sound of a voice, and glancing at the little opening above the cellar wall I caught the gleam of a pair of eyes—human eyes this time—and the glow of an honest face.

"Ther rabbit darted under here. Go in, Brisk, an' fetch 'im out."

The face disappeared, and on the instant the sharp yell of a dog greeted my ear. The four-footed brute thrust his nose into the aperture and barked, but did not venture to molest me. I lifted up my voice then and made my presence known.

"Dad blast it, who's in thar?"

"I'm in the cellar," I shouted, "and can't get out. Will you help me?"

"Come, Brisk."

Dog and man disappeared, but after the lapse of a minute I heard welcome steps above. The crash of falling boards greeted my ears, and then the trap opened and two faces peered down upon me—one a man's, the other a dog's.

"Goodness gracious! What you down here for?" exclaimed the young hunter.

"Help me out and I will explain," I answered, quickly.

The fellow thrust a plank down, by the aid of which I gained the floor above, to find myself in a large log shanty, which proved to be one that had been long since deserted by the loggers. I found my rescuer a stout young woodsman, possessed of considerable intelligence. He listened to my story with his chin resting on the open muzzle of his long rifle. When I had finished he expressed his feelings in a short ejaculation.

"Well, I'll be doggoned!"

The rabbit and rattlesnake were left in the cellar, the trap closed, and together we sought the open air.

"It's six mile to Pine Creek," explained Sam Orton, "but if you feel strong enough we'll git there inside of two hours. I reckin 'twill be most night then. Lucky I was out huntin', wasn't it, old man?"

I admitted the truth of the fellow's conclusions, and expressed a wish to go at once to Pine Creek.

It was a tedious journey, and when just at nightfall we entered the village, I was well-nigh exhausted. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour court was in session, and I at once repaired thither.

"Thank heaven you have come!" was the fervent ejaculation of Mr. Jones, as he grasped my hand, on my entering the room. "May it please your honor, our witness has arrived."

My appearance was a consternation to the Johnson side of the house. I glanced over the faces assembled near the bar, but failed to see either of the distinguished "members" who had so interested themselves in me on the previous evening.

Consternation prevailed in the enemy's camp when I took my place on the stand. The story I had to tell was a startling one, and my lawyer was not slow to connect the late villainy with Johnson and his friends. A revulsion of feeling took place, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of Williams & Jones.

"You came just in time," said Mr. Jones, late that night, as he grasped my hand. "It was a villainous trick on the part of Johnson, and came near proving successful. From your description of the 'two members of the bar,' I believe I know them. I have put an officer on the track, and hope to have them in limbo before morning. I expected you yesterday, and was disappointed at your non-appearance. That Johnson is a clever scoundrel, and doubtless paid these fellows a goodly sum to dispose of my chief witness until after the trial."

I quite agreed with Mr. Jones.

"I believe they would have permitted me to die in that infernal cellar," I said.

"Anyhow, the rattlesnake would have fixed me had it not been for Sam Orton, who drove that rabbit under the shanty."

"True, and he shall be rewarded."

Contrary to the expectations of Mr. Jones, the two "members of the bar" and their teamster were not captured. They put distance between Pine Creek and their precious carcasses the moment my presence was known in the village. It was impossible to prove Johnson or his attorney guilty of detaining a witness, so no one was punished.

"It was all a joke," Johnson said, but I did not believe it. The landlord of Cottage Inn protested that he knew nothing of the intentions of the visitors at his tavern, so I did not get satisfaction out of him. I never recall my night adventure with members of the bar without a shudder.

Busy People.

The world is lined four layers deep with people who are always saying they are too busy to attend to this or that, whichever they may be happened to be called upon to do, outside of their regular duties. They always bring to my mind the hen with one chicken. All of you know how that hen is busier than one which has a dozen, and in addition has a whole barn-yard full of other duties to perform. I sometimes think these "too busy" people are lazy, except in the one direction, and unless some powerful incentive is presented they never do but the one thing. I know women with three or four children, one servant and a house of ten rooms, who never have a moment's time to devote to anything but their households. Then I know others with twice as many children, four times as many servants and twice as big a house, not only attending well to their homes, but finding time to read and to do much work outside. Nor have they any more strength physically or mentally than their "too busy" sisters. Now why is it? Isn't it because the first mentioned woman is so busy that she is lazy? Among men it is the same. You see it comes out strongest where anything is to be done of a public character. One man, with just as much work to be done as his neighbor, can meet the other demand and render valuable assistance, while his "too busy" neighbor says he can't leave his office, and does nothing. If this isn't laziness it is selfishness, and the latter is even less commendable than the former. No man knows what he can do until he tries, and the most never find out because they never try.—Mrs. Brown, in Merchant Traveler.

A Great University.

The University of Strasburg is a splendid educational institution. It was founded in 1537 and reorganized in 1871. Since the reorganization over $3,500,000 has been expended for new buildings, etc., and there is a yearly appropriation of nearly $250,000 for its support. Its new edifices are a series of magnificent palaces, and its library contains 560,000 volumes. No other institution in Europe has so rich a provision for higher education. There are seventy-three ordinary and nineteen special professors. The students last year numbered 858.

THE TRUNK MURDERER,

Preller's Alleged Slayer in Jail at St. Louis—He Refuses to Talk About the Case.

[St. Louis special.]

Walter H. Lennox Maxwell, alias T. C. D'Anghier, alias Hugh M. Brooks, the supposed murderer of C. Arthur Preller at the Southern Hotel in this city on the 5th of last April, arrived here on Sunday from San Francisco in charge of Detective Tracy and Officer Badger, of the St. Louis police force. A crowd of from 2,000 to 3,000 men, women, and children were at the depot when the train arrived, and there was a great scramble among them to get a view of the prisoner, but good order was preserved.

The accounts of reporters who rode in from Halstead, Kan., on the train with Maxwell, and had free access to him and to the officers in charge of him, are to the effect that he absolutely refused to talk about his case and positively asserted that he has at no time or place made any statement in regard to it, or in any way acknowledged that he had anything to do with Preller, or knew anything about it. He says all stories to the contrary are wholly untrue. Detective Tracy thinks that further developments will show Maxwell to be a weak man, mentally, but that he has got the one idea wedged into his mind that his safety depends on his silence, and that he will startle nobody with a romantic defense. Tracy thinks he killed Preller for money; that the few admissions he has made point in that direction; that his voyage from St. Louis to Auckland was a money-spending debauch, and not a well-planned escape from justice, and that it was the luck that takes care of drunkards and fools that stood him in stead, and not any good management of his own.

Maxwell was in Chief Harrigan's office an hour or so this afternoon, and a large number of callers were introduced to him, but nothing regarding his case or what line of defense he will pursue was obtained from him. Charles Bleger, the trunk-maker, recognized Maxwell as the man to whom he sold the trunk in which Preller's body was found, and a porter at the Southern Hotel recognized him as having been a guest at that house in April last. Maxwell will be turned over by the police authorities to-morrow to the Sheriff and will be placed in jail. What other, if any, legal action will be taken, has not yet been determined.

GRANT'S TOMB.

A Vast Throng at Riverside Park on Sunday.

[New York telegram.]

It is estimated that at least 40,000 people filed past the tomb of Gen. Grant last Sunday. It was the greatest crowd that has visited Claremont since the funeral. The visitors came by every road leading to the park, and began arriving early in the morning. All the surface roads leading anywhere near the park were crowded, and the elevated lines ran extra trains. There were a number of extra police as well as many detectives in civil clothing, but there was not the slightest disorder, and there was no occasion for their services at any point in the neighborhood of the tomb. By noon the crowd had so increased that it was necessary to form the people in line. The stream stretched over the hill for a quarter of a mile, and the visitors filed slowly past the entrance to the vault three or four abreast. That Claremont has a charm of its own aside from its being the resting-place of General Grant was shown to-day by the numbers who lingered there after passing the tomb. Thousands walked to the top of the knoll beyond, and then spread over the lawn above the bluff which commands the magnificent view of the Hudson. Some of the paths of entrance and exit about One Hundred and Thirtieth street are steep and dangerous, and it became necessary to-day to close them. The people take a great interest in the camp of the regular soldiers on guard, and come as near to the tents as the guards will allow. To-day a double guard was on duty, and only friends and families of the soldiers were admitted. One of the visitors to Capt. Fessenden was Lieutenant Brownell, who killed the man who killed Ellsworth at Alexandria.

G. A. R.

The Proposed National Monument to Grant.

[Washington dispatch.

General S. S. Burdett, Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R., has returned here from the G. A. R. encampments at Gettysburg and Springfield. To a reporter Gen. Burdett to-day said that at each of these places he spoke to the veterans regarding the erection of a monument to Gen. Grant, and they were unanimously in favor of its location in Washington. "It would have done you good," said he "to see the enthusiasm that was awakened at the chance given the boys to honor their dead commander. The Grand Army proposes to subscribe 10 cents from every member, and there are 300,000 of them throughout this country. They mean to erect a monument to Gen. Grant in Washington, and I don't think the day is far distant when Gen. Grant's remains will be placed for final rest in Washington. In reply to Gen. R. B. Hayes' letter suggesting that the authorities of the Grand Army of the Republic encourage their comrades to contribute to the building of a monument over the grave of Gen. Grant, Gen. Burdett says: "I have been unable to bring my mind into accord with yours on that point. I hold to the opinion that the Grand Army will desire first of all to erect its own distinctive monument to our comrade, not at a great cost, but for that purpose raising only such sum as, composed of the equal contribution of each individual comrade, shall be within the reach and the glad gift of the poorest. The national monument to be erected to General Grant should be of such proportions and cost as to be beyond the reach of private benevolence, and of right and propriety ought to be ordered by the Congress of the United States and paid for out of the National Treasury, and that consequently the Grand Army should not be called upon for the effort you indicate."

A Drummer's Yarn.

My friend, whom I will call Norvell, is not a drummer in a professional way, but frequently makes a trip for the benefit of his own establishment. He is a versatile genius and his travels are generally productive of both lucre and knowledge. I met him recently and his salutation was:

"Do I look like a countryman?" I replied that I failed to discover anything in his make-up that would indicate a recent arrival from the country.

"Well, sir, let me tell you," said he, "that for the first time in my life I have been put down for a greenhorn. Yes, sir, a veritable greenhorn and no mistake."

"Well," said I, "did you succeed in removing that impression?"

"Well, now, I should relax my classical features."

And under promise of "no chestnuts" he proceeded:

"Quite recently I had occasion to run over to Boston, partly on business and partly for pleasure. The pleasure I expected to derive from attending a dinner given by an old army friend of mine. We had a jolly time, and I started the next afternoon for New York, but afterward concluded to stop in New London. I was sitting on the deck of the boat which runs between Providence and New London, smoking a cigar and trying to amuse myself with my thoughts and occasionally with viewing my surroundings. I noticed that nearly opposite where I was so comfortably sitting there sat an individual who was evidently sizing me up. There was nothing very striking in the fellow's appearance excepting, perhaps, a huge diamond in his necktie. On our arrival at New London this individual kept quite close to me, and as I was registering at the hotel some one tapped me on the shoulder. On turning about, I recognized my diamond-studed fellow-traveler. Said he: 'I beg pardon, sir; are you not Mr. D., of Brooklyn?' 'No,' I replied, 'I am Mr. So-and-so,' giving him some fictitious name.

"Ah, then, I have made a mistake. Mr. D. is a drummer for a house in Brooklyn, and having reason to believe that you were he, I took the liberty of approaching you. Hope there's no offense. By the way, 'sposo we take a drink?"

"Feeling pretty certain that my newfound acquaintance was one of Hungry Joe's disciples, I determined to make his experiment on me as interesting and expensive as possible. I accepted his invitation, ordered the best brandy and a bottle of soda, after which we smoked the choicest brands afforded at the hotel, all at his expense. After more affability on his part, during which I discovered that his object was to have me change my quarters and accompany him to his hotel—which proposition I of course declined—we had something more at his expense, and then excusing myself I retired to my room.

"After supper, while I was loitering about, along came my friend again, and he opened up with a proposition to wine me. I had no desire for the wine, but hated to lose an opportunity to make him spend his money, so I acquiesced and we drank the wine and we smoked—at his expense. Then we strolled about, talking of nothing in particular and everything in general. Finally he exclaimed, with something like exasperation, 'Say, if you want an evening's amusement, come with me down to my hotel. There's a lot of us drummers down there and we are going to have a little game.'

"As I saw no prospect of ridding myself of his company, I agreed to go; so we started, but I was revolving in my mind how I should get rid of him, when, as we were walking along, he said quietly, 'Do you know, my dear sir, that I am the oldest drummer on this road?' 'What, you,' I said, 'the oldest drummer; why, sir, it is impossible. I attended a dinner in Boston last evening given by a man who has been on the road over fifty years.'

"I remembered that my Boston friend, while gesticulating, had revealed the loss of two fingers from his right hand, during the war, and what is more, said I, 'it is a remarkable fact that this old drummer has but two fingers on his right hand.' 'Well,' said my confidential companion,' what has that to do with it?'

"'Why,' said I, 'he wore off the other two carrying samples. He is also tongue-tied from talking off the skin gamblers that tried to take him into camp. You should see his tongue. He has had it photographed.' A cannibal would relish that tongue pickled or smoked. All swelled up from bluffing off New London skins and smoking too many cigars at their expense. He is a physical wreck, I regret to state, in every respect, from having turned himself into a walking beer vat, all at the expense of these funny little New England skins who——'

"But my fiction had done its work. I was suddenly left without an auditor. The poker sharp, with one amusing glance, compounded of fright, surprise, disgust and sheepishness, had recognized his blunder and fled. I stole through the moonlight back to my hotel, and aided by the somnolent effects of the bunko sharp's brandy, champagne and Reina-Victorias, slept the sleep of the just."

Helpless Upon a Friendless Seal

Who, in taking passage in a great transatlantic steamer, does not feel a thrill of exultation over her magnificent power. Against her the Storm King may hurl his elemental forces, nor pierce her armor, nor stop her onward course.

But let me describe a scene when, one morning in mid-ocean, there came an alarm from the pilot house followed by a cry: "The ship's rudder is lost!" From the confident expression, consternation came to every face. The wheelman being helpless to direct her course, the vessel was at the mercy of wind and wave.

The captain had been negligent—the hangings of the rudder were allowed to wear weak, and suddenly it had dropped deep into the sea!

Strong in intellect, in physical vigor, in energy and in ambition, man confronts, undaunted, gigantic tasks and commands applause for his magnificent achievements. But, all unexpectedly, an alarm comes—the rudder of his constitution is gone. He has been careless of its preservation: mental strain, nervous excitement, irregular habits, overwork, have destroyed the action of his kidneys and liver. This would not occur were Warner's safe cure used to maintain vigor. And even now it may restore vitality to those organs and give back to the man that which will lead him to the haven of his ambition.—The Traveler.

How to Steal.

"You ask me to tell you how a man reconciles his judgment with a life of systematic stealing. Well, that is answered easily enough. They don't do it." The speaker was Col. A. G. Sharp, the Chief of the Postoffice Inspectors, who has, in one capacity or another, spent many years of a life not yet passed the middle line in tracking down and bringing to justice that class of criminals who violate trusts reposed in them.

"Take the case of Bruggoman," continued the Colonel. "He was an honest man and an upright citizen; his great ambition in life apparently was to get together enough money to complete the payment on his house, and thus secure a home for his family, in whose society he found his chief happiness. When he saw this opportunity of making money his judgment undoubtedly condemned it. It told him that it was wrong, and that in the event of discovery he would be ruined for life. But the desire for sudden acquisition, for the rapid accumulation of money, overcame his judgment. He had not the moral courage to resist the temptation; and so fell. It was not because his judgment had proved defective, that his reason had failed him, but because this desire for money overpowered them and became the dominant influence of his life. I can well understand his state of mind when in court, as the sentence was about to be imposed, he had nothing to say but blame for himself.

"I used to be an Assistant Warden in a Penitentiary," went on the speaker, after a brief pause, "and in that capacity came in contact with a great many criminals. I have been told by thieves that when they first began to steal they were troubled in their minds to such an extent that they could not sleep, and would be afraid to meet most people in the streets. The second theft did not disturb them so much, and finally reached a state of mind that they would steal with the same unconcern as they would eat their meals. Their conscience, their moral nature was deadened, and they no longer were disturbed by thoughts which at first made them start at shadows. But this is the ordinary experience."—Washington Star.

Ways of Sleeping.

"Men have different ways of sleeping," said the proprietor of a downtown 15-cent lodging-house. "Some can't sleep unless their heads are turned in a certain direction. I reserve one of my beds every Saturday night for a man who comes in from the country. It heads northwest and southeast, and he says that is the only way he can sleep. But most of my customers are poor men, and so tired that they are glad to throw themselves down and sleep any way.

"Some bury themselves in the bedclothing until you would think that they would surely smother. Others lie on their backs, and this is the kind that snore. See these linen strips! When a man snores so loudly as to disturb the others, I tie up his chin so softly as not to awaken him. He don't snore any more after that. I have to keep awake all night on the lookout for sleepwalkers, who might injure themselves if not cared for".—New York Sun.

Wanted.

As good health on Sunday as during the rest of the week; the same ability to attend religious meetings as to engage in the usual active duties of life.

As great care in listening to religious instructions as is given to scrutinizing each new dress, cloak, bonnet, etc., worn by those in attendance.

As great ability in learning our own faults as those of our neighbors. With the supply of this want the world will soon be renovated, society much improved, and all made happier.

Weather to suit all, or, better still, people who are disposed to be suited with the weather.—City and Country.

Supremely Delightful

To the emaciated and debilitated invalid is the sense of returning health and strength produced by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. When that promoter of vigor is tested by persons in feeble health, its restorative and vitalizing potency soon evinces itself in improved appetite, digestion, and nightly repose, the sole conditions under which strength and nerve quietude is vouchsafed to the human system. A gain in flesh of course ensues upon the restoration of digestion and assimilation. As surely as winter follows the fall of the leaf does disease shadow the footsteps of declining strength, when the premature decadence of vitality is not arrested. Marasmus, consumption, and other wasting maladies are prompt to fasten upon the enfeebled. Avert disease, therefore, with this grand enabling tonic, which not only renews failing strength, but mitigates and counteracts the infirmities of age and those of the gentler sex. Rheumatism, malaria, liver and kidney troubles yield to it.

THE distinguished U. S. Senator from Indiana, Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, certifies that in a case of rheumatism in the back, he obtained instantaneous relief from St. Jacobs Oil. He says it is a remarkable remedy.

How Champagne Is Made.

In France the making of champagne is a process requiring extreme care and attention at every stage for at least two years. The grapes are picked with especial pains to keep any of them from falling or receiving bruises. Only the juice of the first pressing is made into high-class wine, and the quantity of this that shall be drawn is regulated by weight. Four hundred kilogrammes are allowed for every forty gallons of wine, and when the desired quantity has been obtained the pressing is stopped. The protruding edges of the mass which have escaped the heavier pressure are cut off and subjected to a second pressure, the juice from which is called the first taille. A third pressure gives the second taille, and a fourth the redeche, juices that are considered fit only for the workmen. When the scum has risen in the wine-tubs it is taken off, and the casks are filled and fumigated with sulphur and put away, not quite full, in the cellar, for fermentation. The wine is racked off into other casks when the fermentation has subsided, and becomes quite clear by the time the December frosts set in. It is then mixed, by bringing together thirty or forty casks of the same growth, and blended. Tannin is added to neutralize grease and deposits, and as much alcohol as is required. At a later stage a masque or deposit forms on the side of the bottle, the removal of which requires much care and skill and manipulation for several weeks. Afterward a syrup of sugar and alcohol is added, in proportions varying according to the country to which the wine is to be sent. Finally, the bottles are corked, wired and set on end.

Longfellow's Birthday Book is a beautiful present to give any lady. But there is a little book published in pamphlet form, with no pretensions to literary merit, that would be as appropriate, and might be the means of saving a life. It is called Dr. R. V. Pierce's treatise on diseases of women, for whose peculiar troubles the "Favorite Prescription" is especially designed. It is profusely illustrated with wood-cuts and colored plates, and will be sent to any address for ten cents in stamps, by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Gen. Grant's Book.

The American Publishing Co., of Hartford, Conn., made the claim that the publishers of Gen. Grant's book exhibit bad taste in assuming as original for that work some of the features advertised as new therein. The Hartford people say that several of the important features were original with a biography of Grant published by them before the General thought of writing his book, and that the title, "A Personal History of U. S. Grant," was used on the biography published by them on their first edition, and has always remained the same, but has been almost identically appropriated for the General's book. Among the features found in the latter, but claimed as original in their book, are the famous "Fort Donelson Surrender" letter, the portrait of Grant when a Lieutenant, at 21 years of age, and the celebrated horse-buying story.

An Inventor's Advice.

George Stevenson, when advising young men how to get on, would finish by saying, "Do as I have done—persevere." For fifteen years he plodded and worked before giving the finishing touches to his locomotive. In as many days those persevering in the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," have experienced great relief and found themselves on the high road to health. Liver complaints, impure blood, chronic lung diseases and many others yield to its healing influences never to return. All druggists.

I HAVE always noticed that drug store patrons who take whisky as a "medicine only," always have the reddest noses.

IF you are bilious, take Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," the original "Little Liver Pills." Of all druggists.

IT is easier for a saloon-keeper in Iowa to get rich than for a Congressman to refuse a drink.

COUNTERFEITERS BEWARE.

A Michigan Concern Enjoined.

[From the Rochester Morning Herald.]

The following injunction has been obtained by the Hop Bitters Company, of Rochester, N. Y., against Collatinus D. Warner, of Reading, Michigan, prohibiting him from manufacturing or selling "German Hop Bitters:"

The President of the United States of America to Collatinus D. Warner, of Reading, Mich., his servants, workmen, salesmen, and agents, and each and every of them:

Whereas, it has been represented unto the Justices of our Circuit Court, the Hon. Stanley Matthews, and the Hon. Henry B. Brown, at Detroit, within and for said District, sitting as a Court of Chancery, that you, Collatinus D. Warner, are manufacturing and selling a medicine named German Hop Bitters, in fraudulent imitation of the Hop Bitters made and sold by complainant; your said medicine being devised, calculated, and intended to mislead the public into purchasing such counterfeit goods as the manufacture of the complainant.

We, therefore, in consideration of the premises, do strictly enjoin you, the said Collatinus D. Warner, and all and every the persons before named, from using the words "Hop Bitters" on any fluids contained in bottles so as to induce the belief that such fluids are made by complainant; and further, from manufacturing, selling, or offering for sale any bitters or other fluids in the bottles and with the labels, and in the general form in which you were manufacturing and selling the bitters called by you German Hop Bitters, on the filing of the bill; or in any other bottles, or with any other labels contrived or designed to represent or induce the belief that the bitters or fluids sold by you are the goods of the complainant, until the further order of the Court. * * *

Witness,
THE HONORABLE MORRISON R. WAITE,
Chief Justice of the United States.
At Detroit, this fifteenth day of July, A. D. 1885.
[L. S.] Walter S. Harsha, Clerk.

Prosecute the Swindlers.

If when you call for Hop Bitters the Druggist hands out anything but "Hop Bitters" with a green cluster of Hops on white label, shun that Druggist as you would a viper; and if he has taken your money for a bogus stuff, indict him for the fraud and use him for damages for the swindle, and we will reward you liberally for the conviction.

See U. S. Court injunction against C. D. Warner, Reading, Mich., and all his salesmen, agents, druggists, and other imitators.

Marion.

The late rains have delayed the harvest, and farmers will have to watch their chances, in order to save the grain in proper shape. No class of men work harder for what they have than do farmers, and no class in society to-day are less prepared to take advantage of their position. Every profession in society, except the farmer, has its union or combination to protect its interests, but the easy, plodding farmer does not see the benefit of union, because he does not realize its meaning. He does not realize the fact that the margin of all profits is based upon the produce of the land. In other words, agriculture is the basis of civilization.

The pastures begin to improve, giving more and better feed to stock, and every indication of a good supply of the needful, thus better enabling us to stand another seige of winter.

A valuable lesson may be drawn from the recent experience of Plymouth, Pa., where an epidemic of fever nearly decimated the population. The fate of that town should be a warning to every community, that the laws of health cannot be infringed with impunity.

A Card.

The relatives and friends of the late William Gibson and Edward Gallagher, take this means of expressing their gratitude for the quick and generous sympathy of the citizens of Charlevoix. It is one of the chief consolations of their bereavement that such kind hands and tender hearts as yours were found so ready to render such needed services to the poor remains of their unfortunate dead. They will always bear with them the sense of having received one of life's tenderest ministries at your willings hands.

The citizens of Beaver Harbor, and Island, join with the relatives and friends in their testimony of gratitude, as the feeling here is one of devout admiration for your noble, thoughtful, and tenderly considerate service. Such messages of good will bind our community to yours with the strong bond of an affectionate regard. Your kindness will surely be remembered here by the people of this generation with the highest esteem and heartiest devotion.

The prayer of all is that you may never need such a service as you have rendered, but you will find none to minister, in your time of need, more true hearted than you have been in this sad calamity.

A Strong Temptation.

A young man, or rather a boy, for he was not seventeen years of age, was a clerk in one of the great mercantile houses in New York. An orphan and poor, he must rise, if he rose at all, by his own exertions. His handsome, honest face, and free, cordial manner won for him the friendship of all his fellow-laborers, and many were the invitations he received to join them in the club room, in the theatre, and even in the barroom. But Alfred Harris had the pure teachings of a christian mother to withhold him from rushing headlong into dissipation and vice, and all the persuasions of his comrades could not induce him to join them in scenes like this. He feared the consequences.

One evening one of his fellow-clerks, George Warren, the most high toned and moral among them, invited Alfred to go home with him to supper and make the acquaintance of his family. The boy gladly assented for he spent many lonely evenings with only his books and his thoughts for company.

He found his friend's family very social and entertaining. Mrs. Warren the mother, was a pleasant, winning, I might almost say fascinating, woman—one of the kind whose every little speech seems of consequence, and whose every act praiseworthy. Mr. Warren was a cheery, social gentleman, fond of telling stories and amusing young people. And George's sister Jessie a girl about Alfred's own age, gave an additional charm to this happy family.

After supper wine was brought in. Mrs. Warren poured it out herself, and with a winning smile passed a glass of the sparkling liquid to the guest. Alfred took it with some hesitation, but did not raise it to his lips. Each of the family held a glass waiting to pledge their visitor. But Alfred feared to drink. He set the goblet on the table, while a burning blush overspread his face.

"What! do not drink wine?" asked Mrs. Warren, in her pleasant tones.

"I have been taught not to drink it," said Alfred.

"You have had a good teaching, I doubt not," said the lady, "and I honor you for respecting it; but I think it makes a difference where and in what company you take it. I should not be willing for George to go into barroom company with dissipated young men, and call for wine, but at home in a family circle it is different. A moderate use of wine never hurts anyone. It is only when carried to excess that it is injurious. You had better drink yours. So little as that will never hurt."

Jessie was sitting by Alfred. She took up the glass he had set upon the table and gave it to him with a charming smile.

Again he took the goblet in his hand. The glowing wine was tempting but the faces around him were more tempting still. He raised it toward his lips. But at that moment there arose up before him a pale, sweet face, with pleading eyes—the sweet face of his mother in heaven. The boy set down the glass with a firm hand and with a firm tone said:

"I cannot drink it. It was my mother's dying request that I should never taste of wine, and if I disregard it now I fear greater temptation will follow. You must pardon my seeming discourtesy, but I can not drink it."

A silence fell upon the little circle. No one spoke for several minutes. Then Mr. Warren said in a voice choked with emotion: "Forgive me, my boy, for tempting you to violate your conscience. Would that all young men would show as high sense of duty."

Every one of the family put down their wine untasted.

"The boy is right," said Mr. Warren. "Drinking wine leads to deeper potations. We have done wrong in setting such an example before our children. Here Ellen," he called to the servant, "take away this decanter."

And as the table was cleared of the wine and glasses, Mr. Warren said, solemnly, "Now here in the presence of all, I make a solemn vow never to have any more wine on my table, or to drink it myself as a beverage; and may my influence and precepts be as binding on my children as the request of this boy's mother to him."

And Mrs. Warren softly responded, "Amen."

Mr. Warren turned to Alfred. "We are not drunkards nor wine bibbers here, my boy. I have always preached temperance to my children, but I have never realized before how an occasional glass of wine, if partaken of in good society, could injure. I see it now. If a person can drink one glass, he can drink another and yet another, and it is hard to know just where to draw the line. I thank you for this lesson. I will show that I have as much manliness as a mere boy. My children will follow my example and pledge to abstain totally from wine as a beverage."

"We will, father," was the response.

The pledge was never broken by any of the family and never did Alfred Harris have cause to regret that he resisted the temptation to drink one glass of wine. Years afterward, when he was a prosperous and worthy merchant and sweet Jessie Warren was his wife, they often spoke of the consequences which might have followed had he yielded to that one temptation, and Jessie tries to impress as firm principles upon the minds of her children as her husband's mother instilled into the heart of her boy.—School World.

Better Times at Hand.

The interviews with Chicago business men published in the Herald yesterday covered a large portion of the mercantile field, and almost without exception their tenor was hopeful. It is an old saying that when things become as bad as they can be, any change must be for the better, and the prevailing opinion seems to be that business is now in about that situation. During the last four years of depression, stocks have run pretty low, unsound traders have been shaken out, economy on the part of the people has produced its inevitable results of depleted supplies and heavier pocketbooks, and at present, with a fairly bountiful yield of nearly all agricultural products, the growing confidence of merchants and others in returning prosperity cannot be said to be without some substantial basis.

This element of confidence, not only on the part of capitalists and business men generally, but on the part of the people in every walk of life, is of supreme importance. It comes and goes without much reason, and is contagious to a degree which would be laughable if at times its effects were not so lamentable. One croaker about hard times in a neighborhood will produce others, and if business actually is unsatisfactory for the time being the panic which seizes on people in such emergencies speedily makes it a great deal worse. In thousands of instances men whose incomes during the past four years have been as large as they ever were have been the loudest in their complaints. The Herald has no intention of being understood as saying that good and bad times so-called are the result simply of popular caprice, but that that element does enter into the problem to a greater or less extent cannot be denied. The people are led like sheep one way and the other, with hundreds of thousands of them all the while unable to explain by any actual financial experience of their own why they have joined the laughing or the weeping throng, as the case may be. In this phase of business may be seen a powerful argument against every thing in the nature of governmental subsidies for the creation of artificial prosperity. It is the hot house plant which first yields to the frost, and so in business it is the illegitimate, government-pampered enterprise which first collapses when even a faint chill is thrown on the financial operations of the people. The more completely all such businesses can be weeded out of our society the less danger will legitimate industry of every kind be exposed to.

The cheerfulness of Chicago merchants, who are proverbially clear-headed and enterprising, is but a reflection of the more hopeful feeling prevailing among the people of all the vast section of which this city is the commercial metropolis. It is plain that, while there are yet croakers abroad, the preponderating public sentiment is much less despondent than it has been, and this feeling is bound to find expression in more liberal purchases in all lines of trade. A dollar is a dollar nowadays, but low prices appear to have found a way of coaxing it out of the people's pockets. On the nimbleness with which it circulates will depend the course of trade.—Chicago Herald.

Results from Sanitary Work.

Sanitary authorities have claimed that the sanitary work which they have recommended to be done as a preparation for cholera,—such as preventing and abating nuisances; attending to drains, sewers, privies, and cesspools; cleaning up generally, and unusual carefulness in regard to foods and drinks,—would reduce the sickness and deaths from other diseases, even if cholera did not come. The weekly reports for July, 1885, to the Michigan state board of health, by physicians in different parts of the state, indicate that this claim is being realized in Michigan, so far as relates to the lessened sickness, it having been lessened from nearly every disease, and greatly lessened from fevers and from diarrheal and other diseases believed to be especially influenced by sanitary conditions; and this is true notwithstanding the meteorological conditions in that month were rather more than usually unfavorable to health. It is proper to state, however, that the sickness in any month is influenced by the meteorological conditions in the preceding month, and that the meteorological conditions in June, 1885, were favorable to health.

Observations in Michigan for many years have shown that in July the meteorological conditions especially unfavorable to health are high temperature, excessive humidity of the atmosphere, and deficiency of ozone.

The bulletin of health in Michigan, July, 1885, says: "For the month of July, 1885, compared with the average of corresponding months for the seven years, 1879-1885, the temperature was slightly higher, the absolute and the relative humidity were more, and the day and the night ozone were less."

"Compared with the average for the month of July in the seven years, 1879-1885, remittent fever, intermittent fever, dysentery, consumption of lungs, cholera infantum, diarrhea, cholera morbus, measles, and whooping-cough were less prevalent in July 1885."

A large part of this decrease in sickness has undoubtedly been due to the medical and sanitary journals and the newspapers, which have constantly kept before the people the necessity for sanitary work and the facts as to the spread of cholera in Europe.

It remains to be seen to what extent efforts for the exclusion of cholera from this country, and the general preparation for cholera by boards of health and the people, shall prove effectual, but even if cholera shall not be entirely prevented, there will remain the belief that the measures which have so greatly decreased the sickness from other diseases cannot but have had their influence in decreasing it, and if cholera does not occur in this country it seems quite probable that, by reason of the suffering else where, there may be as many cases of serious sickness prevented in this country as there have been cases of cholera in Europe. But this may not continue without continued vigilance and effort.

HENRY B. BAKER,
Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH, Lansing, Michigan, August, 1885.

The only constant and certain outlet for idle labor is the idle land,—that is tersely stating the whole case. When men who are anxious to labor cannot get work they can always find land lying idle and suffering for the want of the work which they are longing to do. These idle workmen have families to support. They must provide for them a house to live in, food to eat, and clothes to wear. They must do it by their labor or by their wits, or else somebody must do it for them. If they are anxious to work, and expect to provide for their families by labor, it is natural to suppose that they are willing to follow any honorable line of labor that will give them health for themselves and comfort for their families. Every idle laboring man of this city may feel sure that there are forty acres of idle land in this county waiting for his labor. That this forty acres of idle land holds a home and all the necessities of life for his family within its bosom, and is only awaiting his industry to bestow it on his family. Go through the country and see what the settlers have done, and they will testify that settlers now have a better chance to start than they ever had.

The Union has frequently, and often forcibly admonished young men, sons of farmers, and all others not afraid of hard work, to seek and purchase the uncleared lands to be found in this state as one of the safest investments which can possibly be made for the future. Every year lands are harder to obtain, and every year our population is increasing; with nothing to do in cities and villages idle men will be driven to agriculture. Remember, young men, and old men too for that matter, the richest men this state will possess in the years to come will be the men who own free and clear, the land they till. Get homes, boys—get homes everybody while there is a chance.—[Ovid Union.

President Cleveland shows his practical, good common sense in everything he does. Instead of going to Long Branch, Newport or some other fashionable summer resort for his summer vacation, and being bored to death with fashionable idiots and irrepressible office seekers, he takes himself to the woods, as far removed from the world as possible, where he can hunt and fish with one or two congenial friends, do as he pleases and enjoy himself, free of restraint. He will go back to the capital with restored energies and be ready again for business, whereas, if he had gone to a fashionable resort, he would have had but little, if any rest.—[Gazette.

Charles Edmond of Otsego left a butternut table-leaf lying on the open stoop on the south side of the house. In the morning there was distinctly traced on the top of this board the picture of a leafless limb of a tree with many branches, making a picture 16x17 inches. It looks as if burnt or seared in by a hot iron. Now to solve the mystery Chas. looked around him. One of the trees in front of his house has a dead limb with branches of which the picture on the board is a small copy. Edmonds thinks the lightning photographed the dead limb on this board.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A naval lieutenant on the flag-ship Tennessee, at Bar Harbor, Maine, who spoke disparagingly of Gen. Grant in the presence of a New York politician, was challenged by the latter to a duel. The lieutenant accepted the challenge, but the Admiral refused to permit him to go ashore, and the duel is "off" for the present.

Boston papers publish an interview with Dr. Dewey, of that city, in which he says that Maxwell, or Brooks, the supposed murderer of Preller, when in Boston asked him to get him a human body, and that before he left the city he came to the Doctor and told him confidentially that he had gotten one. Dr. Dewey says that Maxwell seemed to be possessed with the idea of getting hold of a "stiff," but gave no hint why he wanted one. The Doctor told him that it was impossible in that city. Maxwell then left town for a few weeks, and on his return surprised the Doctor on the street one day by saying that he had gotten a body and wished him to come to his room and inspect it. Dr. Dewey says that he did not accept the invitation, but in view of the developments in St. Louis he now wishes that he had done so. The invitation to see the body was given only two or three days prior to Maxwell's departure for the West.

The annual meeting of the American Forestry Congress will be opened in Horticultural Hall, Boston, Tuesday, Sept. 22.

Forty thousand tons of steel rails were contracted for at Pittsburgh last week. The weekly production at present is 15,000 tons, and the capacity 25,000.

Ex-Gov. Reuben E. Fenton, of New York, dropped dead in the office of the First National Bank of Jamestown, N. Y. He was 66 years old.

A resident of Philadelphia asserts positively that he met and conversed with C. Arthur Preller in that city since the date of latter's alleged murder in St. Louis.

Mr. Theodore Frelinghuysen, son of the late Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State in President Arthur's Cabinet, and Miss Alice Coates, daughter of James Coates, of the firm of J. & P. Coates, Scotland, were married at Newport, R. I.

A sea turtle eight feet long and weighing nearly nine hundred pounds was landed near Boston the other day.

A Vermont sportsman who was accidentally caught in a bear-trap was rescued at the end of thirty-six hours in a perishing condition, having existed during his imprisonment without water, with but little air, and no food except the raw meat with which the trap was baited.

WESTERN.

Leonard Gardner had been arrested at Springfield, Ill., for beating his wife. He was released on bail, procured two revolvers, and started on a hunt for the two policemen who had arrested him—Officers William I. Camp and Fred Gall. Gardner waylaid the officers and shot Gall in the groin and Camp in the head, fatally wounding the latter, but before his death he shot Gardner four times, killing him instantly. A negro woman was also wounded by a stray shot. Camp leaves a wife and five small children almost destitute.

Life-saving stations will be established at Sturgeon Bay Canal, Wis., and Pentwater, Frankfort, White River, and South Haven, Mich.

Severe frosts have occurred in the extreme Northwest on the night of Aug. 24. At Minnedosa, Northwest Territory, the temperature fell to twenty-five degrees. The cold weather has hastened the exodus from the Northern lake resorts.

Adjuant General Drum received a dispatch from the officer commanding in New Mexico, saying the Southern Utes were starving, and that unless food was immediately procured for them they would go on the warpath.

Frank P. Cass and A. P. Goodykountz, wealthy white citizens of the Cherokee Nation, were murdered while asleep in camp near the Sac and Fox agency, in Indian Territory. Plunder was the incentive to the crime.

Minnesota's population, according to the census just completed, is 1,118,456, an increase of 317,713 in five years.

The Appraiser's office in San Francisco is to be investigated, as it has been discovered, as alleged, that under its former administration large quantities of opium and other valuable merchandise have been stolen from the stores by officials. A special investigation of the customs and Chinese certificate business will also be made.

Many depredations have recently been committed by Apache Indians in Arizona and Sonora. At Bassachuea three Americans, and eight Mexicans have been murdered. A party of armed citizens has left Tombstone for the Mexican border to attack the hostiles.

Freeman S. Cargan and wife were, nine years ago, in Saginaw County, Michigan, sentenced to life terms in the Jackson and Ionia Prisons, respectively, for the murder of Charles Smith. They were convicted on the testimony of Smith's widow, who was herself condemned to ten years' imprisonment as an accessory. Just before her death, which occurred recently in the Detroit House of Correction, Mrs. Smith confessed that her testimony against the Cargans was a pure invention. Mrs. Cargan's sentence was commuted, and it is expected that her husband will soon receive a pardon.

Policeman Fred Gall, of Springfield, Ill., is dead, making the third victim of the recent tragedy in that city.

A Nebraska man claims to have discovered a process by means of which the human soul can be made visible at the moment when the body which it has inhabited dies.

Missouri coal miners met in secret session at Sedalia for the purpose of forming a State organization to be under the jurisdiction of the Knights of Labor. The Western Nail Association, in session at Pittsburgh, resolved to make no change in the present card of prices, and to continue feeders in the nailers' places.

Lucien White was arrested in St. Louis for counterfeiting Brazilian bank notes, partly finished bills aggregating $320,000 having been discovered. August Gast & Co. were doing the printing, the paper presumably to be used as cigar-box labels, but becoming suspicious, informed the United States detectives. New York and Chicago lithographing firms refused to undertake the job. White, who lived in Brazil for a number of years, states that a Texan named Lano is the originator of the scheme.

At Sturgis, D. T., Corporal Ross Hollis, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, who assassinated Dr. H. P. Lynch, was hanged by the citizens.

SOUTHERN.

Secretary of State Bayard has applied to the President of Mexico for the extradition of Aufdemorte, the embezzling clerk of the New Orleans Sub-Treasury, now under arrest at Monterey.

Jacob Graup, owner of a mill near Morgantown, W. Va., was returning home from camp-meeting in a carriage, in which were also his wife and two grandchildren, when the horses ran away, dashing the vehicle to pieces, and all four of the occupants were seriously injured.

The real estate of the late John Nichols, at Fort Worth, Texas, has been levied upon to cover his defalcation to the City National Bank, of which he was Vice President. The condition of the bank is not as bad as had been anticipated. Nichols' defalcation is $40,000.

A cyclone swept over Charleston, S. C., which unroofed one-fourth of the houses in the city and did much damage to the shipping. The loss is estimated at $1,000,000. Great havoc was also caused along the entire Southern Atlantic coast.

Charleston (S. C.) dispatches state that the recent storm proved the most disastrous that ever visited that city. Within comparatively a few minutes the injury to property was very large in the aggregate, though individual losses were comparatively small; chiefly to roofs and fences. Some of the wholesale dealers, however, lose heavily by damage to stock. The heaviest losses were along the water front. Following is an estimate of the losses:

Wharf property	$350,000
Private property	300,000
Cotton presses	80,000
Churches	30,000
City property	35,000
Railroads	50,000
Ashley River bridge	8,000
Shipping	100,000
Lumber mills	20,000
Miscellaneous	100,000
Total	$1,123,000

WASHINGTON.

Architect Bell of the Kansas City Postoffice building, is charged with illegally expending $18,600 of the public funds in placing a marble wainscoting in the Postoffice for which there was no warrant in the appropriation.

The Solicitor of the Treasury has given an opinion that disbursing officers in the payment of interest on United States coupon bonds must accept court records of administration, execution, etc., when verified according to the law of the State where the records are filed.

There have been filed at the Interior Department since March 4 3,000 applications for appointments—more than during eleven years preceding. The applications embrace one cranky petition for the position of Secretary and applications for every subordinate grade down to charwoman.

At Washington, John Brooks, the Philadelphia champion, rode a twenty-mile bicycle race in 1:02:41, beating the best American record by five minutes and two seconds.

On learning of the deplorable condition of the Southern Utes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made arrangements for supplying the half-starved savages with 10,000 pounds of beef and 3,000 pounds of flour weekly.

A ruling made by the First Comptroller of the Treasury is to the effect that the employment of twenty-four persons borne on the pay-roll of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims is without authority of law. Among the individuals who will be deprived of a sinecure under this ruling is Mr. Walker Blaine.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics reports the total value of exports of beef and pork products for nine months ended July 31, 1885, at $67,706,092; dairy products for three months ended July 31, 1885, $4,031,716. The total value of the exports of breadstuffs from the United States for the seven months ended July 31, 1885, was $55,558,952.

POLITICAL.

Erastus J. Shepherd has been arrested at Laredo, Tex., charged with complicity with Aufdemorte in the thefts from the Sub-Treasury at New Orleans. Thirty-seven hundred dollars of the stolen money was found on his person.

The official returns give Tate, Democratic candidate for State Treasurer of Kentucky, 67,597 majority. This is the tenth time he has been elected.

The New York State Republican Convention will be held September 22, at Saratoga.

General Butler denies that he has written a letter indorsing the administration, and claims to be entirely out of politics.

The Pennsylvania Prohibitionists met in convention at Harrisburg, and nominated Barr Spangler, of Mariotta, for State Treasurer by acclamation. Over three hundred and fifty delegates were in attendance. Ex-Governor St. John addressed the convention.

A report is telegraphed from Saratoga, N. Y., to the effect that Postmaster General Vilas will be given the Austrian mission, and that Postmaster Pearson, of New York, will succeed him in the Cabinet. The statement lacks the element of plausibility.

Conrad B. Day, of Philadelphia, was nominated for Treasurer of State by the Pennsylvania Democrats at Harrisburg. The speeches and resolutions were severely denunciatory of the deal between Vanderbilt and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The platform indorses the administrations of President Cleveland and Governor Pattison, favors a revision of the tariff, and condemns sumptuary legislation.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The apple crop in the New England and Middle States will fall below 75 per cent. of that of an average-bearing year. The yield in England will fall below the needs of that country.

The steamship Etruria made the run from Queenstown to New York in six days five hours and thirty-one minutes. This is the fastest time on record.

The Scotch steam-dredge Beaufort, with a crew of twelve persons, was lost in a recent hurricane off the Bermudas. Officers and men are said to have been drunk.

President Cardenas, of Nicaragua, denounces as a calumny the published charge that he has been subsidized by M. de Lesseps' company to prevent the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal.

Boston railroads and their Western connections have been extensively swindled through the use of defective tickets which had been sold as waste paper. One Patrick Fitzgerald, an employe of a paper house, has been disposing of these damaged tickets for a long period, and in large quantities, the railroad officials failing to discover the worthlessness of the cardboards. Fitzgerald has disappeared.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of science was held at Ann Arbor, Mich.

The Western Nail Association, at its meeting at Pittsburgh, affirmed the card rate, and resolved to resist the nailers' demands. The outlook was reported as encouraging for an early resumption by the mills.

Light frosts are reported from various points of Wisconsin and Iowa, the damage to crops being inconsiderable. The weather has been exceptionally cold for the season throughout the West. A dispatch from Brainerd, Minn., says: "This morning uncovered a frost for nearly the entire region of Northern Minnesota, which is repeated again to-night for a considerable area. The damage so far is undoubtedly severe to corn, and in particularly exposed places the destruction is complete. None of the crop was far enough advanced to escape injury, and the very latest planting is well nigh ruined, except in regions protected by woods, as is the case in the timber districts in the rear counties. Ice is forming to-night." At Harvey's Lake, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., snow fell at intervals during Wednesday, Aug. 25. In sections of New England the mercury fell as low as 45.

Gen. John A. Logan and wife and Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Marsh, who are summering among the Thousand Islands, while posing in a boat for the benefit of an itinerant photographer, were capsized, but escaped with no other damage than a thorough wetting. Curiously the negative of the sitters was secured at the precise instant when they "took a header," and when the victims of the accident had "bobbed up serenely" and secured footing on dry land, they loaded the lucky artist down with orders for photographic mementos of the affair.

FOREIGN.

Russia has instructed its representative at Constantinople to carefully watch the negotiations of England's envoy, Sir Henry Drummond Wolff.

The Czar of Russia arrived at Kremsier on the 25th of August. The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria met him at the station. There was a grand ball in the evening.

The village of Shinot, 140 miles north of Suakim, on the Red Sea, has been attacked and destroyed by the British and their native allies. Many hostile Arabs were killed, and a large quantity of cloth and grain captured.

One hundred persons were drowned by the wrecking of a vessel in the Gulf of Aden.

The cholera panic is increasing at Marseilles, and all who can get away are leaving the city. The pestilence has extended to many towns and villages in the Department of the Rhone, and has broken out on board the French squadron near Toulon. There is no improvement in the situation in Spain.

Prince Bismarck, at the request of France, has ordered the removal of the German flag recently hoisted over a French island in the South Pacific.

A profound sensation has been created in England by the action of the Nationalist conference at Dublin, and Mr. Parnell's utterances are savagely denounced by the London press.

The Caroline Islands episode has caused the Madrid papers to assume a warlike tone, and it is boasted that in the event of trouble the Spanish navy could blockade all Germany's ports and sweep German commerce from the seas.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

An armed party is reported to have sailed from Cuba for the Florida Keys for the purpose of organizing a filibustering expedition to overthrow the Cuban Government.

Memorial services in honor of Gen. Grant were held in the hall of Congress at the City of Mexico on the 27th of August, under the auspices of the municipal government, and were attended by all the leading dignitaries and society people.

Eight men were injured by a collision on the Burlington and Quincy Railroad at Corning, Iowa.

In Lawrence, Mass., Henry R. Goodwin shot and killed Albert D. Swan, a prominent banker. The murderer asserts that in matters affecting the telephone business Swan had cheated him out of all his possessions. Goodwin telephoned for officers to come and arrest him.

Agrarian outrages are increasing in County Kerry, Ireland. The Earl of Levon offers to sell his tenants their holdings under the provisions of the land-purchase bill.

During the recent visit to Kremsier the Czar was accompanied by his famous mastiff, which has been carefully trained as a body-guard. His Majesty looked pale and careworn, and evinced much anxiety for his personal safety. The Grand Duke George, his second son, was appointed a lieutenant in the Imperial Austrian Uhlans by the Emperor Francis Joseph.

King Alfonso, according to the cable reports, has sent an autograph letter to the Crown Prince Frederick William, asking him to mediate in order that friendship between Spain and Germany may be maintained. It is also rumored that King Leopold of Belgium and Emperor Francis Joseph have been asked to act as arbitrators. Prince Bismarck, it is stated, favors the latter, and desires a decision in favor of Spain in order to escape from the difficulty. The war feeling at Madrid continues, and the press and military bitterly denounce the pacific attitude of the Government.

The Iowa State Republican Convention assembled at Des Moines and nominated the following State ticket: For Governor, the Hon. W. M. Larrabee, of Fayette County; Lieutenant Governor, Capt. James A. T. Hull, of Polk County; Judge of the Supreme Court, the Hon. Joseph M. Beck, present incumbent; Superintendent of Public Instruction, John W. Akers, present incumbent. The platform, which is very lengthy, protests "against the Union soldier having one vote and the rebel soldier having two;" denounces President Cleveland for the character of his diplomatic appointments; opposes the Democratic policy of a "tariff for revenue only;" indorses civil-service reform, and favors the creation by Congress of a national commission for the supervision and regulation of interstate commerce. As to the liquor question, the platform simply declares for a fair and thorough trial of the existing law, and alleges that "the Republican party of Iowa has never made support of prohibition a test of party fealty."

The pension laws provide that soldiers who have lost a leg at the hip-joint or an arm at the shoulder-joint in the service of the country shall be entitled to pensions at the rate of $37.50 per month. It has been the custom of the Pension Department to construe this law strictly. There are less than a dozen cases on the pension-rolls in which the amputation has taken place exactly through the joints mentioned. Commissioner Black, in ruling upon two test cases brought before him, declines to hold to the strict letter of the law and allows the full amount of pension, though the amputation did not take place at the joints. He holds that if the amputation is so near the hip or shoulder as to render the stump unserviceable the pensioner is entitled to the same compensation as if no stump were left. This rule will apply to a considerable number of pensioners who have been receiving pay at a lower rate.

OHIO DEMOCRATS.

An Harmonious State Convention—Gov. Hoadly Renominated by Acclamation.

Resolutions Adopted Favoring the Regulation of the Liquor Traffic by Graded Licenses.

[Columbus special to Chicago Herald.]

The Democratic State ticket nominated here to-day is: For Governor, George Hoadly, present incumbent; Lieutenant Governor, John G. Warwick; Supreme Judge, long to m, C. D. Martin; Supreme Judge, to fill vacancy caused by the death of John W. Okey, Gibson Atherton; Treasurer, Peter Brady; Attorney General, James Lawrence; member of the Board of Public Works, Henry Weibie.

The convention was called to order by T. J. Cogan. By the adoption of the report of the Committee on Permanent Organization, John Follett, of Cincinnati, was made Chairman, and George W. Hull Secretary. In returning his thanks, the Chairman was loudly applauded when he said this was a Democratic State Convention under a National Democratic administration which was grand and pure.

The Committee on Resolutions not being ready to report, the convention proceeded to the nomination of a candidate for Governor. Congressman George W. Geddes offered the name of Gov. Hoadly in quite a lengthy speech, recounting his brilliant record as Governor, and also paying a high compliment to A. G. Thurman, and announcing that he would not allow the use of his name before the convention. Geddes closed his eloquent peroration by moving a suspension of the rules and the nomination of Hoadly by acclamation. This was received with long applause, and no word of objection was heard to the motion.

Gen. Michael Ryan, of Cincinnati, followed, seconding the motion, and defended the Governor at length against the charges that he had made mistakes. When the motion was put the voice was unanimous and enthusiastic, with the exception of a few voices from the Hamilton County delegation.

After a committee had been appointed to wait on Gov. Hoadly and bring him before the convention, W. V. Marquis, of Logan County, in a short speech, presented the name of John G. Warwick, of Massillon, for renomination for Lieutenant Governor. The motion was immediately put and carried unanimously, amid great applause.

At this juncture the nominee for Governor was brought to the platform amid a shower of hats and a roar of human applause. Thanking the convention for renewed confidence, he said he dodged no issues, and there was not a fence in Ohio which he would straddle. He was against prohibition, and every one knew it. He asserted that he was for American liberty, irrespective of color. He voted for Grover Cleveland, and thanked God for it. He was and would continue to be loyal to Mr. Cleveland's administration. He explained why he had not been an outspoken candidate for the nomination. The party had brought him through before in an ambulance without much effort on his part, and he thought he had no right to claim a renomination under the rules of precedent. The convention being free to act without asking, he could not help responding to the call, and with better health he would hope even better results. In the discharge of his trusts he demanded the most searching criticism in all his official acts. He indorsed the work of the last Legislature, saying nothing had been done by it which Judge Foraker would have dared to veto if he had power. He thought that Foraker, instead of finding fault with the present administration, should be defending the memory of Rutherford B. Hayes and the Legislature which robbed Cincinnati of local self-government. Gov. Hoadly defined himself as against prohibition, and did not believe regulation and taxation was eternal. Taxation was odious to him. After the Governor had concluded his speech, on motion of the Hamilton County contingent, which had objected to his renomination, three cheers were given.

The other nominations followed as above given, no opposition being manifest save in the nominations for candidates for the Supreme Bench. Martin had an opponent in Judge Gilmore, and Atherton in George B. Okey, son of the late incumbent.

The platform as read by W. W. Armstrong consists of fourteen sections, and the following is a synopsis of the whole: It congratulates the country on the election of a Democratic President and the revival of prosperity under Democratic rule, and indorses the administration; approves the measures of a Democratic Congress for preventing the acquisition of unearned lands by railroad corporations. It reaffirms the national platform of principles adopted at Chicago last year; commends Hoadly's administration as wise and economical; denounces the Republicans for defeating measures for licensing the liquor traffic; favors a judicious and properly graded license system; pledges the party to be the enemy of monopoly, the friend of labor, and favors arbitration as the best means for settling differences between labor and its employers. It commends the steps taken in prison reform, favors the preservation of the canals, the establishment of an intermediate penitentiary for the reform of prisoners not belonging to the criminal classes, and the changing of the date of State elections to November. It pays a tribute to the memory of Gen. Grant, and mourns the death of Judge John W. Okey.

This was rapturously adopted, and the convention adjourned, the utmost harmony prevailing.

The ticket is regarded as an unusually strong one, and has the prestige of past success. The platform promulgated by the convention is the subject of some comment. The Republicans were in hopes the Democrats would insert in the creed of the party a plank declaring open war on prohibition. This, however, the Democrats did not do in a very direct way, much to the discomfort of the Republicans. On the other hand, Judge Hoadly, in his speech of acceptance avowed himself an open enemy to prohibition and a friend of the license theory. The Republicans are by no means pleased with the present attitude of their old-time allies, the Prohibitionists, and are not to any appreciable degree satisfied with the provisions of their own platform on the topic. The nominations of the day practically open the campaign of the year, and it is not improbable that Messrs. Hoadly and Foraker will meet in joint debate during the fall. If there is any undercurrent of venom and spite among the Democrats, it is confined to very few of the party, and will not amount to very much.

Gov. Hoadly, John F. Follett, and other prominent Democrats of the Buckeye State addressed a large and enthusiastic ratification meeting in the State House grounds to-night. About 5,000 persons were present.

The new Democratic State Central Committee organized this afternoon by retaining Mr. Cogan, of Hamilton County, as Chairman. T. C. Layton, of Auglaize, was selected Vice Chairman, and J. C. Tobias, of Crawford, Secretary. The work of the campaign was informally discussed, but no definite course of action was determined upon. The committee-rooms will be opened Monday next, and the campaign will at once be inaugurated.

The Feeling at Washington.

[Washington telegram.]

The renomination of Gov. Hoadly and the hearty indorsement of the administration by the Ohio Democratic Convention is a source of great satisfaction to the officials of the various departments, who express confidence in the ability of the Democracy to carry the State at the gubernatorial election. They were not prepared, however, to predict at this moment what influence Gov. Hoadly's declared opposition to prohibition might by indirection exert in strengthening the Republican ticket, but if entire harmony shall prevail among the various factions of the Ohio Democracy they apprehend but little danger on this account. A prominent Ohio Democrat, holding office at Washington, said that had the convention failed to properly indorse the administration the Republicans would have swept the State. He believed the action of the Ohio Democracy would teach a wholesome lesson to marplots and malcontents all over the country.

Delighted Democrats.

[Dayton (Ohio) dispatch.]

Democrats here are delighted with the work of the convention at Columbus, and feel confident that the old ticket will lead them to victory, as it did two years ago. The news of Gov. Hoadly's nomination was received here with booming of cannon. All agree that Hoadly has made an excellent State executive; that he was entitled to a renomination; and that he will be re-elected this fall.

AN ARMY OF 100,000 MEN.

Extraordinary Movement Among the Mohammedans of the Nigritian Regions in Africa.

A Mandingo Named Samudu Engaged in Suppressing Paganism and Killing Off Bad People.

[Washington telegram.]

Secretary of State Bayard is in receipt of a dispatch from Sierra Leone, West Africa, giving accounts of the movements of an army of 100,000 men in the interior of Africa. The dispatch is dated July 14 last and was sent by United States Consul Lewis. Mr. Lewis says:

"I have the honor to bring to the notice of the Department of State the fact of an extraordinary movement among the Mohammedans of the Nigritian regions, extending from Timbuctoo to the West Coast. It appears that in 1880 a Mandingo named Samudu, of extraordinary intelligence and energy, conceived the idea that he was called of God to wage a war for the suppression of paganism and for the opening of the roads to the coast, which in certain districts have been for generations subjected to excessive blackmail and to the plundering of vagabond tribes. During the last five years he has collected an army consisting of foot and horse of about 100,000. Mohammedan youth, wherever he goes, flock to his standard, anxious not only to secure the reward in the hereafter promised to those who fight for their religion, but to carry off the rich spoils which these expeditions that battle for the faith are sure to win.

"It is said that Samudu's army is divided into three portions. One is operating near the headwaters of the Niger. This portion recently drove certain French troops from the gold regions of Boossa, of which they had taken possession. Boossa is a large town, the capital of a province of the same name west of Soudan, on an island in the Niger, about latitude 10 deg. 14 min. north, longitude 5 deg. 20 min. east, and at one time had a population of 20,000 souls. Here Mungo Park met his death. Samudu's followers are now besieging Bammakkoo, a large town on the Niger, in the State of Pambarra, occupied about three years by the French, who have erected fortifications there.

"Another portion of the army is operating in the regions east of Liberia, and, by suppressing the disturbing elements, unfettering trade and introducing a knowledge of religion and letters, is in one sense opening the country for negro immigrants of intelligence and energy from America to push out from the African-American republic to the healthy and fertile regions of the interior. In another sense it is forestalling the whole region for Mohammedanism, and making it difficult, if, indeed, it is desirable, to convert that country to the faith imported from America by the immigrants.

"The third portion of the army is approaching the coast a few miles northwest of Sierra Leone. It has secured the submission by force or by voluntary surrender of all the tribes on the way for 500 miles back.

"The largest and most important pagan kingdom on this side of the Niger was Soolima, of which Tnlaba, a large commercial city, was the capital. For the last sixty years the Fulah Mohammedans have been trying by diplomacy and by arms to subdue this city to the faith, but it has always successfully resisted both diplomat and warrior. Last year Samudu's army in overwhelming numbers surrounded it and called upon the king to surrender and profess Islam. This he refused to do. The town was then invested and after a terrible siege of five months the king assembled the royal family and principal chiefs in his powder-house and informed them that he could hold out no longer; as his resources were exhausted; but having for more than two hundred years belonged to the ruling element, he was determined for himself and family to die rather than come under Mohammedan rule. He gave the chiefs their choice, either to die with him or go out of the town and give themselves up to the enemy. They decided to die with him. He then set fire to the powder and they were all blown up. This ended the Soolima power, which for more than seven generations had influenced the trade and politics of extensive districts, and had commanded the principal highways to the coast.

"Another very important achievement of this army is the destruction of the Hooboo power, an irresponsible organization, which for thirty years has been a source of annoyance and loss to caravans passing from the interior to the coast. Samudu gave orders to attack them in their mountain strongholds, which until then had proved inaccessible to the neighboring forces. They were surprised, their chief, Abal, was captured and decapitated, and his arms and legs, severed from the trunk, were sent to the various countries whose inhabitants had suffered from his predatory and murderous proceedings. The Hooboos are described as renegade Fulahs in rebellion against the King of Timboo. The roads have now been cleared of these thieves and murderers, so that an unprotected child or female may travel in safety all through that district.

"These operations will not be without a salutary effect upon American commerce, for there is in that country an increasing demand for American productions, and many of the articles produced by the people are valuable in American trade. Samudu's army is now only a few miles from the coast northwest of Sierra Leone. It is said to be their purpose, when dealing with the Timneh and Sherbro tribes, who by constant wars keep the maritime regions in such a state of ferment that often the caravans have struggled through obstructions for hundreds of miles. They find that their greatest difficulty is among the coast tribes and often fall victims to the latter."

THOUSANDS PERISH.

The Most Disastrous Flood in Thirty Years Visits Canton and Vicinity.

Entire Villages Engulfed, and Over Ten Thousand People Lose Their Homes.

[Washington dispatch.]

Details of the destruction in Canton, China, and vicinity by the recent great rain-storm there have been received by private persons in this city. The flood was the most serious which has visited Canton in thirty years. More than 10,000 persons lost their lives, and a far greater number are starving. Entire villages were engulfed, and the rice and silk crops in the vicinity were almost ruined. The price of rice has been raised eighteen per cent. in consequence of the loss of the crop. Rain fell the latter part of June, filling and overflowing many of the rivers. The streets of Canton were flooded for over a week. At Sez Ni City the water broke through the city wall. It is reported that several thousand people were drowned in that place. The embankments of the river were broken in numerous places, and the water swept across the surrounding country, carrying everything before it.

A foreigner, who was an eye-witness of the scenes of devastation, reports that one night the boat he occupied anchored near a bamboo grove. By morning the water had risen to the tops of the bamboos. At other points it rose as high as forty feet during the night time. The inhabitants fled from the villages and camped on the hillsides. At Munm, a market place, situated near an embankment of one of the streams connected with the river which brings water from the north and west rivers, the majority of the inhabitants were drowned by the water breaking through the embankment. Some escaped to a piece of rising ground in the neighborhood, but the water continued to rise and gradually overtopped the elevation, drowning those who stood upon it. Seventeen Chinese graduates in Canton, hearing of the distress and suffering prevalent in their native villages, took passages on a boat with a view to proceeding home to render what assistance they could. On the way the boat was capsized and all who were in it were drowned. In some places the parents tied their children on the high branches of trees, while they took measures for the general safety. The trees were washed up by the roots and the heartrending cries of the children were silenced in the surging water.

The body of a bride dressed in her bridal robes was found floating in the river at Canton. A large tub was also seen; it was picked up and found to contain a boy and a girl. With them was found a paper, stating their names, the day and hour of their birth. The parents had taken this means to save the lives of their offspring. The writer adds that the sufferings which thousands are enduring are heartrending; parents replying, with tears in their eyes, to their children's requests for food, that they have none. The people are obliged to use the filthiest water, and this, added to the diseases which will ensue upon the subsidence of the water will greatly increase the horrors of the situation. Meantime, all that is being done by the inhabitants to abate their misery is the beating of gongs, burning of incense, and howling of prayers to idols.

HE KILLED FIVE PEOPLE.

The Appalling Crimes of One Al Lackey, a Farmer of Blanco County, Texas.

[Austin (Tex.) special.]

The quintuple tragedy in Blanco County is confirmed by a stage-driver who has just arrived from that locality. The driver brought a letter to a gentleman in this city which gives particulars. The letter says: "There is considerable excitement in this county just now, caused by a terrible tragedy which occurred in the neighborhood of Johnson City, in which five persons were killed outright, three dangerously wounded, and one man is yet missing, who is probably killed. There had been some bad reports concerning Al Lackey and his daughter, who is about 13 or 14 years of age. About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon Lackey, with his rifle in hand, mounted his horse and rode to the house of Berry Lackey, his brother. He fired upon the family, instantly killing Mrs. Berry Lackey, whereupon Berry Lackey fled, pursued by Al, and when about one hundred yards from the house Berry fell and Al ran up to him and, while he was lying prostrate, shot him through the head. A son of Berry, who ran away when his mother was killed, said he saw his father fall and heard him plead piteously for mercy, but his Uncle Al fired and killed him. Having killed his brother and sister-in-law, Al Lackey hurriedly mounted again and rode to the house of J. C. Stokes, who lived but a short distance from the scene of the first murder, and opened fire, killing first Mrs. Stokes, then Stokes, and finally their daughter, Mrs. Charlie Lackey. This made five victims. The infuriated monster then turned and rode home, and fired the last ball in his rifle into the body of the daughter. The girl is still alive, but can not possibly recover. Turning upon his wife, Lackey, with knife in hand, pursued her across a field, but she saved herself by flight. He then returned to his house and drew the knife across his own throat, inflicting a dangerous but not necessarily fatal wound. Just after cutting his own throat he saw Tom Burdick riding toward the house, when, inspired with the strength of a fiend, he again mounted his horse and rode toward Burdick. As he met the latter he offered him his left hand to shake, meantime holding his right hand over his bleeding throat, also holding the knife in his hand. As Burdick shook hands with him, Lackey suddenly plunged the dagger into Burdick's side, inflicting a wound which physicians say is fatal."

The Sheriff was notified and immediately went to Johnson City, where Lackey had gone, and, accompany with two deputies, placed Lackey in an ambulance and brought him to jail, where he now lies in a precarious condition.

With the exception, perhaps, of the murder and cremation of the Lynch family near Hempstead some years ago this is the most horrible set of crimes ever committed in this State. Possibly the United States, in all its category of crimes, has no parallel to this.

WESTERN GOVERNORS.

Gov. Oglesby, of Illinois.

Richard J. Oglesby was born in Oldham County, Kentucky, July 25, 1824; settled in Illinois, at Decatur, in 1836; received less than a common school education; was a carpenter for two years; studied law in 1844, and was admitted to the bar in 1845; served one year in the Mexican war; worked two years in the mines in California; was elected to the State Senate of Illinois in 1860; served one session, and resigned to enter the volunteer service in 1861, at the commencement of the war for the suppression of the rebellion; was chosen Colonel, afterward appointed Brigadier General, and in 1865 (to take rank from November, 1862) a Major General; resigned in 1861, and was elected that year Governor of Illinois for the term which expired in January, 1869; was re-elected Governor of Illinois in November, 1872, entered upon the duties of his office January 13, 1873, and on the 21st of the same month was elected to the United States Senate as a Republican, to succeed Lyman Trumbull, Liberal. In 1884 he was again nominated for Governor by the Republicans and elected, defeating Carter H. Harrison. He was inaugurated in January, 1885, and his term will expire in 1889.

Gov. Sherman, of Iowa.

Buren R. Sherman, Governor of Iowa, was born in Phelps, Ontario County, N. Y., in 1836. In 1855 the family removed to Iowa and settled in Tama County. In 1860 young Sherman removed to Vinton, and entered upon the practice of law. Upon the breaking out of the civil war Mr. Sherman enlisted as a private in the Thirteenth Iowa Infantry, and was sent to the front. While at Jefferson City, Mo., he was promoted to Second Lieutenant. At the battle of Shiloh Lieut. Sherman was dangerously wounded, and his life despaired of—but after severe illness, during which he was commissioned Captain, he recovered sufficiently to return to his company, although still compelled to use crutches in traveling. He remained with the command, doing what service he was able, until the late summer of 1863, when his wounds having broken out afresh, and threatening fatal result, he was obliged to resign the service. He has never fully recovered, and yet carries his cane, a constant reminder of his part in the great war.

He returned to his former home in Vinton, and was afterward elected County Judge, and then for four successive terms elected Clerk of the District Court, which position he resigned on his election in 1874 to the office of Auditor of State, to which he was twice re-elected.

In 1881 he was elected Governor of Iowa, and on the expiration of the term in 1883 was re-elected to that high office.

Gov. Sherman was married Aug. 20, 1862, to Miss Lena Kendall, of Vinton, a lady of rare accomplishments, who has done much toward the very successful career of her husband.

THE DEADLY REVOLVER.

A Terrible Triple Tragedy in the Streets of the Illinois State Capital.

Two Policemen Shot Down by a Ruffian, Who Is Killed by a Return Shot.

Springfield (Ill.) special.

A double tragedy occurred here this morning, horrible in its details, resulting in the almost instant death of two men, one a policeman, and the other a citizen, and the wounding of another policeman and a negro woman.

A man named Leonard Gardner, owner of a candy store and a restaurant, was arrested last night on a peace warrant for beating his wife, and lodged in the city prison by Officers William J. Camp and Fred Gall. Early this morning Gardner procured bail and was released.

He proceeded at once to a store and purchased two forty-four caliber bulldog revolvers, saying that he proposed to kill the two policemen on sight that arrested him. To several persons during the day he made a similar assertion, saying as he flourished the revolvers that he guessed the police would not arrest him now.

About seven o'clock this evening Gardner took his position in a hallway on Washington street, between Sixth and Seventh, and as Camp and Gall came up he stepped out and fired at Gall, who received the ball in his groin and fell, but was unable to get his revolver.

Gardner then fired a fatal shot at Camp, the ball taking effect near the heart, but the plucky officer returned the fire after he was shot, emptying four chambers of his forty-four-caliber Remington into Gardner's body before he (Camp) fell and expired in the arms of Officer Jones.

Each of Camp's shots took effect in Gardner's body—one in the arm and three in the region of the heart—and he expired on the spot.

A stray shot fired by Gardner struck a negro woman who was passing in the calf of the leg, it is reported, severing an artery.

Gall was taken to the Leland Hotel, where he could have surgical attendance, and an examination showed that the ball took a downward course through the right groin and lodged, and hopes are entertained for his recovery.

The bodies of the two dead men were conveyed to police headquarters, where a heartrending scene occurred when Officer Camp's wife entered and threw herself on the inanimate form of her husband. Camp leaves a wife and five small children in almost destitute circumstances, who have the sympathy of the hundreds that have congregated to talk of the horrible affair, but not a regret is expressed for Gardner.

Such a tragedy was never before known in Springfield, and never before has a policeman been killed while on duty. Camp and Gall were considered two of the best men on the force.

DEADLY RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

A Fatal Wreck Near Louisville, Ky., in Which Three Men Were Killed.

[Louisville (Ky.) special.]

A fatal wreck occurred on the Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern Railroad last night, near Pleasure Ridge Park, about twenty-five miles from this city, which resulted in the death of three men. A severe storm had been raging in the vicinity early in the afternoon, and a large tree was blown across the track at the foot of a steep grade. About 6:30 o'clock the local freight coming toward this city reached that point. The train was traveling at a rapid rate of speed at the time, and as it was getting dark the engineer, Tom Sherrill, did not see the tree until he was too close to stop. He reversed the engine, but it struck the obstacle with great force and was thrown from the track, seven cars piling up on top of it. The front brakeman and fireman were in the engine with Sherrill at the time, and all three were killed almost instantly. The engine and cars were smashed to pieces and the track torn up. The names of the killed are as follows: Tom Sherrill, engineer; Ben J. Peak, brakeman; Tom Filburn, fireman—all of Louisville. T. A. Goodman, the conductor, was injured internally and his back severely strained. All the men were terribly scalded about the head and face, and terribly mangled in the wreck.

A DRUNKEN MADMAN'S CRIME.

After Shooting Four People, One Probably Fatally, He Blows Out His Brains.

[Salem (Ind.) telegram.]

A terrible case of drunken madness occurred to-day. Fred Berkey, Jr., a son of one of the leading citizens of this place, while intoxicated, appeared in the streets and began an indiscriminate fusillade. He fired nine shots, aiming at whoever happened to be in range. Laura Kleiner received two balls, one in the wrist and one in the shoulder. William McClanhan was shot through the hand. W. S. Percise sustained a flesh wound in the thigh. Jordan Payne received a ball through the body just below the breast, and will probably die. Payne when shot was in a buggy with a companion. Dragging Payne from the buggy, Berkey compelled the other man to drive on, and attempted to escape. Finding this impossible, he placed a pistol to his head and fired. The ball took effect, and the young man died in fifteen minutes.

No cause is known for the bloody work, except that Berkey was completely maddened by the liquor he had swallowed.

COLORADO.

The First State to Report Her Interdecennial Census.

[Washington dispatch.]

Secretary Lamar received an iron box today containing the census returns of Colorado. The law requires that States that expect Government aid in the taking of the interdecennial census must send in their returns before Sept 1. Colorado is the first to report. The population of Colorado has increased from 194,327 in 1880 to 243,910 in 1885, a gain of 49,583. The number of farmers in the State is nearly doubled, there being 8,474 to 4,506 in 1880. The 559 manufacturing establishments in 1880 have multiplied to 1,004.

FIERCE AND FURIOUS.

Charleston and Other Southern Points Devastated by a Cyclonic Visitor.

Wharves and Other Buildings Wrecked, and Church Spires Blown Down.

[Charleston (S. C.) dispatch.]

Charleston was struck by a cyclone this morning, and one-fourth of the houses in the city are unroofed. Parts of the spires of St. Michael's and St. Matthew's Churches were blown down, and the spire of the Citadel Square Baptist Church is demolished. The wharves and warehouses are badly damaged. At Sullivan's Island two steamers are aground, and the New Ashley River bridge now constructing is swept away. Four vessels which arrived yesterday are wrecked. The telegraph wires are down and there are no cars running.

The loss is still estimated at $1,000,000, including wharves and churches. Merchants are already rebuilding. The phosphate works near the city are but little injured, except the Atlantic, which loses its acid chambers. The Norwegian bark Medbor, from Liverpool, was dismasted in the storm, and the German bark H. Peters was driven ashore. The German brig Freiheit was sunk in collision. The dry-dock schooner William E. Lee was blown ashore and the Norwegian bark Veritas and the Italian brig San Prisco are ashore at Castle Pinckney, with a three-masted schooner, name unknown. No lives were lost.

A number of houses on Sullivan's Island were blown away. The New Brighton Hotel had over a hundred guests, and great fears were entertained for their safety. At 9 o'clock this morning the storm reached its greatest velocity. At that hour, while the hotel people were at breakfast, the Casino fell with a great crash. Fortunately, all the rooms in that building had been vacated. There were grave apprehensions that the dining-room and main building would soon succumb to the violence of the storm. At 9 o'clock the wind changed from the southeast and the storm increased from the southwest. When the Casino fell it is thought that the maximum of the storm was from sixty-five to seventy miles an hour. The main building of the hotel is intact, having stood the storm without very serious damage. At 1 o'clock it was entirely over. The loss to the New Brighton will be $30,000. There has been very general destruction of property on the island. The island was in the main submerged, but when the wind changed the waters receded.

In the vicinity of Savannah, Ga., the storm was very severe. At Tybee a dwelling house was blown down, but no one was injured. The Caroline Chalmers went ashore on the knoll inside of Tybee, and the bark N. Mosher on the north beach, half a mile south of Tybee light.

At Mayport, Fla., the Atlantic House was blown down, and Mrs. Gilbert Hunter severely injured. All the guests of the house, about thirty women and children, were exposed for hours to the furious, driving wind and rain. News from Fernandina shows great damage done to buildings, boats, and shipping, and the guests at the Strathmore House, on the beach, were driven into town for refuge. No lives were lost there.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

A Ruling That Will Embarrass the Court of Commissioners for Some Time.

[Washington telegram.]

The First Comptroller of the Treasury to-day made a ruling that is likely to embarrass the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims for some time to come. It is in effect that the employment of twenty-four persons borne on the rolls of the court is entirely without warrant of law, and that no payments can legally be made from the Treasury on their account in the future. Mr. Andrew H. Allen, disbursing agent of the court, recently made requisitions on the Secretary of the Treasury for $9,000 to meet the current expenses of the court. In the usual course of business the requisitions came before the First Comptroller, and he decided to make an investigation of the affairs of the court before authorizing the issue of the necessary warrants. His conclusions are summarized in the following statement, prepared by him for publication:

The Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims was created in 1874, to hear proof of claims to be paid out of the $15,000,000 awarded by the Geneva Commission, and was continued by various acts until Dec. 31, 1877. It was constituted of five Judges, with an annual salary of $6,000 each; a clerk at $3,000, a stenographer at $2,500, and an attorney to represent the United States at $8,000. Provision was also made for rent of court-room, furniture, stationery, fuel, and other necessary incidental expenses, all of which was to be paid out of said fund before judgments were paid. The court was reorganized in 1882, with the same officers and salaries as before, except that the number of Judges was reduced to three. The Comptroller, in investigating the case, found that outside of the above-named officials there were on the pay-rolls the names of assistant counsel for the United States, clerk to said counsel, experts, clerks to experts, messengers, watchmen, etc., whose aggregate salaries amounted to about $34,500 per year. He also found in the quarterly returns that there has been paid to other assistant counsel over $8,000 for the quarter ending December 31, 1884, and about $7,000 for the quarter ending March 31, 1885, besides other alleged illegal payments. He says he finds no law authorizing said payments, and after consulting with the Acting Secretary of the Treasury and with the Solicitor of the Treasury, he has decided to stop all future payments of the same.

EXPLORING ALASKA.

Progress Made by the Party Under Charge of Lieut. Stoney—A New Volcano.

[San Francisco dispatch.]

Lieut. Purcell, who went with Lieut. Stoney to Alaska to explore the Great Putnam River, returned here yesterday on the whaling tender Thomas Pope. Purcell reports that before proceeding up the river the party visited the newly found Bogoslar volcano. They noticed little change in it, except less smoke and a sand-spit was forming to the westward of it. July 8 Stoney reached Hothum Inlet, into which the Putnam River empties. He intended to ascend the river as far as his large steam-launch would carry him and then go into winter quarters. The party would then go into sledging parties for the purpose of exploring Northern Alaska as soon as navigation reopens. He intended to come down the Putnam River and explore Nutak River, which empties into an inlet south of Putnam. Purcell reports the party all well at the time he left. The expedition intends returning here next fall.

Notes and News.

Petoskey is agitating electric light.

St. Ignace had a $20,000 fire last week.

Elk Rapids wants a steam fire engine.

The Elk Rapids Iron Co. have an order for iron from England.

Senator Sherman opened the republican campaign in Ohio, by another shake of the "bloody shirt."

An insane man made a hole through the floor of Traverse City's $23,000 jail last week, but was captured before he escaped.

The democratic state convention of Pennsylvania last Wednesday gave a hearty endorsement of the present administration.

The farming community is the broad and substantial foundation on which the prosperity of any country is built, and only as this is thoroughly laid, can all prosper.

It is said that Cadillac is to have a democratic paper, and a stock company with a capital of $7,000 has been organized under the statute. Judge S. S. Faliass, L. G. Law, Mr. Bishop, and other well-known democrats are among the stockholders.

Plums will be a fair crop in Grand Traverse county this year. Both Judge Ramsdell and Mr. Rousho report well from their orchards. Pears will also be plenty in a short time. Peninsula fruit growers will soon begin to put them on the market, and say they are above the average.—Traverse Herald.

Clippings.

The long vacation days are drawing to a close and visions of close school rooms, long lessons, short recesses, dog-eared grammars, arithmetics and spelling books begin to haunt the slumbers of the youngsters who have for nearly three months revelled in unlimited play and freedom.

"And over is justice done" is proven once in the collapse of the Buffalo papers which published the Cleveland-Halpin scandal. Poetic justice is satisfied by the success of the News (Cleveland's defender), which purchased the Telegraph, closing its disastrous career.—Detroit Democrat.

"Buffalo Bum" is the chaste epithet applied by the chairman of the Iowa republican convention to the president of the United States. That man is a disreputable rebel. He has slandered the government and should be tried and hung for treason—or being a blackguard. Mr. Cleveland is now the government and the man who slanders the government is a rebel.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

John Sherman tells the Ohio voters that under a democratic administration the business depression is increasing. Last week the business failures numbered 154; in the corresponding week of last year, when John Sherman and his party were looking hopefully forward to the election of Blaine, the failures numbered 183. Facts and John Sherman can never agree.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Daniel Webster once said "that the freest government cannot long endure when the tendency of the law is to create a rapid accumulation of property in the hands of a few, and to render the mass of the people poor and dependent." On the ground of the greatest good to the greatest number, that is as good an argument against protective taxation as was ever compressed into a single sentence.

Reports from the west tell us that the country is full to overflowing with so called, professional men; every little hamlet has its half dozen or more doctors and lawyers, struggling for a livelihood. Men will be born of necessity in the future as in the past, and every commodity, whether wheat or brains, will be obliged to market itself according to that business principle, from which it is impossible to flee—supply and demand.—[Ovid Union.

Despite the fact that many of the farms in the country are mortgaged, there is greater prosperity to-day among the prudential farming classes than is to be found among any class of business men that may be named, excepting perhaps the pine barons who own the lumber forests and mills of the state. Village property and even farm lands never prove half as valuable as farming lands, despite the hard work or the low prices.—[Ovid Union.

The mass of people do not buy foreign goods in preference to American goods on account of any silly whim of fashion, if they can get them at the higher price is because they consider them to be better. In many lines American goods are clearly the best; but it is not these, as a rule, that accumulate a surplus here under the stimulation of tariff bounties, while our people pay out millions to foreign manufacturers. If all our manufacturers were under the constraint of fair competition to make as good articles as foreign producers it would be better for them and better for the consumers.—[Boston Herald.

On the day that John Sherman delivered his opening speech in Ohio charging that the reform administration had found absolutely nothing to reform, the newspapers of both parties in Cincinnati and Cleveland contained these headlines: "Great frauds unearthed in the pension bureau," "Stopping the salaries of a score of illegal employes of the Alabama claims court." John you are a regular old black republican fraud.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

It is rumored at Washington that the charges of extravagance against the court of commissioners of Alabama claims will soon be followed by others of a more serious character, which if sustained, will compel the summary removal of at least one of the judges. It is also stated that the accounting officers of the treasury have discovered extravagant and illegal expenditures by the fish commission, the geological survey, the signal service bureau, and in the general postoffice.

A New Steel Company.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 25.—The secretary of state to-day issued a license of incorporation to the Riverside steel casting company at Chicago; capital stock $250,000; incorporators, C. N. Pierce, Arthur H. Pierce and William S. Brewster.

THE LAND OF THE BLACKS.

Incidents of Travel Among Wild Tribes in Africa—White Men Invited to Marry Native Women.

When an African chief travels he takes the whole or a part of his household with him. The simple aborigines, therefore, are apt to look upon the solitary white traveler who wanders through their country without a single wife in his train a suspicious character. They are quite sure he needs close watching to prevent his running off with some of the females of the tribe. Dr. Barth, the explorer, said, after living five years in Africa, that it would be better for a traveler in those regions to take his wife with him, if possible. He said the natives would respect him more, and he would get along better. "They had nothing to object to me," he wrote, "except my being a bachelor." If the traveler has no wife the native chiefs, as a rule, are not backward about offering to supply the deficiency. Nearly all the explorers have had some annoying experiences with kings who were anxious to have them settle down, marry into the royal family, and grow up with the country. Some travelers have felt compelled to leave very abruptly in order to escape the attentions of women who determined to detain them as their husbands.

Dr. Buchner, the German traveler, who lived for six months at the capital of the muata yanva, about five years ago, was very much distressed by the deep interest with which he had unwittingly inspired the sister of that central African potentate. He describes her as a middle-aged and remarkably unprepossessing person of great avoirdupois. She insisted that Buchner take her for his wife and settle down comfortably as the joint proprietor of her extensive herds and fields. She importuned him so frequently that he was glad to escape her at last by quitting the country.

One of the daughters of the king of the Ambuellas, near the Zambes river, fell desperately in love with Serpa Pinto, the Portuguese explorer, who returned to Africa a few months ago. Her elder sister, who ably abetted her matrimonial designs, was very indignant when Pinto refused to marry the young girl. She wanted to know, in the shrillest of tones, if there were any prettier women in the country he came from, and what sort of a man he was anyhow. The sharp-witted wife of one of Pinto's porters heard the row and entered the hut. Assuming an air of great indignation, she told their royal highnesses that Pinto was her husband, and they had better let him alone. She bundled them out of the hut, and Pinto and his party left early next morning to avoid any further complications. In the picture Pinto's book contains of the infatuated young woman she appears to be quite a fine specimen of an African beauty.

Explorers have learned by experience that it is best to permit their porters to take their women along with them, even if their journey is to be thousands of miles in length. When a carrier has his wife with him he is not likely to run away. Besides, the women carry burdens nearly as heavy as those of the men. They wash and cook better than the men, endure fatigue better, carry their burdens more cheerfully, and work for less pay. African women have proved valuable adjuncts of nearly every expedition that has penetrated the continent in the past ten years.

Mr. Hore, a missionary on the great Lake Tanganyika, found near the southern coast three years ago a flourishing tribe, whose ruler was a woman. She was a good-looking negress, nearly 40 years old, and she was attended everywhere she went by a train of fifty ladies in waiting. Mr. Hore was the first white man Queen Mwema had seen, and she thought she would like to have the pale-faced stranger permanently near her residence. She begged him to live in her town, and when he insisted that he could not she did not let him go until he had promised to send some of his brethren to reside in her district. The queen said she would give them houses and plenty of land. At last accounts a mission station was about to be established in Queen Mwema's town.

The late King Mtesa, whose subjects inhabit the beautiful shores of Lake Victoria Nyanza, made a unique response when a missionary applied to him for food supplies two or three years ago. He listened in silence to the good man's petition, and then sent an attendant out into the streets of Rubaga with instructions that the missionary did not hear. Presently the attendant returned with a dozen damsels of Uganda in his wake. Then his majesty informed the poor missionary that he was tired of supplying him with food. He had concluded to present him with these women as his wives. They would plant his garden, prepare his dinner, and support him very handsomely, and he musn't come bothering around the place any more. Mtesa was very angry when the missionary declined to accept this wholesale matrimonial offer. He told him to shift for himself, and the poor fellow and his comrades would doubtless have had to flee from the country if Mtesa's envoys to England hadn't opportunely returned with such wonderful stories what they had seen that the politic despot thought it best to keep on good terms with the whites. He restored the missionaries to favor. Last year all his daughters were permitted to receive religious instruction, and one of them, who was converted, now occupies as king's sister a position of large importance and influence among the Waganda.

On the great interior plateaus of Africa, whose inhabitants are generally much superior in mental and moral development to the coast negroes, the men exhibit a good deal of affection for their women. Livingstone, who usually speaks of the African women as "ladies," makes many allusions to this fact, and so do Schweinfurth, Burton, and other explorers. The red-skinned Nyam Nyams are as noted as the Zulus for their intelligence and bravery, but if any of their women are captured by an enemy they will make any sacrifice and incur any disgrace to get them back again. The degraded coast negro, however, appears to know neither love nor jealousy. Mr. J. Monteiro, who has lived for years on the west coast, says that he never saw a negro there manifest the least tenderness toward a negress, or give or receive any caress that would indicate the slightest loving regard on either side.

It is to the credit of the natives that the white women who have entered the depths of Africa with their missionary husbands have almost invariably received kind treatment. If they could endure the climate they had nothing to fear from the aborigines. Mme. Tinne is perhaps the only white female traveler in Africa who has been killed. She wandered in safety among the blacks of the upper Nile, but fell a victim at last to Mohammedan fanaticism. Travelers say they would often be unable to make any progress whatever among the most savage tribes if they were not able to convince the natives that they possessed supernatural powers. A few conjurers' tricks will often open the way among the savages, who would fight the explorer if they did not think he could bewitch them all. Young Thomson, who recently came back from the Masai country, traveled far on his reputation as a man who could take his teeth out of his mouth and put them back again. He had two false teeth on a plate. When argument and entreaty availed nothing he had only to do the teeth act to get about everything he wanted. A chief south of Lake Nyassa, who had never seen glass, became the warm friend of a missionary whose watch he was examining. He could see the hands right before him, but he couldn't put his fingers on them, and he thought the white man by some occult power kept him from touching them.

Some petty chiefs have been in the habit of appearing before explorers and personating their sovereign the Big King for the purpose of getting a handsome present. The explorers have found a means of exposing these frauds. As a rule, none but the great chiefs are allowed to possess gaudy or highly colored cloths. If such goods are offered to a sub-chief who pretends to be the king he refuses to receive them, and stands revealed as a fraud. Consul Elton carried a quantity of red velvet with him in his travels through east Africa. He says he reserved the velvet for great chiefs or impostors, and that in both cases it answered admirably.—New York Sun.

No Chance for Social Intimacy.

A mild-looking man, who had been riding on the platform of a Third avenue horse-car, motioned to the conductor to stop at Bleecker street last night. He looked back at the conductor as he got off and limped up the street.

"Confound you," muttered the conductor. "You have ridden up and down this road often enough to be able to get off without stopping the car."

The conductor looked wrathy, yet his face betokened uneasiness.

"That fellow is a counter," he said, shaking his head ominously. "I knew he was when he got on. His face gave him away. He's been counting my fares from Sixty-fifth street," he continued, ringing up several fares absentmindedly. "Hang it, if they'd only keep a man long enough to let us get acquainted with him, it would give a fellow a show."—New York Sun.

Amos Fox's old barn opposite the Fountain City house is being torn down this week.

Last Saturday morning, S. M. See lost the thumb and fore finger of his right hand, while ripping lumber.

Jos. Beauvais has just completed another boat house for the accommodation of the Chicago resort people.

The annual school meeting will be held at the school house next Monday night, Sept. 7th, at 7:30 o'clock.

The engine for the steam agate works is being built by Washburn & Ackert, and the boiler by Henry Barth.

While digging a well on E. M. Clark's lot last week, a log was found 26 feet below the surface, about ten inches in diameter, and in a good state of preservation. The query is, How did it get there?

The scow Upright commenced on Monday morning to draw stone for the foundation of the new flouring mill.

Geo. Wise, of Petoskey, is in Rosenthal & Son's store a short time. Alick Rosenthal having gone home sick.

From the apparent feeling now, next year will be the liveliest and most prosperous in the history of Charlevoix.

Dr. Graves was in town this week, to get his baby which was left in the care of Mrs. Papineau after the death of Mrs. Graves.

The season just closed at the Chicago resort has been the most prosperous of any in the history of the association.

Sherman Wilson, of Grand Rapids, and Dee Allen, of Kalamazoo, contest in a three mile race for a purse of $15 at the rink to night.

W. A. Atchison left at this office last Friday a fine mess of summer squashes, a sample of what he is raising for this market.

At the donation supper at the M. E. church last evening the attendance was large and the receipts netted over sixty dollars. The ladies who managed it naturally feel much elated over the success of the evening.

The colored poster in the JOURNAL office window, offering the Detroit Weekly Free Press four months for 25 cents, attracts considerable attention. Like the paper it advertises, it is a first-class job.

The village schools will open on Monday, Sept. 14, with the following corps of teachers: Principal, Prof. H. M. Enos; intermediate, Miss Anna Cooper; second primary, Miss Flora Nelson; first primary, Miss Alice Cochran.

The new pier light was lighted for the first time on Tuesday night, by Capt. J. J. Bennett, who will have the care of it until the permanent keeper is appointed. The first passenger steamer to use the light was the T. S. Faxton.

An effort has been made to force into circulation the millons of dollars of silver piled up in the treasuries of the United States, but the people refuse to take it in large quantities, and demand paper money on account of its convenience.

The schooner Fleetwing was launched Tuesday afternoon. She has been thoroughly rebuilt, the cabin and decks being entirely new, and no old planks or timbers have been left in the frame which would in any manner weaken the capacity or seaworthiness of the vessel. Practically she is as good as new, and Capt. Bennett naturally takes a pride in showing her to the inquisitive visitor.

Business promises to be lively at the Chicago resort this fall and next spring, before the time for opening. Several new cottages are to be built if no changes are made from present plans. This means work for Charlevoix mechanics.

W. A. Brown will soon commence the erection of a substantial residence on the Fox addition, on the lot adjoining A. D. Cruickshank's. It is safe to presume that the row of residences on this lake front, of which Cruickshank's and Brown's are but the begining, will be among the most substantial and comfortable in town.

Wm. Miller is surveying a tract of land on the lake front, north side, for Amos Fox, which will be sold for residence lots, and probably platted as an addition to the village in the near future. To those able to build strong, substantial, warm houses, these lots will be as attractive as any in the village.

In the window of F. G. Hines & Co. is a blue heron, which was shot on the beach of Pine lake, near the Charlevoix resort, by Wm. Mahon, and mounted by Wm. Straw. It stands nearly four feet high. In the same window is a red-headed woodpecker, mounted on a piece of hemlock bark, which is as natural as life.

A dozen resort girls in a sav-dust dump-cart was one of the attractions on Bridge street yesterday.—Charlevoix Journal. The "resorters," old and young, leave all formality at home, and go out for freedom and pleasure—for health-giving exercise with boats or carts; with ox-teams or what ever else turns up. Don't the Billy?—Eaton Rapids Journal.

As soon as the canvass of this county, for Grant's Memoirs is completed, F. W. Craine will visit Grand Rapids, and afterwards take a postion in a leading dry goods store in Cadillac. During the year and over that he has been in Geo. Miller's clothing house, Frank has made many riends who will be sorry to lose him from our midst. We hope he will find it to his interests to return again next year,—for the season, if not permanently.

Our Summer Guests.

We give below a summary of the number of arrivals at each of the hotels and principal boarding houses which bid for what is known as the resort trade. Add to these the number who have stopped at the smaller boarding houses or in private families where they could have perfect quiet, and the total number will easily reach 5,000 strangers who have visited Charlevoix during the season from June 1 to Sept. 1. A large part of those on the resorts remained a month or longer, some of them the entire season.

Episcopal Church.

Mrs. D. C. Loveday and Mrs. Anna Brown have purchased and will hold in trust for the Episcopal society, lots 2 and 3, block 18 village of Charlevoix, on which they expect soon to commence the erection of a cottage chapel for the services of the society. A large number of people visit Charlevoix every year, who are members of the church in other cities, and who will no doubt gladly assist this society in building the chapel, and a church later on, when needed to accommodate the congregations. Bishop Gillespie has purchased a lot of the Charlevoix resort, and will erect a cottage in the near future, which will insure his presence among the people here a portion of each summer. The society here is composed of vigorous, determined people, and there is no doubt of the early completion of both chapel and church.

"MY TOAST."

BY A. M. HEATHCOTE.

"Give us," they cried, "a toast!"
All were in merry trim;
Each, except me, could boast
One who had smiled on him.
Dora we'd toasted, Kate,
Margery, Etheldred;
Now it was getting late,
It was my turn, they said.

"She that you love the most,
Give us the name!" they cried.
Forced to propose a toast,
"Lillian!" I replied.
"Lillian" sounded well.
Blushing eighteen, no more;
Was I then bound to tell
That she had passed three score?

"Has she blue eyes—your queen—
Hazel or black?" said they,
"Kindly and clear and keen,
And of a tender gray."
Why was I forced to add,
"Spectacles large and blue,
Now that her sight is bad,
Shelters their gaze so true."

"Golden or brown her hair?"
"Soft," I replied, "and light."
This I conceived was fair,
Since it is nearly white.
"What is her voice in tone?"
"Gentle and soft and low."
Was I obliged to own
Sorrows have made it so.

"And do you love her best
Under the whole blue sky?
And for her lightest best
Would you be glad to die?
Would you that for her good,
Sorrows should fall on you?"
"Gladly," I said, "I would."
That at the least was true.

Then as their glasses rang,
Dancing with flashes red,
"Lillian!" out they sang:
"Here's to her health," they said,
"Grey-eyed and blonde—a belle—
Blushing eighteen—no more!"
Lillian sounded well,
Why should I tell them more?

ONE BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.

BY KENRIDGE.

The studio looked unusually dull and dreary, with its dirty, paint-bedaubed easel and the one solitary broken old chair that did duty for artist and visitor alike. But then there were never any visitors, so George Ellison did not trouble himself much on that score. He would even have liked to risk a little mortification for the sake of seeing some one else besides the scrub-woman and janitor enter that dingy room.

It was a square, box-like room—quite unlike any ideal one would form of an artist's studio. Of course there were pictures lying around, and the collection was increasing only too rapidly, for he worked assiduously day after day.

"I've got enough to stock the whole Exposition," he muttered, moodily, as he stood contemplating the last picture on his easel—a landscape which showed some fair traces of genius. "Fact is," he went on, as his careful eye noted its defects, "that tree-painting is not my forte. If I could only sell a few of these and hire a model—the kind of a model I want—why, then I'd get on a good deal faster than I'm doing now."

He was a young fellow of only twenty-tree who had worked his way to Chicago from a country town, where he had gained the rudiments of the art to which he intended to devote his life. The old artist who had instructed him had so dazzled his mind with visions of the wealth and reputation to be made in a large city, that he had come to Chicago with any amount of hope, which, however, was beginning to wane, as the weeks passed by and he still remained unnoticed and unknown.

He began to think that the people of Chicago had no appreciation of the fine arts; that it was true what envious Eastern cities said of them—that they cared more for stocks and pork-packing than for the refinements of civilized life.

One day, feeling more than usually discouraged, he stopped work quite early, and sauntered forth to get what fresh air he could on the crowded thoroughfare on which the window of his studio opened.

As he came down the east stairway to the entrance, two ladies were just emerging from the jewelry store at its side. He did not see them, but they noticed him, and the younger one gazed at him with a curiosity that was not altogether unfriendly.

"I wonder who he is, Nell," she whispered, nudging her companion's elbow. "His clothes certainly didn't come from Ely's. From the fit of them he's evidently made them himself, one would think, for such fearfully baggy pantaloons I never saw, not even on the poorest beggar."

"Don't talk so loudly—he might hear you. It's no business of ours—the fit of his clothes. Is that a Cottage Grove car coming?"

The object of this conversation was still standing in the doorway, looking dreamily upon the moving mass before him.

"And if I could afford to hire a model," the two heard him mutter, "where on earth would I get one? Not in this city. Chicago has some fine-looking women, but I've yet to see one beautiful woman."

Mrs. Colby gave her sister's arm a gentle tap with her parasol.

"There—Ethel, listen, and do not waste your sympathy on him any more. He deserves to wear baggy pantaloons all his life long, just for that miserable tirade against Chicago women."

"Alas, that I am not endowed with sufficient beauty to prove his terrible mistake to him," murmured Ethel, as she signaled the car-driver.

"No one with a pug nose could hope to do that, even if she has got good eyes and a decent sort of a mouth," said her sister cruelly, and the conversation dropped at that point.

But Ethel Harbridge did not forget that pathetic figure standing in the doorway by Matson's; and in a few days he resolved to go past the place again. There was not the slightest chance of seeing him, she kept repeating to herself as she neared her destination, and laughed at the absurd whim which had brought her. But she came across him, nevertheless, standing her opinion of the contrary, and, strange to say, was not at all disappointed at the failure of her prediction.

He was just going up the stairway with a small bundle under one arm, through the end of which she saw a palette and some brushes sticking out.

"Just as I thought, the poor fellow is an artist, and a Chicago one at that. No wonder his clothes are ill-fitting, and his face is pinched—yes, actually pinched."

By this time he had gained the top of one stairway, and was lost to view on the second. Ethel opened her purse and glanced at its contents.

"Just eleven dollars and five cents. Now, the nickel will be enough to carry me home, and if I thought he'd have any real cheap pictures I'd follow him up and invest the rest, for he seems decidedly poor."

She did not pause long. It was the day of the week on which the artists in that building received an admiring but not very generously disposed public—she would avail herself of this opportunity and boldly ascend the stairway after him. She stopped on the second landing and went into several rooms, but rightly conjecturing that his would be one of the smallest and poorest, she soon wended her way to the top.

Sure enough, in a dingy little room, that rented for a mere song, she found him.

He was sitting at his easel, with a piece of clear canvas before him, mechanically fumbling with his brushes, and pouring tiny drops of paint upon the palette he had just brought in. He turned with a start as he heard a light knock on the half-open door.

Could it be——. No; the janitor always gave a knock like that; the man was a negro, with those little pretensions to politeness which all true sons of Africa possess. So he meekly said, "Come in," and did not raise his head until the subtle odor of a delicate perfume floated about him, and he looked up in surprise, and saw a visitor at last!

It was a woman, and a lovely one—his eyes could tell that at their first glance. He got up in a dazed sort of a way and offered her the solitary chair.

"No—many thanks. I did not come to stay, only to see if—if you have anything very small. A bit of print to fill up a corner, you know."—

She glanced around as she spoke, and George's eyes followed hers.

No, there was nothing very small in the room. He inwardly cursed himself for having wasted so many days on large canvases when something small would have filled the bill completely.

She noted his perplexity and hastened to relieve it.

"After seeing that pretty trout brook"—pointing to a fairly good picture in the window—"I think it would be difficult to suit me with anything else, though I am not provided to-day with the sum at which you doubtless value it."

"I have had no sales, and I do not value it at all," he said, a little bitterly. "It can go for whatever one would choose to give."

"Well, you see"—with a confidential air that was very charming—"I am all out of funds to-day, but if you would save it for me, or if you would take a payment now and the rest to-morrow, I should be very grateful, for my heart is set on that picture, and I must have it."

She opened her purse and showed its contents to him. He could not tell whether his eyes were playing him false or not, yet surely those were crisp, new notes, the like of which he had not seen for many a day.

"Just eleven dollars, and the nickel," she continued, laughing. "Now if you would trust me for the rest——"

"The picture is not worth more than ten dollars; you have more than enough for it," he said, with a little smile of joy at this unexpected piece of fortune.

Ethel looked at him pityingly.

"Don't think I am telling you this simply to get the picture for so little," she said, coloring.

"By no means; I believe you. Do not think so badly of me as to—only—only, you see, I have never sold one since I've been here, and this sale is a godsend to me."

His voice trembled for a moment, but he soon controlled it and went on. "And I am so ill-bred as to bore you with my troubles. Pray forgive me. If you will let me know the address I'll have it sent this afternoon."

Ethel hesitated for an instant. She did not like to take the picture at that price, yet he insisted, and she saw that it would pain him to offer more. So she gave him the address and went away, promising to call again.

The next morning, quite early, a gentleman called at the studio, a stout, burly person, with iron-gray whiskers and mustache. He had not the appearance of a connoisseur, but one or two remarks which he made concerning the merits and demerits of the pictures gave the young artist a new veneration for the judgment and taste of Chicago merchants.

"My daughter wants something in this line—yes, that birch grove's just the thing. Good color, and shadows not too deep. What's the price?"

George had the courage to place its true value upon it. The old gentleman eyed him keenly, nodded acquiescence, drew forth his pocketbook and counted out the money, all the while murmuring inwardly:

"Why, that's five times as much as Ethel paid, and the picture's no bigger, either. Talk of artists not being sharp business men; why, they'd stick a Jew any day."

With the firm conviction that he had been "stuck," Mr. Harbridge carried the landscape home, and delivered it to Ethel.

"You know I am only too glad to help the worthy poor," he said; "but I guess we've done our duty in this case, Ethel. We won't buy any more pictures for a while, so don't hunt up any more poor artists."

As Mr. Harbridge could not be prevailed upon to purchase again, Ethel interested some of her friends in Ellison. The consequence was that the dingy studio gradually began to brighten with little comforts and luxuries which he had never been able to afford before. George himself began to have a fresher less pinched appearance, and worked away with greater energy than ever. One day he was bold enough to say:

"I would not care to paint landscapes forever; but a portraint painter, you know, finds it very difficult to get a start; and if one paints ideal heads and faces, one must have a model."

Ethel laughed aloud.

"Do you know," she said, confidentially, "that Mrs. Colby once remarked in a joke that—that if I hadn't anything better to do I might make my living by loaning out my head—you know the hair is the color Titian used to paint."

"If you would only give me one or two sittings," he pleaded, "I should be so grateful. But I should not ask—it would be too much."

"No, it wouldn't," she answered, determinedly; so after a little discussion it was arranged that she should come there the next day and pose for a Madonna, or whatever he chose to make of her.

Mrs Colby protested against the sitting, but to no purpose, and then interviewed Mr. Harbridge on the subject.

"I tol you what, Ellen," said her father, with a wisdom that nineteen years, aquaintance with Ethel had imbued him with, "if we run contrary to her wishes in this direction, sure as fate she'l run against mine from sheer obstinacy by falling in love with and marrying this Ellison."

"And that's the very thing I'm afraid will happen."

"Oh, never you fear about that. It takes opposition to make people marry poor artist, and Ethel hasn't been crossed in this whim yet."

Nothing further was said, but Mrs. Colby's fears were by no means allayed.

The sittings went on, and the Madonna progresed rapidly. At length it was finished. The artist, though far from being egotistical, could see for himself how immensely superior it was to his landscapes.

He was standing beside Ethel at a little distance from it, silently noting its wonderful beauty.

"I could not have painted it so well had it not been for your kindness," he said, at last, in reply to a compliment which she hesitatingly gave. "But my opportunities are over. You are going away, and even if you were not I could not trespass on your patience for sittings for another picture."

"But there are plenty of models to be had," she said, with a gleam of mischief in her eye.

"Not—" he began, and stopped abruptly.

"Not in Chicago," laughed Ethel. "Go on and finish, Mr. Ellison; I can anticipate the rest, for I overheard a remark which you one made about the lack of female beauty in this city."

He flushed hotly; but a glance at her face reassured him. Something in her manner, also, gave him a desperate courage, at which he himself was much amazed when he recollected afterward all the occurrences of that afternoon.

"But you have shown me my mistake," he said, coming a little closer. "There is one beautiful woman here; but only one. What would I not give to possess her?"

"Well, what would you?" she asked, coquettishly, with a smile that showed him what the answer would be to the question, should he ask it. But it never came.

There was only a little cry of joy, some smothered exclamation, the sound which has always been supposed to be peculiar to turtle doves, but which has been infringed and improved upon by the human species, and then the Madonna on the handsome easel looked complacently down and saw her living prototype gathered into the artist's arms.—Chicago Ledger.

Dining in Persia.

Persian dinners are always preceded by pipes (hubble-bubbles), while tea and sweets are handed around. Then servants bring in a long leathern sheet and place it on the ground; the guests take their seats around it, squatting on the ground. A flat loaf of bread is placed before each man. Music plays. The dinner is brought in on trays and placed on the ground on the leathern sheet; the covers are removed; the host says "Bismillah" ("in the name of God"), and in silence all fall to with their fingers.

A Secret of the Sanctum.

The New York Graphic has begun a religious department. The swearing of the religious editor when he can't make out the writing of the clerical correspondents is so horrible that the sporting editor, who occupies the next room, threatens to resign.—Detroit Free Press.

MICHIGAN IN CONGRESS.

Senator Palmer.

Thomas Wetherell Palmer was born in the city of Detroit, January 25, 1830. He remained there until the age of twelve, when he entered Mr. Thompson's Academy at St. Clair. He afterward spent a year and a half at the University at Ann Arbor. His eyesight failing, he, with five others, left for a voyage to Spain in the fall of 1848. He landed at Cadiz, and for two months traveled on foot through the country, visiting the Alhambra at Granada and other points. He then took ship for South America, landing at Rio Janeiro in 1849. After remaining three months in South America, he returned home via New Orleans, spending two months in the Southern States. In 1850 he went to Wisconsin, and spent one year as agent of a transportation company on the river. In 1851 he went into the mercantile business at Appleton, Wis., where he was burned out and financially ruined. Returning to Detroit in 1853, he engaged in the real-estate business. In 1855 he embarked in the lumber trade, which, with the purchase and sale of pine lands, has been his vocation since.

Mr. Palmer was married to Miss Lizzie P., daughter of Charles P. Merrill, in 1855. He has been an active member of the Republican party since the date of its organization. He was nominated by acclamation for State Senator in 1878, and elected by a handsome majority. The Legislature of 1883, after a protracted struggle, elected him United States Senator, to succeed Hon. Thomas W. Ferry.

Representative Burrows.

Hon. Julius C. Burrows, who represents the Fourth Congressional District (which includes Berrien, Cass, Kalamazoo, St. Joseph and Van Buren counties), was born at North East, Erie County, Pa., Jan. 9, 1837. When seventeen years of age he taught school and read law. In 1859 he came to Michigan and taught for a year or more. In 1861 he commenced the practice of law in Kalamazoo. In 1862 he went into the Union army as a Captain, in the Seventeenth Michigan Infantry. In 1866 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Kalamazoo County, and was re-elected in 1868. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the Forty-third Congress. He was renominated but defeated in 1874. Running again in 1878, he was elected Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress. He was re-elected in 1880 to the Forty-seventh Congress, but was again defeated in 1882, by George L. Yaple, whom he in turn defeated in 1884, by a vote of 18,564, to 18,212, for Yaple, Fusionist, and 1,232 for Ahaz N. Alcott, Prohibitionist. Mr. Burrows has been an active Republican campaign orator for many years, and is known far and wide as an eloquent speaker.

Representative O'Donnell.

Hon. James O'Donnell, Representative in Congress from the Third District (embracing the counties of Barry, Branch, Calhoun, Eaton and Jackson), was born in Norwalk, Ct., March 25, 1840. He removed with his parents to Michigan in 1848, and has resided in Jackson since 1849. He did not enjoy early educational advantages, but made up this deficiency by study after working hours. He commenced to learn the printer's trade in 1856, and has followed the profession nearly ever since. At the breaking out of the war he entered as a private in the First Michigan Infantry and served his time, participating in the battle of Bull Run. In 1863—1866 he was elected Recorder of the city of Jackson, as a Republican, though it was a strong Democratic city. In 1872 he was chosen Presidental Elector, and was designated by the State Electoral College to take the vote of Michigan to Washington. He served as Secretary of the State Electoral College. In 1876 he was elected Mayor of Jackson, being the only Republican successful at the election. He was re-elected in 1877. His administration was marked by thoroughness, economy, and prompt meeting of the obligations of the municipality. In 1878 he was appointed by Gov. Croswell as a member of his staff, with the rank of Colonel and Aid-de-Camp. He was elected to the Forty-ninth Congress in November, 1884, receiving 20,438 votes to 19,210 for Henry F. Pennington, Fusionist, and 2,531 for Michael J. Fanning, Prohibitionist. At this election Mr. O'Donnell carried the city of Jackson by nearly 300 plurality, while the Fusion ticket generally had over 300 plurality. The Third District was one of the most hotly contested in the State, but Mr. O'Donnell was successful and led the electoral ticket. Mr. O'Donnell has been the editor and proprietor of the Jackson Daily Citizen since 1864, and is also engaged in the manufacture of paper, and banking.

STATE ITEMS.

—The Michigan Central employs 230 men in all the departments.

—Edwin Prichard, a prominent logging jobber of Lake City, was shot and instantly killed by Thomas Goodrow.

—Romeo young men are preparing to defend their country in the hour of need by organizing a military company.

—Abner Meeker, of Millbrook, the oldest citizen of Mecosta County, is dead, aged 100 years 2 months and 2 days.

—An Ann Arbor printer's devil, Willie Jamieson, aged eleven years, set eight thousand ems of type in eight consecutive hours, one day recently.

—Big Rapids expects to have all the water she wants from a well which, at 100 feet deep, from an inch pipe, flows at the rate of 1,000 gallons per day.

—George L. Alexander has been elected School Examiner for Roscommon County for three years, W. Johnson for two years, and Frank Converse for one year.

—Tourists were so thick at Petoskey, one night recently, that a number of latecomers were compelled to remain in sleeping-cars over night on a side-track.

—Brighton Village has guaranteed $10,000 to the new railroad, and now the farmers of the surrounding country are being urged to make up the remaining $6,000 required as a bonus.

—For the special accommodation of its largely increased Chicago and Detroit travel the Michigan Central will add to its equipment two new and splendid Wagner sleeping cars—the Marmion and the Lochinvar.

—C. I. Brown, of Detroit, traveling agent for a tobacco house, deliberately crawled under a tram on the Flint and Pere Marquette Road at East Saginaw, as the cars were starting, and was crushed to death by the wheels.

—Louis Walter, a white barber, 30 years old, committed suicide at Detroit by shooting himself in the mouth with a revolver. He was a sober, industrious man. He leaves a widow. The cause of the suicide was despondency on account of the death of his 3-months-old child.

—Mrs. Horace Whitney, of Toledo, Ohio, who owns a valuable dairy farm near the Michigan State line, has a valuable herd of blooded cattle, among which a fatal splenic fever has broken out, and thus far twelve have died, Dr. Newton, a local veterinarian, regards the disease as non-contagious.

—A basin, with a capacity of 3,000,000 gallons of water, situated northwest of Ann Arbor, is completed, and work will immediately begin on a large reservoir located on the heights about a mile from the city. Nearly all the streets have been laid with pipe, and everything points to an early use of the water-works.

—The band and quite a number of citizens met the boys who were arrested for disturbing the Salvation Army at Mason as they were returning from Lansing, where they had been on trial for the assault, making the boys feel like heroes. The jury in their case was only seven minutes before deciding that there was no cause for action.

—An express package addressed to Miss Florence E. Beardsley arrived in this city a few days ago. It was found to contain a pocketbook with $14 in it, which the lady whose maiden name it bore, and who is now married and a resident of Saginaw, Mich., lost in 1876. The contents had not been disturbed, even to some of the small coins, which had changed color through mildew. No explanation accompanied the return of the book, which appears to be a pure case of conscience.—Bridgeport (Conn.) News.

—A telegram from Negaunee says: "J. W. Shadt, agent of the Manganese mine, on the outskirts of this city, told his men yesterday morning that their services were no longer required, and that they could go home, as he was about to close down the mine. The miners said that they would go, but would first like to see the color of his money, for they had not been paid for two months. The agent replied that it distressed him greatly to make known the fact that he had no money, and that they must do without for the present." The miners grumbled and threatened, but went home without a riot. The mine was a small one, and only thirty men were employed at the time. It was the intention to take out from 20,000 to 25,000 tons of ore this season, but barely 2,000 tons were got out."

Mary Stuart's Sins and Prayers.

If Mary, who was born in Scotland, wished to live there, she could not enjoy her wish—for out of the 44 years that she lived she scarcely spent a dozen in her native country, to which she much preferred France, the country of her mother, who was a daughter of the Duke of Guise. In her marriage-treaty with Francis II. she made Scotland a province of France, and she allowed herself also to be proclamed heir to the throne of England. This claim, which Elizabeth acknowledged by selecting Mary's son as her successor, was very offensive to the masses of the English people, and was the occasion of many political troubles for Mary. But she was her own worst enemy when she undertook to govern Scotland after the death of her French husband, in 1561—Elizabeth then being firmly established as the English queen. To the long list of works published for and against Mary, a British Jesuit, Rev. Joseph Stevenson, has now added a curious one, "The History of Mary Stuart, by Claude Nau, her Secretary." This title does not very well describy the book, since the part written be Nau, and discovered by this editor in Sir Robert Cotton's collections, makes but 100 pages or so, while the introduction and appendix are more than 500. There are matters of some importance in the fragmentary papers of the French secretary, and others quite as valuable in a series of reports from Catholic priests found among the archives in the Vatican. The editor is bound, as a good Catholic, to defend the Catholic Mary as well as he can against the heretic Elizabeth—and he takes the ground that she had nothing to do with the murder of Darnley, although Bothwell, whom she so disgracefully married, was the murderer. Nau's account, by hypotheses, was derived from Mary herself, and she discoursed with her secretary in the English castle, where she was imprisoned; if so, we have Mary's own version of some events in her strange career. Nau says that the Scotch lords, particularly Moray, Morton and Maitland of Lethington, "after having used Bothwell to rid themselves of the King (Darnley), designed to make him their instrument to ruin the Queen. Their plan was to persuade her to marry the Earl of Bothwell, so that they might charge her with being in the plot against her late husband, and a consenting party to his death."

This theory of Darnley's murder is a very extreme one, and carries with it, if accepted, an entire rejection of the casket letters from Mary to Bothwell, which Buchanan published in 1571, since these letters show great love from Mary to Bothwell before Darnley's murder. One strange circumstance is reported by Nau on the authority of Mary, that she was seriously ill at Lochleven in July, 1567, "the result of miscarriage of twins, her issue by Bothwell," to whom she had only been married on May 15, of that year, while Darnley had been killed by Bothwell February 9. This fact, if it be one, strengthens the opinion that Mary was guilty with Bothwell before Darnley's death, as the casket letters imply. Father Stevenson does not dwell much on these letters, but evidently believes them forgeries, as Mr. Meline treats them in his spirited vindication of Mary against Froude. But after all, Mary is the worst of all witnesses against herself—for her whole connection with Bothwell, apart from the letters, is inconsistent with any theory of her innocence, unless she were a fool—of which, except in love matters, no one accuses her. She was one of the most acute and subtle of women, and must be presumed to have known very well what she was doing. It is impossible equally to believe Mary innocent and not to compassionate her—a creature of so many "graces and virtues," as she described herself in one of her prayers during her extreme illness at Jedburgh before the death of Darnley. This prayer is attached to a will made by her—or rather a letter of dying request—at the end of which is the long prayer. Father Stevenson prints it from the original at Edinburgh, where it was first printed by Mr. Small, the University librarian, in 1881. Mary says therein:

O my God, of Thy infinite goodness Thou hast appointed me (albeit I be unworthy) to rule and govern the people, which has been committed to my charge, and to be unto them a lantern and light of good life, and for this purpose hast endued me with divers graces and virtues, the which, nevertheless, I have not used as my duty required. O my most merciful Creator, I confess that I have not used Thy gifts to the advancement of Thy glory and honor, and good example of life to my people that has been committed under my charge, as I ought to have done, but rather I have offended Thy majesty, not using my eyes as my duty required, for the which cause presently Thou most worthily hast taken from me the power of them.

(This last word was said because Mary was then suffering from temporary blindness.) It was not until many years afterward—more than twenty—that she suffered death by the executioner, as did her grandson, Charles I., sixty-two years after her.

The Real Tragedy of It.

A Campaign Secret Given Away.

In the campaign of 1881 the two candidates for Governor in a "pivotal" Western State arranged for a series of joint discussions. Both men were popular, both of fine appearance, and were so well matched in mental force and as orators that the contest between them promised to be a magnificent one. For several weeks the scales balanced evenly.

But one day the brilliant Republican candidate came up ailing. He seemed overcome, and spoke laboredly. The next day he was even less effective. Later he was compelled to ask his opponent for a postponement of certain appointments, which was granted. Before the campaign ended he had abandoned the field altogether.

Meantime the Democratic candidate continued his canvass, seeming to grow stronger, cheerier, and more effective with each succeeding week. He was elected. One evening in December while entertaining several gentlemen he said:

"I will tell you a campaign secret—which gave me the election. With the opening of my campaign I began caring for my liver. I knew that a disordered or torpid liver meant dullness and possible sickness. I took something every day. When my opponent began failing I knew his trouble to be his liver and felt like prescribing for him, but feared if I did so he might beat me! I grew stronger as the campaign progressed, often making two speeches a day. Even my voice, to my surprise, did not fail me once. All because Warner's safe cure kept me in A 1 trim." Ex-Gov. Jacob, of Kentucky, also made a campaign tour under precisely similar circumstances, and says he kept up under the exhausting strain by use of the same means.—Rochester Union.

Reminiscences of Lincoln.

A correspondent in North Carolina says: "I heard Mr. Lincoln's last two speeches. One, extemporaneous, on Monday evening, April 10, from the historic middle front window in the second story of the White House. He had just returned from City Point, and the people thronging around the White House would have a speech. For a good while he did not appear, and seemed to be reluctant to speak without a manuscript, lest at that critical juncture some injurious impression should be made by an accidental word or sentence.

"However, the crowd persisted to call till he appeared. It was my first sight of the man. He appeared somewhat younger and more off-hand and vigorous than I should have expected. His bright, knowing, somewhat humorous look reminded me of a well practiced country physician who had read men through till he understood them well. There was the humorous kindness of a good-natured doctor who had seen his patients through a most awful siege of sickness, till they were now fairly and fully convalescent, and who was disposed to let the past, whatever it had cost him or them, go by for the time, and have a little cheerful congratulation. His gestures and expression of countenance had something of the harmless satisfaction of a young politician at a ratification meeting after his first election to the Legislature. He was happy, and glad to see others happy, and willing to accept the congratulation of his friends for his own part in the general victory.

"His last speech, on Wednesday, April 12, 1865, was read from separate sheets, by a flaring light, as he stood at the same window. He wore glasses, and as the successive pages were read passed them to a friend who stood near. It was perhaps eight o'clock in the evening; Mrs. Lincoln and several lady friends stood at a side window. There was some talking and diversion during the reading. The reading was in a reading tone, but business-like and good, and the paper not long. It was intended to show the disposition of the administration toward the seceded States, and forshadow the principles proposed for reconstruction. His manner was unpretentious but dignified, manly, kindly, and vigorous."

The same friendly observer sends other Lincolniana:

"'That rent,' said a soldier in the hospital at City Point, pointing up to the torn tissue-paper—an embellishment which, I believe, the ladies of the Christian Commission had fixed on the ceiling above—'that was torn by Mr. Lincoln's hat as he passed through here on his way from Richmond, and shook hands with every man, loyal or rebel, in the whole hospital.' He stood, like Saul, above the people from the shoulders upward, and his hat made havoc with decorations overhead. Stepping outside, and seeing an ax by a log, his old rail-splitter spirit came over him. In a moment his long arms were putting home that ax toward the heart of the fallen tree. The boys in blue gathered those chips to take home as mementos of the backwoodsman who became President and the emancipator of a race."

An old soldier at the Soldiers' Home near Washington said, "He used to walk all about in these paths; he was very kind and familiar with us all."

To a poor woman who desired his signature to a paper, he said, "My name will do you no more good than pigs' tracks in the mud."

A soldier stopped him in the road, against the Columbia Hospital, and presented some letters, desiring a furlong. He obtained it.—Harper's Magazine.

"One Nail Drives Out Another," is a French saying that finds exemplification in the way one disease will substitute itself for another and graver one, in very many cases. Liver disease, for instance, will soon induce blood disorders, throat ailments, skin affections and eventually, because of impoverished blood, consumption itself, unless, indeed, it be treated in its incipiency and early progress by Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which acts as a specific in these ailments, accomplishing a rapid cure by its powerful alterative action upon the great organs of the body.

The Famous Notre Dame.

On the 30th of last January, the Sisters of the most noted Catholic ladies' seminary in the United States, the famous Notre Dame, at Govanstown, near Baltimore, Md., made public a card, certifying to the beneficial results attending the use of Red Star Cough Cure in that institution. They state that they found it efficacious alike for relieving coughs, oppressions on the chest, and irritation of the throat. Officials of the Boards of Health of Brooklyn, Baltimore, and other cities have likewise publicly proclaimed the virtues of this new discovery, which is entirely free from opiates, poisons, and other objections.

Full of Peril

Are those disorders which, beginning with an apparently trival inactivity of the kidneys or bladder, terminate in Bright's disease, diabetes and cystitis. The first two not only interrupt the functions of the tend organs, but destroy their structure with as much certainty as tubercular consumption does that of the lungs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an excellent diuretic, promoting the activity of these organs without over exciting them, thus averting the deadly maladies in which their inaction is so prone to culminate. The removal from the blood of impurities which the kidneys should, but do not, when inactive, secrete, is another beneficent effect of this incomparable medicated stimulant and depurent. The Bitters is, in all cases, too, a fine restorative of vigor and aid to digestion, remedies malarial disease, and banishes liver complaint and constipation.

Kerosene in Cold Weather.

An oil inspector offers this explanation of why kerosene oil lamps do not give as good light in cold weather as at other times: "Wisconsin test prime light oils will thicken with the cold at temperatures varying from zero to 20 degrees above. Freezing separates the particles of paraffine from the remainder of the oil. They are attracted by the wick and fill the pores, destroying its capillary power and increasing its tendency to incrust and char in burning. The best kerosene oils for burning in cold weather are water white—colorless—oils of light gravity."—Scientific Exchange.

WE may always learn and know more, if we choose, by working on; but the pleasure is, I think, to humble people, to know that the journey is endless, the treasure inexhaustible, in watching the cloud still march before them with its summitless pillar, and being sure that to the end of time and to the length of eternity the mysteries of its infinity will still open farther and farther, their dimness being the sign and necessary adjunct of their inexhaustibleness.—Ruskin.

We have taken pains to show the sample to a large number of callers, who pronounce it to be the finest and best sample of grain they have seen in a number of years.

Eastport.

We wish to introduce ourselves in the JOURNAL by giving a brief description of our village and surroundings.

Eastport is situated at the head of Torch Lake, (one of the most beautiful inland lakes on the globe,) 18 miles from Charlevoix. and the same from Elk Rapids. We have water communications by the way of Torch Lake and also by Grand Traverse Bay, the nearest dock being 2½ miles distant. We have a daily mail north and south, and semi-weekly mail east on Wednesday and Saturday. Our village consists of three general stores, a hardware and a drug store; one millinery store and another building now being erected by Mrs. Pate to be used for the same purpose. We have a grist mill, saw mill, hoop factory, three blacksmith shops, and one hotel, the Gidley House. We have a G. A. R. post and Congregational church. Some of the finest farms in Antrim county can be found in our vicinity.

Mrs. J. S. Campbell has gone to Kingsley, Grand Traverse county, to visit friends.

We hear the canal question discussed on our streets again and the prospects look fair for an opening from Torch lake to Traverse Bay.

Farmers are complaining considerable about wet weather, but they should drive away that frown from their faces as they have been bountifully supplied with good crops and a fair yield of fruit.

Whoever sees, 'neath winter's field of snow,
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

Whoever says, "To-morrow," "The Unknown,"
"The Future," trusts the power alone
He dares disown.

The heart that looks on when the eyelids close,
And dares to live when life has only woes,
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief;
And day by day, and night, unconsciously,
The heart lives by the faith the lips deny—
God knoweth why.

Edward Bulwer Lytton.

Home and Intemperance.

Out from a dark ravine in a certain county in northern Pennsylvania there issues a stream which, flowing eastward, empties into a certain river. I am told that years ago upon the north side of this stream rattlesnakes could be met with in considerable numbers, while on the south side of the stream none could be found. The stream is not impassable because of its width, but on the other hand it is quite narrow and in time past as now in many places, uprooted trees, driftwood and trash of various sorts formed temporary bridges, making the question of transit from one side to the other a matter not in the least difficult.

The supposed reason why rattlesnakes could not be met with on the south side of stream is this: That there grew in great quantities a plant or shrub (name unknown to me) the presence and perfume of which were displeasing, if not destructive to his snakeship and therefore because of the existence of this botanical St. Patrick on the south side of the stream he made the north side his continual and permanent habitat.

I have never given this legend the test of rigid examination. The flavor of it has been so peculiarly interesting that it seemed to me to be in a sense unkind, impracticable and unpoetic to destroy it in the crucible of scientific investigation. In its present untouched, legendary nature it answers a purpose, in that it reminds me of a story, somewhat similar in character, that I read of or heard about many years ago.

Upon a beautiful day in the leafy month of June a traveler on horseback was slowly wending his way along an unfrequented bridle path through a defile of the mountains. The settlement was already far to the rear and the sounds of civilization were exchanged for the singing of wild birds, the chattering of the squirrels, the drumming of the pheasants and the thousands of voices peculiar to the wakeful forests. Suddenly his attention was arrested by a sound, peculiar even amid these many peculiar. It issued from up the mountain side and seemed to him to be the voice of birds, indicating fear and distress. Resolved to investigate this matter, he tied his horse to the limb of a tree and made his way through the underbrush as best he could in the direction indicated. Without any special difficulty he found the object of his search. Upon a small tree about four fifths the distance between root and topmost branch he saw a nest—a bird's nest. Above and around this nest fluttered and screamed the parent birds, full of distress and fear. Below the nest winding around the trunk of the tree, he saw a huge black snake slowly but surely approaching the nest. Unable to render assistance in this unequal conflict, he proposed to be a deeply interested observer and impatiently to await the result. Presently one of the birds flew away a little distance and soon returned carrying in its beak a green leaf which it carefully laid upon the nest. this act was immediately imitated by its mate. Then both birds flew rapidly thither and back again, bringing the green leaves and covering the nest carefully and completely so the birdlings underneath ceased their chirpings and went to sleep. In the meantime the serpent adding coil to coil around the trunk of tree, shortened the distance between himself and prey until at length, proudly arching his glistening neck over the limb upon which the nest was built, he thrust forward his forked tongue to do its work of death; when lo! there is a magic power in the leaves, a shudder is observable throughout his entire length, his coils, his body sways, he drops from branch to branch down upon the rocky ground, then glides away reluctantly to his hated den.

The nest is home! The serpent is intemperance! The parent birds are correct public sentiment and legal power! That covering of leaves, prohibition!—H. C. Moyer.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 125

The Republican Party and the South.

From the Detroit Free Press.

John Sherman's declaration at Mount Gilead that "the republican party was certainly liberal and just to the rebels lately in arms against the country," has called out a response from the Louisville Courier Journal. The truthfulness and fairness of the answer is a sufficient excuse for entering into a controversy with Sherman over dead issues. Premising that Sherman's statement is "not merely the appeal of a demagogue to sectional prejudice but a perversion of history," the Journal says:

The republican party, as a party, was not "liberal and just" to the south. The terms made by General Grant were generous to the confederate soldiers, and Grant had to force their acceptance by the government. Then Andrew Johnson had to strain the full power of the executive to keep the republican party in congress from putting the south practically in irons, from establishing a military despotism over all the people of the south, little and big, white and black, and from such an overthrow of the constitution as would, if they had succeeded, have completely revolutionized our democratic system. Even as it was the republican leaders carried over Johnson's head a measure of reconstruction, as they called it, which made the southern states, while it lasted, a hell on earth. It broke down of its own infamy and wickedness, no thanks to those who created it for their own selfish and malign purposes. It broke down, and was succeeded by a return of methods more consistent with the instincts and traditions of our people, because the good sense of the north was appalled by the progress of radicalism, and the good feeling of the north shrank from inflicting upon great masses of American born and English-speaking men and women such penalties as the republican party had imposed and was trying to perpetuate. Ever since the mad career of the radical leaders was checked, the condition of affairs at the south has been continuously mending, and, all things considered, the harmonious adaptation of the two races to the new conditions is one of the wonders of the world, and will challenge the admiration of future generations.

The present effort to stir up strife upon the old lines is malevolent and short-sighted. It is based upon the falsehood that the people of the south love violence for its own sake, and fraud for its own sake, and can not be trusted to administer their domestic affairs either wisely or fairly. The reverse is true. The people of Mississippi are as much concerned for good government as the people of Ohio. They love law and order as well. At the last election more outrage was perpetrated in the single city of Cincinnati than in all of the states of the south combined. All parties, as parties, are bad enough where they have the chance to take advantages, and not worse south than north. These things, left to themselves, are likely to balance themselves, and our real safety lies in leaving them to the honor and virtue of the several states of the union, relying upon the people directly interested to righten wrongs that happen, sure that, in the long run, each community will set its house in order.

A Sectional Appeal.

Mr. John Sherman has opened the republican campaign in Ohio with a carefully prepared speech. As the Evening Post, which is a supporter of President Cleveland's administration, advocates the defeat of Gov. Hoadly and the democratic party in the approaching Ohio election, and return of Mr. John Sherman for another six years to the United States senate, the utterances of that leader on national questions become of interest and importance.

Mr. Sherman plunges headlong in to the mire of sectional hate. He raves against the return to "high office" of those who "waged war against the Union and were the cause of the loss of half a million of lives and thousands of millions of treasure." He heaps vituperation upon the "solid south," in which, he says, "the negro is deprived of all his political rights by open violence or by frauds as mean as any that have been committed by penitentiary convicts, and as openly and boldly done as highway robbery." He declares it to be the hope of "the men who led in the civil war" and who are now "the chief officers of the government" to "reverse all the results of the war." And he professes to regard it as "vital and necessary to appeal to the northern states to unite again against this evil, not so open and arrogant as slavery, but more dangerous and equally unjust."

The people of New York have recently draped their city in mourning to mark their grief at the death of Gen. Grant. Perhaps no action of his life endeared him more closely to their hearts than did the noble words his hand traced in his last hours, when speech had failed him, congratulating the country on the restoration of fraternal feelings between the sections and on the renewed devotion of the south to the Union.

In the letter which he kept from his family until his death, knowing that what would be a solace to them after the final blow had fallen would cause them pain while he still lived, the dying hero wrote: "As I have stated, I am thankful for the providential extension of my time to enable me to continue my work. I am further thankful, and in a much greater degree thankful, because it has enabled me to see for myself the happy harmony which so suddenly sprung up between those engaged but a few short years ago in deadly conflict."

What a contrast between these nobly, patriotic words and the malignant ravings of the partisan who for political purposes would foster suspicion, jealousy and hatred between the citizens of the northern and southern states! How can the people of New York view this attempt of senator Sherman to destroy the fraternal bonds cemented at the grave of Gen. Grant? How can we ever hope for a restored, peaceful and powerful Union if a legacy of sectional hate is to be handed down to our children's children?—N. Y. World.

Rotten Rhode Island Speaketh.

Some time ago Secretary Manning issued a circular addressed to manufacturers and business men asking them to convey to the department their ideas concerning tariff revision. Nearly every intelligent business man in the country, whether free trader or protectionists, believes that a tariff levied during war time for war purposes, and notoriously full of monopoly privileges, injustices, and contradictions, should be revised; it is as to the degree of that revision about which there is a difference of opinion. But in Rhode Island, a contemptable little satrapy ruled by a few mill lords and falsely pretending to be a free state like the other thirty-seven, there is said to be a unanimous sentiment to the effect that the tariff is a sacred institution which must not be touched at all.

In response to Mr. Manning's circular more than one thousand members of the ruling class met at Providence the other day, and, after viewing with alarm any proposition to amend the tariff laws, declared by resolution that an attempt in that direction would be disastrous to business and that they therefore protested against the reopening of the question by the present congress. The men who subscribed to this ridiculous manifesto are the money barons who have made of Rhode Island the only state in the Union in which a man is not a citizen. It is the protectionists' paradise. Wealth has all the laws in its favor. It is protected by state and national enactments at the expense of labor. It has a monopoly of the field, and it perpetuates its grip on the producer and consumer who does not happen to belong to the guild by disfranchising him unless he can show that he is worth a certain amount of money. Only about one half or the male residents of Rhode Island over twenty-one years of age are voters. The ruling class is the moneyed class, and all others are condemned by circumstances over which they can rarely hope to gain any control to life-long servitude and penury.

The solemn announcements by these purse-proud robbers and half-baked aristocrats, that a decent revision of the tariff for the purpose of eliminating some of the unjust features of that iniquitous system will be disastrous to business, is one of the coolest exhibitions of cheek that this generation has witnessed since Boss Tweed's day. No legitimate business would suffer if every protective feature of the tariff should be repealed at once, and the Rhode Island leeches know it. While maintaining their own sorrowful communities of semi-pauper laborers they have for twenty-five years grown rich by the taxation of western consumers. They are the lazzaroni of America. Grinding their unhappy employes down by a mereiless tyranny unknown elsewhere on this continent, and paying them starvation wages, they are all the time, through the workings of the tariff, levying toll on the rest of the people. When Rhode Island is unanimously in favor of any policy it is time for other states to be unanimously opposed to it.—Chicago Herald.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A sensation was caused in Wilkesbarre, Pa., by a report that Preller, the supposed victim of the St. Louis murder by Maxwell had been seen there.

Ten thousand ex-soldiers and sailors of New York State have joined the G. A. R. since the death of General Grant. The membership of the order in the Empire State is now about 50,000.

The recent explosion of the steamer S. M. Felton at Philadelphia has been traced to the agency of a man named Adriance Spears, who carried a line of accident insurance which would have yielded him $150 per week if he had been seriously injured. Spears, however, was killed, and the payment of his life policies, which call for $35,000, will be resisted. The deceased is said to have bled the accident insurance companies handsomely during the last fifteen years.

Victimized depositors in the defunct German Savings Bank at Erie, Pa., have forced the stockholders of that institution to sign a paper acknowledging their legal liability and agreeing to make a settlement.

A New York druggist who carelessly substituted morphine for quinine in filling a prescription, causing the death of two young ladies, has disappeared.

The statue of Daniel Webster, presented to the State of New Hampshire by the Hon. P. B. Cheney, will be dedicated at Concord June 17, 1886.

By an explosion of natural gas in a bakery at Pittsburgh, five persons were terribly burned, two of them fatally. The proprietors had recently introduced the natural gas into their ovens.

Tom Davis, a well known sporting character, was shot and killed in his dingy office at New York by a Texan who gives his name as James T. Holland, who asserts that he was justified in killing Davis.

The total exports of produce from New York during the week were valued at $6,147,141.

Trains on the New York elevated roads are to be run by electricity. A trial trip has been made on the Ninth avenue line with an electric motor, the experiment proving a complete success.

A mass of loose rock fell from the shaft of a mine near Wilkesbarre, Pa., and, striking a cage filled with workmen, killed four of them and wounded six others.

WESTERN.

ARAPAHOE Indians are committing depredations on the cattle ranges in the Big Horn Basin and elsewhere in that section.

Twelve thousand people witnessed the sparring mates between Sullivan and McCaffrey at Chester Park, Cincinnati. Six rounds were fought. The referee gave the fight to Sullivan on the claim of a foul. Sullivan offers to fight McCaffrey to the finish, with or without gloves, within three weeks, and bet $5,000 to $3,000 that he wins.

The Current Publishing Company, of Chicago, has made an assignment. The periodical will be continued without interruption.

There were 238 deaths in Chicago last week, against 270 for the corresponding week of last year.

Dakota's population, according to the census just taken, is 416,000.

The cattlemen are evacuating Indian Territory pursuant to the President's order. The forty days' limit expired Sept. 1.

The Coroner's jury which has been investigating the facts in connection with the death of ex-Mayor Walkup at Emporia, Kan., returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased was poisoned with arsenic by his wife.

As the result of an unhappy marriage, W. E. Booth attempted to kill his mother-in-law and his wife's half-sister at Texas Hollow, Ohio, but only wounded the latter woman slightly. After running a short distance in the direction of his father's house, Booth stopped and blew out his own brains.

The body of Daniel Church, a farmer of Mohawk Valley, Lane County, Oregon, was found in the road near his house, with a bullet-hole in his back. Shortly after his wife was found back of the house, with her face mashed in, as if by a heavy club or a blunt instrument. The hat of Andrew Boggs, a neighbor, was found near Mrs. Church, and a party, on going to Boggs' ranch, found him hanging to the rafters of the barn, having committed suicide. He had probably murdered Mr. and Mrs. Church, though no motive for the crime can be attributed.

More than 100,000 cattle have been driven out of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservations since the President issued his proclamation. The number remaining is estimated at from 60,000 to 75,000. It is believed that the reservations will be entirely cleared of foreign stock within a few weeks.

Chinese miners who had been imported by the Union Pacific Railway Company were driven from the pits at Rock Springs, Wyoming, by a force of armed white men, the Chinese fleeing to the hills for safety. Seven of the fugitives were shot dead by the mob, and many wounded. The Chinese quarters were then set on fire, thirty-nine houses being destroyed, and several old and helpless Mongolians, it is believed, perished in the flames.

Four masked men entered the passenger-car of a Chicago and Alton train at Blue Springs, Mo., and with drawn revolvers secured from the occupants small amounts. They then ordered the train stopped, and decamped. Blue Springs is near Glendale and Blue Cut, the scene of former robberies by the James gang.

A ferry-boat capsized in the Fox River at Oshkosh, Wis., and six of the eleven occupants were drowned. Four of the victims were young women employed in a match factory at Oshkosh.

A call for a Prohibitionist political meeting in a Methodist Church at Youngstown, Ohio, has stirred up the members, who protest against the use of the structure for political purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A special from Upper Saranac Lake, New York, says:

President Cleveland's party has broken camp and returned to the Prospect House, much to the delight of the few remaining summer boarders. The President is looking remarkably well. He is much tanned by exposure to sun and wind during his camp life. Every day, with a guide, he goes out on the lake fishing, and returns at night with a big catch of bass and trout. During the long evenings the President plays whist with Dr. Ward and any other two of the guests of the hotel who happen to be players. This gives an idea of the every-day life of Mr. Cleveland in the mountains, and when he gets back to Washington, which will probably be not before the middle of September, he will be well prepared for the work that awaits him. All rumors of his ill health are laughed at by the President and stormed at by Dr. Ward, and his appearance justifies all that. Variety is lent to the hotel life by the visitors who come in from the woods and shake hands with the President. Sportsmen wonder at his declaration that he would not give a cent to shoot all the deer in the Adirondacks, and fishermen admire him because he says that he came to fish and carries out the programme so thoroughly. Many of the latter who know how much a pocket-flask can do to make things pleasant when rain falls or fish will not bite will want to know whether the President sticks to the good old habit of carrying a swallow with him. All that could be learned was from a guide. He said that once, in crossing a "carry," the President called out, "Doc, are you sure you've got the bottle?" and smiled and looked happier when the Doctor winked. That guide was snowy-haired, and too old to be untruthful.

The recent anti-Chinese riot at Rock Springs, Wyoming Territory, was a much more serious affair than at first reported. Later advices from there report that "the bodies of fifteen Chinamen have been discovered, and as many more are supposed to be concealed beneath the ruins of their burned cabins. The surviving Chinamen, many of whom were wounded, are yet in the hills, without food and afraid to venture out. Fifty houses belonging to the railroad company and as many more owned by Chinamen were destroyed. Gov. Warren has arrived at Rock Springs, and Gen. Howard has been appealed to for military assistance." An Omaha dispatch gives some additional particulars of the riot:

The mining camp was made up of two elements, whites and Chinese, the first numbering some 400 men and the latter about 500. The two elements have lived apart, and beating a coolly for fun has been the favorite sport of every sprecing miner. This volcanic condition of affairs needed but little encouragement to reach an eruptive pitch, and urged perhaps by the arrival of some fifty new coolies the day previous, the whites determined to rout the whole nest. Shotguns and pistols were obtained, and late in the afternoon a preconcerted assault was made on the Chinese quarters. The men ran into the streets, firing right and left, but in the air, and shouting commands to fly as the thoroughly frightened and defenseless Mongolians. The torch was applied to every house, and in a few minutes the whole of Chinatown was in flames. The inhabitants fled for the hills, pursued by the miners, who discharged their firearms and raised terrorizing yells at the heels of the fugitives. The whites then retreated to the town, picketed their lines, and bivouacked amid the ashes of the ruined town. Every Chinaman—as stated, 500 in number—had been driven out of town.

MADE A MISTAKE.

Tom Davis, the Notorious "Boodle" Man, Plays a Texan for a Sucker,

And, as a Very Natural Consequence, Receives a Bullet Through His Heart.

[New York special.]

Thomas Davis, a notorious sporting-man and swindler, was killed to-day in his trick establishment on the third floor of No. 113 Reade street, this city, by James T. Holland, a Texan, who had paid him $500 for what he supposed was $10,000 in counterfeit money, and who discovered at the moment the transaction was consummated that he was cheated. As a swindler he is known in the rogues' vernacular as a "boodle" man, a "faker," a "sawdust" operator, and a first-class "skin." His transaction with Holland was in the "boodle" line, in which the victim believes that he has received genuine or counterfeit money, and discovers too late that bundles of paper, lead pipe wrapped up so as to resemble rolls of coin, or bricks carefully packed in paper, have been substituted. Davis had about half a dozen offices in this city fitted up in various ways for swindling the unwary. James T. Holland is a real-estate dealer in Abilene, Taylor County, Tex. One of Davis' circulars or advertisements of counterfeit money had come to the notice of Holland, and he had come to New York with John T. Hill, or John P. Johnson, City Marshal of Colorado, Mitchell County, Tex. Each is tall, spare, keen-eyed, and active.

The two men from Texas came here last Wednesday and immediately opened negotiations with Davis. It was finally agreed that he should sell $10,000 worth of "green goods" to Holland for $500. On a letter from one of them Davis met them at the Merchants' Hotel at noon yesterday, and from there Holland went to Davis' room. Everything was ready, Davis said, and Holland said he had his "end" of the transaction—meaning the money to pay for the expected counterfeits—in order. Davis had provided $10,000 in genuine money to show. His confederate in the plot was his brother Theodore, who glued his eye to a knot-hole in the partition and listened eagerly to what was said. Holland counted out his money which Tom pocketed and then Tom produced the supposed counterfeits, in reality the genuine money, and the bills were counted into a black satchel which was on the desk near the aperture into the confederate's room. When the count had been made the satchel was closed, and Davis attempted to distract the Texan's attention. Theodore, through the aperture, took the genuine money from the satchel and had just pushed it, with three bundles of blank paper substituted for the bills, through the dummy back, when Holland, despite Davis' efforts, saw it move, and instantly became suspicious. Opening the satchel, he detected the substitution, drew a revolver on Davis, and demanded his money.

Tom exclaimed: "You wouldn't shoot me? I am unarmed," and lifted the skirts of his coat to show that he had no pistol.

Holland at once fired, the bullet striking Davis in the left shoulder and passing downward and through the body. Davis fell to the floor and did not speak or move afterward. Theodore immediately sprang to the door with the $10,000 in his possession, and went down stairs to put the money in a place of safety, which he would not afterward reveal. As he went along the corridor Holland fired two more shots—one went through the desk and dummy partition, and the other could not be traced. Holland went down stairs into the street, and, as he started to walk away, Theodore, who was waiting for him, pointed him out to a policeman, and said: "Arrest him. He has just shot a man."

Holland appeared cool and unconcerned, and admitted that he had shot Davis because the dead man and Theodore had tried to rob him. Holland was taken back to Davis' room by the policemen and subsequently was locked up in the police station. Theodore was detained as a witness. Hill, or Johnston, was arrested at the Merchants' Hotel. About $1,500 in bills was found on his person. He was locked up to await developments.

Cattlemen Removing Their Herds from Indian Territory---The Fences Must Come Down.

[Washington special.]

All the official information received at Washington indicates that the cattlemen have done all in their power to get out of the Indian Territory during the forty days ending Sept. 1. Unofficial advices intimate that the larger lease-holders have not pursued this course, but have, on the contrary, prepared to stubbornly resist the enforcement of the President's proclamation. The latter statements are not credited. It is thought at the Interior and War Departments that the cattlemen are fully aware of the determination and ability of the Government to execute its orders. Whatever contest may be made in the courts they say will have to follow the evacuation. No legal proceedings will stay the troops if called upon to eject the herds and their attendants. Col. Lee has not informed the War Department of any necessity for military interference; but Gen. Miles has fully prepared to render whatever aid is required.

The fence question cannot reach so prompt a solution. The cases of obstructions are now being individually investigated and reported upon and the offenders notified. The next step will probably be an Executive order directing the military authorities to act under the direction of the Interior Department in removing whatever fences the latter department may designate.

It is not the intention of the Secretary of the Interior to issue any general order in regard to the removal of fences from the public lands, but it has been determined to deal with cases of violation of the law specifically. It is believed better results will be thus obtained than from the general order, which would be looked upon as a proclamation binding upon no one in particular. The special agents of the Land Office are under instructions to report to the department all cases of illegal fencing, and instructions looking to the removal of the fences are promptly furnished for their guidance in each case. Where an agent is able to effect the removal he is directed to do so, and when necessary the United States Marshals can be called upon through the Attorney General.

LEAVES BAD COMPANY.

A Prominent Ohio Republican Deserts His Party and Joins the Democratic Ranks,

Because the Republican Party Leaders Are Trying to Maintain a Barrier of Sectional Hate.

[Toledo (Ohio) special to Detroit Free Press.]

The political sensation here is the publication of an authorized interview with Capt. P. H. Dowling, in which he renounces allegiance to the Republican party and anchors himself safely in the Democratic ranks. Capt. Dowling has always been one of the leading Republicans of the State, was Postmaster under Grant, revenue agent under Hayes, again Postmaster under Arthur, and one of the leaders of the larger faction of the Republican party in the State. Last June a Post reporter interviewed the Captain just after the Republican State Convention, with this result. He said:

"The platform is made up of a bundle of inconsistencies. The attempt to force a false issue by raising the cry that the rebels have taken charge of the administration of the affairs of the Government exhibits a degree of demagogism unparalleled in the history of the nation."

To-day he was shown this paragraph by a Blade reporter and asked if it was correct. After reading it he said:

"Yes, that is substantially correct."

"The platform of the Republican party then is not in harmony with your views?"

"No, it is not."

"Will you vote for the Republican candidate on the State ticket?"

"No; I decided at that time not to do so, because such action would be an indorsement of sentiments not in harmony with my conviction of duty, and subsequent events have only strengthened me in the belief that it is not only unwise, but unjust and unpatriotic, to co-operate with a party whose acknowledged leaders are attempting to carry an election by appealing to the passions and prejudices of people residing in one locality with a view to create bitterness and hostility against those in another locality in the same country. The brave and patriotic men who were instrumental in organizing the Republican party, and who were the exponents of the principles of that party and controlled its actions during the days of its purity and usefulness, do not now and never did share in this feeling, but the men who are now assuming the leadership of that once honored and useful party announce to all who march under its banner that the first test of a good Republican is to assist in building up a barrier of sectional hate between the States of the North and those of the South. The Republican party in Ohio this year is seeking success at the polls upon the assumption that more than one-half of all our American citizens are enemies of the Government awaiting a favorable opportunity to overthrow it. The cry that Democrats, because they are Democrats, are dangerous citizens, should be rebuked by all patriotic citizens. The cry raised by the Republican leaders in the Springfield Convention that the administration of the affairs of the Government has fallen into the hands of its enemies demonstrates that the leaders and managers of that convention, in their zeal to promote party interests, disregarded every rule of rectitude and honor."

"I do not understand your reference."

"Well, to make myself clear, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding, I will say that the Republican party of Ohio, for some years past, has been slowly drifting into the hands of men who have been using it to advance their own ends. Gen. Grant expressed my meaning when he said that the men who did not get enough of fighting during the war are doing the fighting now. Why, just look for a moment at the course of some of those men. The very fellows who were undermining General Grant, when he was doing all in his power to carry out the reconstruction policy and secure a lasting settlement of affairs, are the men who have been the most rampant for a fight whenever they saw their own personal advancement depended upon it. But these are not the days when men are driven like cattle or led around with hooks in their noses, and the intelligent voters of Ohio are not going to be deceived into believing that another rebellion is brewing when the very air is vocal with a jubilee of peace and good-will."

"But, Captain, is there not a good deal of emotional sentiment in all this?"

"No, sir. The men who fought great battles, both North and South, are heartily in accord in desiring that the issues that have so long divided the country be forever settled. Trade and commerce, the development of a mighty country, all combine in asking for living legislation and a grand advance movement. For many years the platforms of the Republican party, both State and national, have rung out for economy and purity of the public service, and yet when a man has been found who, like President Cleveland, makes vital the very principles that they have been maintaining they turn around and denounce him as an enemy of the Government. The truth of it is that in one of those strange evolutions of American politics the Democratic party has swapped principles with the Republican party, and a Democratic President is doing for the country to-day what would have been accomplished years ago had the professed principles of the Republican platforms been adhered to. It was just so after the revolutionary war when the Federalists and the Tories changed places entirely. The fact of it is, this is a democratic government, as Lincoln said, 'of the the people, by the people, and for the people,' and if one set of men fail another set will be found to do the work."

"Captain, do you think there has been any real change? Has there not been a show of doing much, but in reality doing little?"

"I believe much has been done. President Cleveland's course as Governor of New York is simply being repeated on a grander scale as President. Every branch of the public service has profited by the reforms inaugurated, and the result will be the saving of millions of dollars to the people and a better civil service than has ever been seen in the country."

"Do you think the Republicans should have indorsed this administration? That seems to be the drift of your conversation,"

"I most certainly think the Republicans should have given President Cleveland full credit for the good work he has done. It has been for the best interests of the country as a whole, and not for any particular clique, faction or even the Democratic party as a separate organization. President Cleveland deserves the support of every thinking American citizen, irrespective of party, in what he's doing. Those who denounce him are recreant to the commonest principles of patriotic duty, and are not fit to be intrusted with official place or power. Holding the views I do, I most emphatically decline to march in the so-called Republican procession this fall. I cannot obey the commands of such leaders, and shall strenuously resist every effort they may put forth to subvert good government and exalt themselves at the expense of a reunited country."

Keeping His Pledges.

The New York Tribune now howls over the removal of Pinchbeck and the other Republican officials at New Orleans, alleging that the removals were "in defiance of the President's civil-service reform pledges." The trouble with the Tribune is that it does not know what civil-service reform is. It imagines that it is a device to keep men in office, be they good, bad, or indifferent.

Since the close of the war the Federal offices at New York have been in the hands of Republican officials, and the defalcations foot up over $2,000,000. Since President Cleveland has been at the head of affairs a new theft of $25,000 in the sub-treasury has just been discovered, and it would seem that the interests of reform in the civil service demanded a change in the manner of conducting the Federal business at that point. The speediest and safest way to accomplish the desired end was by a change of officials, and the President went about it unhesitatingly.

The way to encompass civil-service reform is to sweep dishonest officials out of office. An honest journal would find no fault at the President's course under existing circumstances. Instead of acting "in defiance of his civil-service reform pledges" he is living up to the letter of them.—Omaha Herald.

William C. Whitney.

Charles A. Dana returns the Republican fire on Secretary Whitney with the following statement of what the country may be sure of in naval affairs:

If the Chicago, Atlanta, and Boston are completed under the supervision of Secretary Whitney, and by men selected by him to do the work, the people of the United States may be sure of three things:

The ships will be honestly built from this time out.

The Government will make the best of what promised to be a very bad bargain.

Mr. Roach will be fairly and justly treated in the matter.

Such are the good results of having an honest, intelligent, and incorruptible man at the head of the Navy Department.

"Honest, intelligent, and incorruptible man," and as able a man as there is in the Cabinet.

THE Buffalo Telegraph, the cheap and nasty little sheet that first printed the Halpin scandal in the last campaign, has suspended publication. Its sensation was a boomerang that killed it. Some of the other papers that polluted their columns with the vile calumnies, and thereby outraged the sanctity of decent homes, are not feeling very well either.

BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, one of the most stalwart of stalwart Republicans, says that President Cleveland "has made a favorable impression on the people, which extends beyond his own party." Boutwell is a notable deserter from the violent and irreconcilable partisans who see nothing but evil in this administration.

THESE Democrats who are "all torn up with dissension" are awfully sly about giving the fact away to anybody but Republican reporters. In their conventions in Iowa, Mississippi, and Ohio they unite in cordial commendation of President Cleveland and his administration.

THE really important issue in Ohio this year, so far as the rest of the country is concerned, is whether John Sherman shall continue in the Senate or be superseded by a Democrat. The struggle, so far as it bears on this question, will be watched with a great deal of interest.

MICHIGAN CONGRESSMEN.

Charles C. Comstock.

Charles Carter Comstock, of Grand Rapids, represents the Fifth District, composed of the counties of Allegan, Ionia, Kent, and Ottawa. He was born at Sullivan, Cheshire County, N. H., March 5, 1818, and has been a resident of Michigan thirty-one years. He was formerly a manufacturer of lumber, furniture, and wooden ware, but is now a lumberman and farmer. He was elected Mayor of Grand Rapids in 1863, and re-elected in 1864. He was a candidate for Governor of the State on the National Greenback ticket in 1870, and was a candidate for Representative in Congress in 1872 and 1878, but was defeated in each case. In 1884 he was elected Representative in Congress on the Fusion ticket, over John C. Fitzgerald, by a vote of 20,406 to 20,050 for Fitzgerald, Republican; and 2,449 for Wilson C. Edsell, Prohibitionist.

E. B. Winans.

Edwin B. Winans, of Hamburg, Livingston County, Representative in Congress from the Sixth District, comprising the counties of Clinton, Genesee, Ingham, Livingston, and Oakland, was born at Avon, N. Y., May 16, 1826, and removed with his parents to Michigan in 1834. He received his education in district schools and at Albion College. In the spring of 1850 he made the overland trip to California, where he engaged in gold mining until 1858, when he returned and settled on the farm where he now lives. He has served two terms in the State Legislature, from 1861 to 1865, and one term as Judge of Probate of Livingston County. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Democrat. He was elected Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress in 1882 on the Fusion ticket, by a vote of 18,516, to 18,484 for his Republican opponent, Oliver L. Spaulding, and 148 for the Prohibition ticket. In 1884 he was re-elected by a vote of 19,857 to 18,377 for James C. Wilson, Republican, and 2,445 for Leander C. Smith, Prohibitionist.

T. E. Tarsney.

The Eighth Congressional District of Michigan, embracing the counties of Gratiot, Isabella, Midland, Montcalm, Saginaw, and Shiawassee, is represented by Timothy E. Tarsney, who was born at Ransom, Hillsdale County, Michigan, Feb. 4th, 1849; his father was a blacksmith and farmer. The subject of this sketch attended the common schools in Hillsdale County until 12 years of age; he was the youngest of five brothers, the four eldest were soldiers in the Union army. In February, 1864, he went into the Government service on military railroads in Tennessee, and served to the close of the war. In the spring of 1873 he was elected Justice of the Peace, being the only candidate elected upon the Democratic ticket. He served as Justice until 1874, when he abandoned the business and engaged in the practice of law, which occupation he has been engaged in ever since; he is a member of the law firm of Tarsney & Weadock. He was appointed City Attorney of the city of East Saginaw in 1875, 1876, 1877, which position he resigned on account of increased private business. In 1880 he was nominated and run for Congress in the Eighth District of Michigan, against Roswell G. Horr, running over 2,000 ahead of the electoral ticket, but was defeated; in 1882 he was nominated for Attorney General of the State. In 1884 he was unanimously chosen as first delegate-at-large to the Chicago convention, and later was nominated for Congress and elected by a plurality of 1,022.

"GIVE US YOUR MONEY!"

Passengers on an Alton Train Robbed by Four Half-Frightened Missouri Bandits.

But Small Sums Taken, the Desperadoes Apparently Being Very Much Hurried.

[Kansas City dispatch.]

A bold train-robbery occurred on the Chicago and Alton Railroad to-night, but owing to the sudden flight of the robbers but little booty was secured. As the westbound train on the way to the city left Blue Springs, twenty miles from here, about 9 o'clock to-night, four masked men appeared at the smoking-car and were about to board it. A number of men, however, were standing on the platform, and the robbers passed to the next car in line, the day-car. Three of them climbed upon the forward platform and the fourth got on at the rear. A man then mounted guard at each end of the car, while the other two entered, and, with drawn revolvers, commanded the passengers to give up their money. A number of them handed out small amounts of change, while one man, in his excitement, passed out his purse, containing $23. The robbers took whatever was offered without searching the passengers, and made no attempt to rob them of jewelry. When the pair had reached the middle of the car they became suddenly alarmed, and, pulling the bell-rope, the four robbers sprang off when the train slackened speed, and disappeared in the darkness. The train passed on, and the conductor, James Boggs, reported the affair to the officials of the road from the next telegraph station. The train then proceeded on its way to this city. The passengers on the other cars knew nothing of this matter until it was all over. Then there was excitement among the timid, and many hastened to secrete their valuables and prepare for a return of the robbers, even though all danger had passed. The passengers of the car that was robbed had scarcely time to realize what had occurred before the robbers had disappeared.

The booty secured amounted to about $30 in money, nothing else being taken. The robbers are described as appearing awkward and nervous, and evidently unused to such work. They were roughly dressed and looked like farm-hands. Each wore a black mask.

J. H. Andrews, a business man of this city, who was on the platform of the smoker, relates that when the men approached the car he thought they were tramps. They boarded the second car as the train was pulling out from the station, and a moment after he started for the rear of the train. At the rear door of the smoker he was met by the guard, who pointed a revolver and called upon him to stand still. He obeyed, and from the doorway watched the proceedings in the other car. The whole transaction, he thought, did not occupy over five minutes before the robbers commanded a brakeman to pull the bell-rope and stop the train.

Blue Springs is a small station in a thickly wooded district, situated near Glendale and Blue Cut, the scenes of former robberies in the days of the James gang. The train, which was due here at 9:30 p. m., was nearly an hour late, and on its arrival preparations were made to send a special train from here with a posse to search for the miscreants. Every effort will be made to apprehend them.

The robbers started northward from the railroad, and a posse from the town was soon in pursuit. The men were seen about the station before the train arrived. One was dressed in a brown coat, black pantaloons, and hat, and had black hair and mustache. His weight is about 150 pounds. The other men were not noticed closely enough for a description to be obtained.

CHINAMEN BUTCHERED

Coal-Miners in Wyoming Displaced by Celestials Take Bloody Revenge.

Seven Men Slain and Their Homes Burned —Ailing and Aged Chinamen Cremated.

[Rawlins (Wyoming) special]

The largest coal mines in the entire Union Pacific system are at Rock Springs, 120 miles west of Rawlins. The road has recently been importing large numbers of Chinese to fill the places of white men. This afternoon the entire force of white miners, numbering about 150 strong, organized, and, armed with shot-guns, marched to that portion of the town occupied by the Celestials, and after firing a volley into the air, reloaded and ordered the "pig-tails" to leave. The order was obeyed at once, the Chinamen fleeing to the hills like a drove of sheep, closely pursued by the miners. Several volleys were fired at the fugitives with fatal effect. The Chinese quarters were then set on fire, and thirty-nine houses owned by the company were destroyed with their contents.

The miners next visited the various mines in the camp, unearthed all the Chinamen at work therein, and bade them flee for their lives. They flew.

Of some four hundred Chinamen who made Rock Springs their home this morning, not one remains. All are in the hills heading for Green River, thirteen miles further west. Seven were killed outright by the shots fired by miners, and many are wounded. It is said also that several feeble and helpless from disease perished in the flames at Chinatown. Sheriff Young arrived at the scene from Green River by a special train this evening with a posse of deputies, but too late to prevent the mob from carrying out its plans. The miners quietly dispersed after making sure of the departure of the Celestials, and all is quiet. The Union Pacific officials appealed to Gov. Warren for protection, and Asst. Gen. Supt. Dickinson and Supt. Wurtele are en route for the scene of trouble by a special train. Both of these men are popular with the miners, and will probably be able to quell any disturbance likely to arise now. The Chinese have now been run out of Rawlins, Carbon, Laramie, and other points in Wyoming.

DOWN TO DEATH.

Four Girls and Two Men Drowned in the Fox River at Oshkosh, Wis.

A Frail Boat Suddenly Capsized by the Swell of a Passing Tug.

[Oshkosh (Wis.) special.]

The most melancholy case of drowning chronicled in the history of this city occurred at an early hour this morning near the draw of the Milwaukee and St. Paul bridge, which crosses the Fox River. A dozen operatives in the Diamond Match Company's works, principally young girls, were being rowed across the stream in a frail boat, and being caught in the swell of a passing tug, the craft was upset and six of the party drowned. When the boat began to rock in the waves several of the girls became seized with terror, and in their apparent madness rose from their seats, and, rushing to one side, caused the terrible accident. A young man named Wolff, who was of the party, reached a landing-place first, and though somewhat exhausted saved one or two lives with great difficulty. The other persons were saved by a young man named Starbeck, who pushed out from shore after witnessing the accident. Those rescued were in an exhausted condition. As the news of the accident spread hundreds of people were attracted to the spot, and among them relatives of the lost ones. The scene during the search for the bodies was painful to witness, and tears and lamentations rent the air. In three hours from the upsetting of the boat all the bodies were recovered and taken to their desolated homes. The names of the drowned are: Johanna Matschie, aged 20; Augusta Wiese, aged 15; Emma Buuer, aged 18; Lena Maidle, aged 12; Philip Berry, aged 18; Louis Dicht, aged 25.

With the exception of Berry, the dead men were members of the poorer class of laboring people and assisted in supporting their parents. Berry, who was night watchman at the bridge, was under a contract with the girls to carry them across the river for so much per week. It is said that he was careless in the management of the boat, and intensified the fright of the girls when the boat first began to feel the effect of the waves. The place where the accident occurred is one of the deepest points in the river, the water being thirty feet in depth. The water was chilly, and those who were thrown into it were so numbed that they could not assist themselves. Their cries were heartrending when they fell into the water. The accident causes universal sorrow.

There are various rumors concerning the cause of the accident. It is asserted that the watchman, who is among the dead, rocked the boat on purpose to frighten its occupants, and that this was the starting point of the accident. After the waves struck the boat, they claim, all were so terrified that they lost their heads and looked only for safety. The people of the neighborhood where the dead resided are greatly incensed and threaten to do bodily injury to the day watchman at the bridge, who had also made a practice of carrying passengers across the river, but there is no reasonable cause for this, as the persons were satisfied to have the men ferry them, because the distance by the regular avenues of traffic was two or three miles longer than by this route. The watchman, it seems, conducted the ferry without having obtained the consent of the agents of the road here, and the railroad men do not hold themselves liable for the accident.

MINERS CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Four Men Killed and Six Badly Injured While Descending a Wilkesbarre Shaft.

[Wilkesbarre special.]

At the Oakwood shaft, just outside the city limits, the property of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company, the men employed in the mine were going down the shaft on the carriage, as usual, to their work, at 7 o'clock this morning. The shaft is eight hundred feet deep and ten men are let down at a time. A cage load was descending, and had almost reached the foot of the shaft, when a rattling sound was heard overhead, and immediately after a large rock crashed through the sheet-iron covering of the carriage, killing three of the men outright and so fearfully injuring another that he died shortly after being taken to the hospital. Several others were slightly injured. The names of the killed are: John J. Martin, a miner, aged about 35, unmarried, and living with his widowed mother in this city. James Kearney, a laborer, aged about 25, unmarried. John Peterson, a miner, aged about 26, married, and living at Parsons. Thomas Jenkins, a laborer, about 28 years old, single, and living at Miners' Mills.

Those injured are: Patrick Smith, bruised inside and on the back; Patrick Pursell, slightly cut in the back; Patrick Kearney, slightly bruised in the hip and on the right leg below the knee. The last-named gives the following description of the accident: "Going down the shaft, I was standing almost precisely upon the place where the hole was broken through the roof of the cage by the piece of rock, but when I heard the noise of the rock coming down against the side of the shaft above, and the smaller pieces striking the roof, I somehow stepped to the center and under the cross-beam which supports the roof. The others were running back and forth to find a place of safety, and all knew what the sound meant. The position saved me, as pieces of the rock struck the roof and crushed down through on the other side. My lamp was put out, and as the carriage struck bottom I made a step and went into the hole that had been broken in the floor. One of the smaller pieces of the stone hit my hip. I got out of the place and half fell off it to the gangway. My presence of mind had not deserted me, and my first thought was for my brother Jim. I called to him but there was no answer. Then we searched the wreck, found the bodies of the others all mangled and bleeding, and finally Jim, his feet on the edge of the carriage and his body and head lying over the edge in the water of the sump, dead."

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

$131,150.00.

That is the Amount of Building Done in Charlevoix in Two Years.

Two years ago the JOURNAL gave a report of the new buildings for that year, and the intention was to follow it up each year about the same month. Failing last year, we kept the report, and present to-day the combined report of the two years. The report includes all buildings begun since Sept. 10, 1883, except those then reported.

In addition to the residences, F. J. Meech has the foundation complete for a very large house on the Upright addition. He is not certain that he will build this fall, consequently the estimate is not included.

In the matter of additions and improvements, no items of less than $100 are given, and it is possible that not all of this class have been noted. There were a great number of items between $50 and $100, and we think the total of miscellaneous improvements is low at $10,000. This year has been unusually quiet everywhere, but Charlevoix has maintained a healthy and very satisfactory growth. Next year will witness an increase of new buildings far ahead of anything in the past history of Charlevoix.

Notes and News.

A Grand Rapids woman gave bith to triplets three times in succession, and all boys.

The postmaster general gets around to Michigan occasionally. On Monday 23 fourth-class appointments were made.

President Cleveland returned to Washington on Monday, very much refreshed from his camp life in the Adirondacks.

The Tradesman states that P. T Barnum originated and carried to success, thirty years ago, what is now commonly known as "boycotting."

Dr. James D. Munson, assistant superintendent of the Pontiac asylum has been selected as superintendent of the northern asylum at Traverse City.

Circulars No. 91, 92, and 93, relative to the prevention of communicable and contagious diseases, have been received from the state board of health.

The Elk Rapids iron company have received an order for 400 tons of charcoal iron to be shipped to England, probably the first iron of western manufacturing ever shipped from this country.

A. P. Swineford, governor of Alaska, writes a very interesting four col umn letter to the Mining Journal, from Victoria, B. C. The governor and his party missed the boat, and were compelled to wait two weeks for the next.

The Lake Superior Sentinel, published at L'Anse, Mich., comes to hand enlarged to a six column folio, and presents a clean face. It is printed on a new Allen press, and the copy before us is a good advertisement for the press.

On the occasion of its second anniversary, Sept. 2d, the Detroit Journal issued an eight page paper, and for a supplement a fac simile of the Detroit Gazette, the first paper printed and published in Detroit and dated July 25, 1817. Under present management the Journal appears to be as prosperous a paper as any in the state.

Mrs. David Brown, wife of a business man of Petoskey, died in a dental chair about 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Perry, the dentist, administered a moderate amount of chloral, which, combined with predisposition to heart trouble, produced death. He had pulled 11 of her teeth, and she seemed to be recovering when she gasped suddenly, lay back and died. She was 27 years of age and leaves one child.

It is worthy of note that the contract for blankets for the asylum, about 700 pairs, has been awarded to Hamilton & Milliken, of Traverse City, and that these blankets are made at the mill of Buller Bros., at Acme, in this county, from wool sheared from sheep owned in Grand Traverse county. There were eleven samples from different firms in different parts of the country. These samples were subjected to a severe test, being washed thoroughly four different times. The sample from the Acme Mills, offered by Hamilton & Milliken, proved to be far superior to any of the others, and the contract was awarded accordingly.—[Traverse Herald.

Political Reform.

Great reforms are demanded in our politics, notably the complete reform of the civil service. There is good prospect of the success of some of these measures, if only decent men of both parties will stand up for decency and praise it whenever they see it, demanding and commending the thorough enforcement of the laws, whichever party is in power. If these reforms fail, the blame will lie at the doors of those otherwise highly moral and reputable citizens who prefer the success of their party to the welfare of their country.—The Century for June.

It is indeed rather melancholy to be told that at the election for school trustee at Throg's Neck, Westchester county, last Wednesday, the woman voters of that wealthy and intellectual suburb actually threw their support to a saloon keeper and elevated him to the coveted position of trustee over a lawyer. The lawyer did not happen to be distasteful to the ladies for the reason that he had spoken disrespectfully of woman suffrage. Nothing of the kind. The saloon keeper was elected because the wives and sisters of the people who believe in saloons turned out and voted for their man with a vim. When the advocates of woman suffrage were in Albany framing and advocating the law under which women are permitted to vote for school trustees, it was urged by them that the introduction of this element would improve the tone and character of the school boards of the state. Some of the aristocratic people at Throg's Neck are inclined to doubt this now.—World.

Improvements and additions recently made to Judge Ramsdell's already fine barn make it altogether the largest and most complete in all its appointments of any building of its kind in northern Michigan, if not in the state. As it now stands, its length is 125 feet, and breadth 56 feet. One-half of it is three stories. The base ment alone is larger than most barns. To build it required 56 cords of stone. The main cellar is 52x34 feet, the canned fruit cellar 14x14, the hen house 14x36, the stable 50x56. Among other compartments of the building are a milk room through which flows constantly pure water from the hill springs, a large fruit packing room, a carpenter's shop, etc. Water from the springs is also conveyed to the stables, hen house, etc. A fire place in the main cellar furnishes facilities for cooking feed, or any other purpose required. A visit to this establishment will repay any one at all interested in farm matters.—Traverse Herald.

Posting the books goes on bravely, in accordance with the pledge of the democratic party. We heard considerably about the count of the cash in the treasury being all right to a cent—republican organs made all they could out of it. But they are very mum on the question of posting the books. The investigations instituted by Cleveland's administration have developed fraud, embezzlement, extravagance, recklessness or profligacy in the most of the departments. The interior, navy, treasury and pen sion departments needed the thorough overhauling they have and are receiving. Scarcely a day passes but some scheme to rob the public is unearthed. And to the reform instituted by the democracy the people say, Amen. —Big Rapids Herald.

Resorters do make a town lively, both financially and socially. We believe it has made at least $3,000 difference in the trade this summer by not having the usual large crowd here.—[Progress.

Mr. J. A. Mitchell, assistant engineer, has commenced the work of repairing the north pier by leveling up the crib work, adding one tier of new timber, and filling with stone. L. E. Allen has the contract for furnishing stone.

Tuesday morning we were shown a well matured peach, above the average size, and fine flavored, which grew in Charlevoix, notwithstanding the extreme cold which everybody complained of last winter. No especial pains were taken to protect the tree, which grew in an ordinarily exposed place.

No sensible man should get angry because a newspaper man duns him for money.—[Sturgis Democrat. And sensible men do not, good brother. It's only those who by some strange provision of Providence have just sense enough to keep out of an insane asylum, that get mad when dunned in a business way.—[Kalamazoo Telegraph.

A dispatch from Charlevoix to the Grand Rapids Democrat, dated Sept. 5, says: A corked bottle was picked up in the north port of the city a few days ago containing a piece of paper on which was written the following: "July 27, 1885. Collided. The schooner Hattie Fisher went down off Point Betsey; the crew is in the boat this night; don't expect to get shore." Inquiry among vessel men shows that the Hattie Fisher, a Beaver island craft, has not been seen here or heard from for some time. LATER—Yesterday's Evening News says the story is "an antiquated guy. The Hattie Fisher is safe in Milwaukee."

Friends of Jos. Beauvais on the Charlevoix resort have secured for him a most desirable lot, adjoining the resort on the west, on which he will build in the near future a large boat-house for the accommodation of people on that side of the lake. This will give Joe the "inside track" all around, for which his many friends will rejoice.

Ed. F. Parmelee, of the Sentinel, and Miss Essie Butters were married this morning at ten o'clock, by Rev. E. B. Fairfield at the residence of the bride's father, Lieutenant-governor Buttars, in the presence of numerous friends. They departed on the Grand Rapids at noon for a trip to eastern cities. A host of friends unite in wishing them a prosperous and happy life.

Mr. Chas. Shepard, of Boyne, and Miss Minnie Edwards, of Charlevoix, were married by Rev. J. T. Iddings, at the residence of Oscar Upright last Thursday afternoon. Mr. Shepard is a member of the firm of Shepard Bros., hardware merchants, of Boyne, and the young couple start out with fair promises of a successful future. The best wishes of Charlevoix society will follow Minnie to her new home.

Mrs. G. T. Smith, of New York, has on exhibition in Hines & Co.'s window a fine collection of paintings. The scenes are from life, some of them made during a recent visit to Florida and Georgia. Other scenes represent northern landscapes and flowers; they must be seen to be appreciated. Mrs. Smith intends to organize a class in this work, if enough interest is manifested. No one should fail to see the exhibit. Mrs. Smith is stopping with B. W. Miller on State street.

Last Thursday, Sept. 3, closed the Daily Resorter for this season. Mr. Hampton has made a paper that would be a credit, in quantity and variety of news, to any city of 10,000 inhabitants. He has made a far better paper than the patronage and circumstances would warrant. He has done this work almost without profit, though almost every business enterprise in this region will receive a percent of gain as a result of his advertising. From the tone of his valedictory, we understand that it is to be revived next season, at which time we hope he may get the balance of those "large elegant dollars" which he dropped in the enterprise two years ago.

Annual School Meeting.

The attendance at the annual school meeting at the school house Monday evening was very light, there being nothing of special interest to draw the people out.

The director made his annual report, which was accepted and adopted.

O. S. Washburn was re elected assessor for the ensuing three years.

The matter of heating the building was discussed. The furnace placed in the building last year failed to do the work, and had not been paid for. The company will give it another trial, adding another (smaller) furnace to be used if necessary on extreme cold days.

Nine months school was voted for the ensuing year. A motion was made to have but eight months, allowing the extra month in the winter vacation, when the weather is too severe for small children attend. This was voted down.

The school census just completed by the director shows 350 children of school age in the district.

The receipts and expenditures for the year were as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Money on hand Sept. 1, 1884	$301 19
Received from one mill tax	390 00
Received from primary school interest fund	417 88
Received from tuition of non-resident pupils	18 37
Received from district taxes for all purposes	1,220 00
Received from all other sources	64 33
Total	$2,321 77

EXPENDITURES.

Paid male teachers	$800 00
Paid female teachers	865 00
Paid for building or reparing school-houses	265 92
Paid for all other purposes	345 14
Amount on hand Sept. 7, 1885	100 14
Total	$2,324 77

Estimates for the coming year were made and amounts voted as follows:

For teachers wages	$1,300 00
For wood	100 00
For janitors' wages	100 00
For incidental expenses	150 00
Total	$1,650 00

In voting the estimates, an attempt was made to increase the amount so as to provide a surplus to carry the schools over from the close of the fiscal year to the time for receiving the next year's tax, but this was voted down, as it was the previous two meetings. It is not to the credit of Charlevoix that her school orders for teachers' wages be hawked about wherever anyone can be found to advance money on them. If the officers are honest, (and this has not been questioned), it will not cost any more to run the schools by providing enough cash to pay every bill until next year's taxes are received, than it does on the present plan, and the financial credit of the district would be stronger by doing so.

ONE OF THE INVALIDS.

E. M. PARMELEE, Dear Sir:—I have been taking your Dyspepsia, Diabetes, and Liver Cure for some time past and have received more benefit from it than from all of the $500 worth of Doctor's medicines that I have used in the last few years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired all the time but now I can work all day without fatigue. Would not be without it in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world.

NOTHING IS CHANGED.

BY ALMA M'KEE.

From Oxford at length I returned,
With head full of Blackstone and Coke;
My valet I met on the way,
With a smile and a well-meaning joke.
"And the folks,
How are they?"
Said I, as we entered the lane.
"Any change to speak of?" Quoth he:
"Sir, everything here is the same."

"But why is my pet crow not here?"
I queried with chagrin, I must own.
"He was ever the first one to greet,
The moment I lande I at ——"
"My dear sir,
Jim is dead!
Pardon the interruption, I pray."
"Oh, who could have shot him? The knave!
I swear he shall answer this day!"

"Alas! 'twas no shot killed the crow;
But when the old mare died, you see,
He ate too much of ——" "Great Scott!
My good old mare Meg, it can't be!"
"Yes, the same!
Sir, she's gone!
While her bones are now whitening yon moor;
She hauled so much water, you know
When the old house burned down, to be sure."

"So the old homestead's gone, did you say?
Zounds! How did it happen? do tell!"
"Why, Bill, he was careless, you s e,
The night Master fell in the well."
"Master fell
In the well!
Not my father? Most assuredly, not he!
Speak, idiot! Whom do you mean
By master? It's puzzling to me."

"Yes, your father, dear sir; but don't fly.
I swear to you I'm not to blame!
You see, he's been out of his mind
Ever since Mistress died of the shame!"
"Heavens above!
Mother dead?
Speak, man! What shame was't broke her heart?"
"Why, your sister, you know, had eloped,
And then for New Orleans did start."

"Oh, would I had died ere this day!
So nothing has happened, you said?
My sire harmless in body and mind,
While mother this three months is dead;
And the mare!
And Jim Crow?
While my sister, for all is to blame!
And nothing has happened, you say?"
"Sir, everything here is the same."

GOING A-FISHING.

BY LIGE BROWN.

Some people would rather stay at home and handle money than go fishing, but I am not so constructed. Money, of course, has occasional attractions, even to a man who lives mainly on moonshine; but there frequently comes a time when I am overcome with a desire to go where pellucid waters gurgle, and for a day or two relapse into barbarism and eat with my fingers. As Sam Jones says, I am down on piscatorial diversions, but, brethren, I do love to fish. I never baited a hook in my life, if we rule out the pin-hook period of existence; but for all that, I love to lie in the shade on a hot day, and watch somebody else having good luck and a splendid time.

Any man who has the use of a brain that is always on the go, like a young chicken in quest of bugs, will find that nothing so lulls it into the holy calm of perfect repose, so necessary at occasional intervals to robust mental health, as reclining in a hammock in the breezy shade on a hot day and watching somebody trying to catch fish. The eyes may remain open, and the body wide awake, but the soul will slumber, and when aroused to duty afterward it will spring up refreshed.

One of the ways to get all the enjoyment of the circus, without the crowd and bad breath you are obliged to endure in order to harvest hilarity under canvas, is to make up a little party of friends, and go forth in picnic style to spend a day killing mosquitoes and eating pickles and jelly on the bank of some placid stream, where it meanders through a forest which drapes the earth in cooling shadows so intense that ants on the biscuit are not observed.

I have in mind an excursion of that kind which occurred this season. A small party of kindred spirits was made up, and a day appointed for the picnic. It was agreed that everybody should take something, so I took a camp cot and a fan, in addition to a fly lemonade before starting. Others, more keen-sighted, took substantials that came handy in the course of the day, but nobody had the foresight to think of bait. Bait is the allurement placed on the hook to beguile the fish to its ruin, and is a matter of some consequence, if you expect to have good luck and catch many fish, though some are foolish enough to bite at the bare hook, as you sometimes see people do in real life. My wife took a freezer of ice cream, a jug of milk, and every precaution to get her refreshments to the rendezvous in safety. She also took a lady guest from the city who was afraid of snakes and something of a gusher on poetry. It might also be remarked that she had a good mouth for pie and abhorred a pig.

We started early. My costume was cool but impressive. It consisted largely of blue cotton pantaloons, straw hat, and a shirt without a collar. I also wore a cigar the greater part of the time, in addition to the blue goggles which are my constant stay and comfort in hot weather. The women were dressed with scrupulous care in Mother Hubbards, wide-brimmed hats, and full-grown umbrellas. Our coupe for the time was a lumbering spring wagon, drawn by a horse who resembled myself in one marked particular. He was fond of the shade, and narrowly escaped upsetting the wagon several times in his frantic efforts to get to it when we passed a tree by the roadside.

Immediately on leaving home my wife began to enjoy herself and add to the pleasure of the company—which was myself and the woman who abhorred snakes—by worrying about the cream and its chance of getting there in anything short of a sloppy condition. It is a peculiarity of this good woman to take an interest in everything she has anything to do with. Her interest in that cream was continuous and full of solicitude. The journey was about six miles, and from notches cut on the wagon-box by way of memoranda—for I like to be accurate about such matters for the sake of argument afterward—I discover that I was obliged to stop, alight, and overhaul the tub in which the freezer and jug of milk were packed in the fragments of an iceberg of no insignificant size, fifty-three consecutive times, in response to the calls of that woman's abnormal zeal toward promoting the pleasure of the party in the sizzling hours of the day. About the time I would get back into the wagon and become comfortably fixed in my seat, she would begin to brood on terrible consequences sure to happen a little farther along, and it wouldn't be a minute until she would be about ready to break down with a presentiment that the cork had already come out of the jug. So I would have to climb down again, and prove by personal observation that she was wrong, as is generally the case in the clash of intellect between man and wife. But it was not until we finally drove into camp, and she had satisfied herself by overhauling the cooling apparatus in person that my numerously repeated statements were correct as usual, that anything like tranquillity of mind or placidity of demeanor was possible to the woman who had such an important responsibility resting on her delicate shoulders.

Most of the party were equipped with poles and lines, and expected to dip a hook for the fun of the thing, but two men had come to fish in the literal meaning of the term, and after spending an hour in scouring the country in search of bait, they secured a limited supply, and, finding a place where the sun could pour down on them without hindrance, they spit on their hooks and commenced business in scientific earnest.

I took a position on my cot in the thickest shade I could find, and prepared to enjoy myself without unnecessary fatigue. In fifteen minutes the camp was thrown into most intense excitement. The red-headed man had a bite! Everybody held his breath and stood on tiptoe to wait the result. It weighed three pounds, according to a rumor that diffused itself through the community next day, but if you insist on scriptural accuracy in such matters, divide by three and let it go at that. Of course the lucky man was not troubled with solitude for some time afterward. Everybody else brought his pole and got as close to him as possible. His society was in demand from that moment, but he lost his luck and his jaw dropped until the solemn-faced man's cork began to bob. The crowd then went over to him in a body, and his hopes were blasted. The man with the flaming ringlets pulled out another bass, and the crowd stampeded back to him. The sad-faced man readjusted his bait, spit on his hook, tossed it back into the water, and sat motionless for two hours.

Just as I was beginning to feel myself borne by angel hands to the land of dreams, a new diversion aroused me. It was a female shriek of most robust amplitude and unmistakable earnestness, followed by a rush of air near me, and a resounding splash in the water that threw a cloud of spray several feet above the river's bank. A female shriek is something to which I generally pay more or less attention, depending somewhat as to whom the shriekist may happen to be. When it happens to be the companion of my woes, as it generally is, I never excite myself with precipitate rashness. I take things cool and look around for something on which to base a conjecture before sweating myself without urgent cause. When a man has had his blood brought to a standstill more times than a six-year-old can count, by a wail from the wife of his bosom over nothing more terrible than the unexpected appearance of a spider, or at most a mouse, he will learn to keep his coat on and wait for developments of a more dreadful nature. When the screamer is young and fair, and has taffy-colored hair banged in both hemispheres, it alters the case, and I go to the rescue at once, without caring a noodle for particulars.

When the aforesaid shriek struck me my first impression was that the partner of my triumphs had made the awful discovery that the cream jug was corkless in spite of all my efforts in its behalf, but a moment later I saw that I was mistaken. The gusher from the city had sat down on a log and was trying to compose a poem to nature when she espied a small snake, and at once became so demoralized with fear that she instantly become as crazy as her own poetry, and jumped into the river for want of knowing what else to do. Being the only man in the party at leisure at that moment, of course I had to jump in and pull her out. The complexion of the poetess and my own raiment were a good deal the worse for the ducking, but it took all the nonsense out of her for the remainder of the day, and I had reason to feel grateful to the serpent who had slaughtered the muse, for the misguised woman had somehow become impressed with the delusion that the greatest pleasure I could know was in listening to the reading of her own sad, sweet melodies.

By this time the solemn-faced man came into camp, looked at a dinner basket and sighed. Whether this signal had been previously agreed upon or not, I don't know, but at all events the women took the hint and began to spread out the dinner, having some time before commenced the preparation of coffee on a small coal-oil stove in a very large boiler. The stove had seemed discouraged from the start at the size of the job, and took its own time to bring the water to the boiling point. Everybody stood around watching the coffee and wondering why it didn't boil. I suggested that matters might be hurried a little by hanging the boiler on the limb of a tree and getting the red-haired man to stand under it, but he didn't seem to take kindly to the proposition and it was not adopted. When it was discovered that the light in the stove had died out probably an hour before and somebody had put a chunk of ice in the boiler, the wisdom of my view was at once apparent. It was also strengthened in due course of investigation by the revelation that the stove was like the lamp of a foolish virgin, and no one had thought to bring a cruse of oil for its encouragement. An old-fashioned fire was then set going by the sad-eyed man, who had served in the army and knew more about cooking than his own mother or anybody else's wife, and in a very little while the odor of good cheer pervaded the camp. The table was spread on the ground, and we squatted about it in Oriental fashion.

If you don't believe that man is still a savage at every favorable opportunity, go with him to a picnic and watch him eat. The bottled-up instincts of a thousand generations of life in cave and forest break out in him then, and for the time the polish of education is observed. He don't care a fly for appearances, and has no use for a knife and fork. He dives in with both hands, and keeps his mouth too full to talk until everything in reach has disappeared, and then he begins to forage on adjacent territory, and steals pie from the near-sighted woman at his elbow. If my gifts were of the kind that find expression in marble, and I wanted to picture famine in permanent form, I would sculp the solemn-faced man as he looked with a roast chicken in one hand, a little of everything else in the other, and a good deal of miscellaneous nutriment piled up in front of him, as he sat with a stony stare straight ahead, and jaws going it like a quartz-crusher in a busy season. The picture will long occupy a well-lighted nook in memory as about the most energetic tableau of earnestness I ever stumbled against. I very much doubt whether the sad-eyed man would have quit eating chicken at that minute to listen to good preaching.

The red-haired man was also busy, but his face contained rather too much of sunlight to make him available for allegorical purposes of a dreadful character. Though he probably managed to conceal from view more provender than any one else in the party, there was nothing so very depressing in the sight of him as he did it. He looked as if he enjoyed the feast, and didn't act as though he was doing it on a bet, but managed somehow to keep his conversational works and laughing machinery going at the same time his masticating apparatus was in most hurried operation. If you want to have a good time at a picnic, you will miss it if you don't take a sorrel-top along.

A woman is always a woman, but more especially so at a picnic dinner. In the unequal race of life the fragile creature may not be able to hold her own at all times, but she does it at meal time, no matter where she is or who is present. I don't mean to say that she gets her full share of the eatables, in the strict sense of the word, but she maintains the characteristics of her sex, and never for one instant forgets that she is dressed in petticoats. When a man gets beyond the restraints of a drawing-room he ceases to be a human being, and gnaws a bone with as much delight as a jackal; but on the other side of the house it is different. A woman never forgets that she has a complexion that should be guarded or a tongue that can gallop unbridled wherever it will. Instead of grabbing everything that comes handy, and putting it out of sight as soon as possible, without any regard to whether her face is frescoed with jelly, her nose blossoming with jam, or her cheeks glowing through butter, she minces a morsel of this, breaks off a piece of that, takes a mere taste of the other, and tries just the smallest fragment of something else, saying all the while how dreadfully soggy her own cake is, as she knew it would be, and told Henry so a dozen times before they started, and how deliciously good everybody else's provender is, and what a shame it is she should have spoiled the feast by bringing a lot of trash nobody will eat; but then she might have known it, for she never did have any luck with this, that, or the other when she was hurried.

And so it goes. Every woman runs down her own truck as the vilest of the vile, and lauds that of everybody else to the highest pinnacle of perfection. And did anybody ever see such heavenly this, or such ecstatic that, and for mercy's sake did anybody ever see anything so grand as something else, and how in this world was it ever made—so splendid every way; do tell, Mrs. Topnotch, for goodness' sake? And pshaw! you don't say! that's exactly the way she made it herself; but did anybody ever see such a scandalous difference? And while all the feminine tongues are rattling in their strategic efforts to pull in compliments, the men eat up everything in sight except the custard pie Claybank's baby fell into face down, and every woman on the ground goes home hungry that night, and one of these days will most likely tell somebody in confidence there wasn't a thing fit to eat except what she took herself, and of course that was eaten up at once by those wretched men before she could get a taste.—Chicago Ledger.

He who suffers keenly has great capacity for enjoyment. There is no keen sense of delight except to one who has a keen sense of sorrow.

A VICTIM OF BUNKO.

An Aged Philadelphian Beaten Out of $9,500 at Atlantic City, N. J., by a Sharper.

[Atlantic City (N. J.) special.

Charles Field, Sr., who is over 85 years of age, and who has been in business in Philadelphia for over fifty years, was victimized out of $9,500 by a brace of bunko men in Atlantic City. Mr. Field has spent much of his time here during August, and is a familiar figure. In the afternoon he took a stroll after dinner, and met a young man of good address, who, after a courteous hand-shaking, stated that he was an old friend of the Philadelphian, alleging that he had been a clerk in the Penn National Bank, and since his resignation had been abroad. He had brought several fine pictures from Europe, which he would be pleased to have Mr. Field inspect. Mr. Field, having nothing else to do, went with the young man, who entertained him with stories of the sights he saw across the water. They were kindly received by a stout woman, and were ushered into the office—the art emporium, as his friend called it. Here he was introduced to a game played on a board with numbers on it, and with a spinning arrow, presumably a sweat-board. Two other gentlemen were introduced, and they played the little game, each winning over $100. Mr. Field was invited to join them, and he lost over $100, but continued to play. During the progress of the game the young men kept Mr. Field interested by talking over the affairs of the bank and its earnings and investments. After playing some time the bunko men coolly asked the old gentleman for his check for $9,500, drawn to himself; as the collateral for a grand prize he had drawn on the sweat-board. Thinking that the bunko man was really an old friend he told him to fill out the check and he would sign it, which he did. The check was on the Pennsylvania National Bank, where Mr. Field has been a depositor for over fifty years. On leaving Mr. Field the bunko steerer took the first train for Philadelphia, presented the check at the bank, and, after being identified, received the money.

THE NEW EXPOSITION.

The North, Central, and South American Exposition at New Orleans, Opening Nov. 10, 1885.

New Orleans correspondence: A mistaken notion prevails that the great Exposition is simply a reopening or continuation of the Cotton Centennial Exposition of last year. The only thing it has in common with that Exposition is that it will be in the same buildings.

One of its leading objects is to secure closer relations between the three Americas. For the first time in the history of the new world the representative men from Minnesota to Chili will come together to get acquainted, to inspect and study the natural resources and the products of human labor and ingenuity gathered together for that purpose from the whole hemisphere.

The present annual imports of Mexico, Central America, and South America are valued at five hundred millions of dollars, and their exports have about the same value. The United States take only 35 per cent. of these exports, and furnish only 16 per cent. of the imports. It is believed that these imports could easily be doubled, and every business man sees the necessity for an earnest effort to deflect the greater portion of this vast and increasing trade to our ports. The new Exposition will be the most important agency in producing this result.

The annual value of our manufactures is now six thousand millions of dollars, and we export only 2 per cent. of this vast product. Mexico, Central America, and South America are naturally our markets. At the new Exposition the natural as well as the manufactured products of this hemisphere will be displayed in such variety and profusion as will strongly attract the attention of the world. Each State of our country will present a rich exhibit of its resources and advantages. Visitors from Europe, as well as from American countries, will gladly avail themselves of this opportunity of seeing and studying the wonderful collections gathered at New Orleans. These collections will not only exhibit the resources of American countries, but will show, as they have never been shown before, the marvelous possibilities of the new world. During the coming fifty years human activity must center largely in these countries, and they have already become the study of the profoundest thinkers and political economists of the age. The new Exposition, which will open November 10, 1885, and close March 31, 1886, furnishes the opportunity for that acquaintance between American countries which can only result in great advantages to all.

THE DEMENTED TRAGEDIAN.

Poor John McCullough Listlessly Awaiting the Coming of His Fate.

[New York special.]

Reports have recently multiplied to the effect that John McCullough was rapidly sinking in his home in the Bloomingdale asylum, and that his death was but a question of a few months. Dr. Nichols, the medical superintendent of the asylum, was questioned yesterday as to the truth of these reports. "They are about correct," said the Doctor. "As nearly so, at all events, as laymen can make reports that should be technical. Mr. McCullough is generally paralyzed and quite weak. He will walk a quarter of a mile or so at a time with an attendant at hand, but he moves about like an old man, sitting down and getting up with a good deal of difficulty. Mr. McCullough's physical condition is not greatly changed since he came here. He will not live years, he may not live many months. He is much quieter and happier than when he first came, and seems quite contented to be here. He looks back sometimes on his stage life and recalls the coming on of his disease with much feeling. His case is, of course, hopeless, and I never held out to his friends the slightest hope of his recovery."

Mr. McCullough is very regular in his habits at Bloomingdale, but follows no cast-iron routine in disposing of his time. The patients are expected to rise at a certain hour and take their meals at specified times. These rules are not rigid, however, and are relaxed when necessary. So far as his physical powers will allow, Mr. McCullough endeavors to follow them, rising and taking his meals with the other patients. He passes his time otherwise as he chooses.

UNDER THE KNIFE.

A Wonderful Surgical Operation in New York.

[New York special.]

A remarkable operation was performed at the Charity Hospital in this city to-day. Mrs. Ann Curry, who is fifty years of age, has suffered for two years with malignant cancer of the abdomen. She was induced to enter the Charity Hospital recently, where she was visited by Dr. Thomas H. Allen. When told that an operation from the effects of which no patient has ever recovered—and only three left the operating-table alive—was her only chance of life, Mrs. Curry announced her willingness to take the risk rather than live longer in such misery. The operation was performed this afternoon, in the presence of several well-known New York surgeons. The patient was placed under the influence of ether, and Dr. Allen made a long, straight incision into the abdomen, from the pit of the stomach downward, and the assistants tied the arteries. A spray atomizer was used to sprinkle an antiseptic fluid upon the wound. Dr. Allen removed the abdominal organs, while his assistants tied one artery after another. It was discovered that the bladder and several surrounding organs had been attacked by the germs of the disease, and these had to be scraped until all the traces of cancer were gone. The work was finished in a few minutes, and the opening in the stomach was drawn together and sewed up with a fine silver wire. These stitches were afterward supplemented with others of catgut. The cancer weighed nearly twelve ounces. Mrs. Curry was taken to her room in safety, and all danger of a primary shock was removed. Dr. Allen said that it was hardly possible for the patient to recover, but he had great hopes that the operation would prove successful.

THE OFFICES.

Postoffice Appointments Made by the Administration Since It Came Into Power.

[Washington telegram.]

The Appointment Clerk of the Postoffice Department has made a complete and accurate schedule by States of the Presidential and fourth-class appointments made by Mr. Cleveland. It is as follows:

	Presidential.	4th class.		Presidential.	4th class.

As the total number of postoffices which the President has the sole power of filling is 2,342, it will be seen that nearly one-fourth of the incumbents have been changed and over one-eighth of the fourth-class offices have been doled out.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

Peck's Sun: A few months since a half dozen newspaper men were sitting in the cosy rooms of the Chicago Press Club, talking of things connected with their business, and changes that had taken place in the last decade, when one of the editors turned to a middle-aged man whose hair was originally red, but who had not much left to show, and said:

"But the greatest change of all has come over this dude, boys. Ten or a dozen years ago he was one of the red-hottest writers in the West, always warming it to a political enemy or anybody who was prominent. The paper he edited was a chronic grumbler, never could see any good in anybody, and to-day he is publishing a successful paper which is full of the greatest kindness to all the people, and never says a thing that could offend the most fastidious. I have often wondered what made the change. Speak out, old man, and tell us."

The rest of the crowd insisted on knowing what had caused the change, so the warm-haired editor said, after lighting a cigar:

"Well, boys, if you insist on it, here goes. Heretofore, when anybody has asked me what has caused the change in my style of writing, I have said that I found the new way had the most money in it. That is true, but that is not the cause of the change. As you well know, my early editorial experience was of a sensational nature. I was employed by those who seemed to delight in making enemies by saying mean things, and when I went in business for myself the habit followed me. I knew I could write as mean things as anybody in the business, and my greatest delight was to have some other newspaper pitch into me. I had a chip on my shoulder constantly, to speak figuratively, and was aching for some one to knock it off, or tread on the tail of my editorial coat. To think of it now, I must have been one of these smart Alecks we read about. It was not safe for an editor to allude to me in his paper, for I would say something mean or sarcastic that would make him my enemy. I gloried in quarrels, and when I went to an editorial convention half the editors were not on speaking terms with me. In the town I was living in the editors were all by the ears and wouldn't recognize each other on the streets. It was a constant fight, and 'the idiot who runs the opposition sheet over the way,' or 'the feeble-minded lunatic who, in his sane moments, contracts to pay his board, and stands off his landlady when in his normal condition,' etc. Life was one continued round of newspaper quarrels, and I don't believe I had a friend in the profession, unless it was somebody I had not got around to in my general abuse. One day my little 18-months-old baby was taken very sick, and for a week I was constantly at his bedside, and those I would naturally have abused got a rest. Finally death took the little one away, and I was completely broken down. During the interval between the death and the funeral I thought over my course, and how mean I had been to everybody, and I would have given the world if I could have recalled some of the mean things I had said of my neighbors, and I forgave everything that had been said about me. The next evening I picked up a paper published by one of my rivals, and there was such a touching notice of the death of my baby that I could have hugged 'the idiot who ran the opposition sheet.' Not a word in the article but would convey the impression that the editor was my dear brother, and there was a wealth of sorrow and condolence expressed for those who mourned. Other papers, whose editors I had abused, spoke in even more kindly terms, and when the funeral occurred there were three of the men to whom I had been the meanest, acting as pall-bearers, and tenderly conveying the body of my baby to the dust. At the close of the exercises they all shook hands with me, and there were genuine tears in their eyes as they saw my agony. As I pressed their hands harder than I ever pressed men's hands before or since, they knew better than I could have told them that all animosity had entirely passed out of my heart, and that I was their friend forever after. When I could do so without breaking down completely, I called upon them, and though nothing was said about the past, they knew and I know that my work as a newspaper fiend was over. From that day, gentlemen, I have tried never to write an article that would cause pain to any man, woman or child on the face of God's green earth. I have made many persons happy in the years that have passed since the day that my journalistic enemies lowered the body of my baby into the grave, have written much that would amuse, but never a word that would harm, or cause a heart-ache, or make any person sorry it was written. Now, instead of enemies everywhere who would do me an injury, I have friends among all the people that I know, from little children to the gray-haired fathers and mothers, and that kind of literature pays, because it has brought not only friends but money in plenty. Now, there are no persons I am prouder to meet and greet than the 'idiots and demented fiends who published alleged papers over the way.' That is the cause of the change in my style; the death of my baby, and the kindness I received at the hands of those I had abused." And the red-haired man lit his cigar, which had gone out, and went out onto Clark street, thinking deeply, leaving the other editors with tears in their eyes, also thinking deeply.

If the legs are not hollow, why is it they get drunk so easily?

The Epidemic of Crime.

Whence comes this epidemic of suicides and murders? Recent discussions have named several causes. Hon. C. H. Reeve, of Indiana, charges it to infidel teachings—holding that hopelessness of a future state cripples fortitude for bearing life's ills. Another declares suffering from the universal business depression the cause. A third writer attributes it to increasing insanity. A physician thinks much of the tendency is inherited, while temperance advocates lay the responsibility upon strong drink.

Free-thinkers have committed suicide, but so have orthodox churchmen. Financial straits have beset many, but the wealthy have also taken their life.

Insanity and dissipation have preceded suicides and family murders.

One feature common to almost every such crime challenges attention. Well-nigh every report of suicide and family murder mentions the perpetrator as having "for some time been subject to melancholy." Whence comes this? All recognized medical authorities tell us that the fire which consumes the brain is always kindled by derangements of digestion; that good digestion is impossible without pure blood, and pure blood is never known when the liver and kidneys are out of order. Under such circumstances, a preventive should be sought, and for this Warner's Safe Cure is sovereign—a fact conceded by the best authorities in the land, and it is especially commended by the celebrated Dr. Dio Lewis.—Rochester Democrat.

The City of Seoul, Corea.

This place looms up before you with high towers in Chinese style pierced by cannon, and the city is surrounded by a wall twenty-five feet in height, and built of solid stone. You may think you are about to enter some grand city with stately abodes, but on passing through the gate you find only thatched cottages, very wide streets, and scarcely any trees; and you are surprised that so grand a wall should be thought necessary to protect so insignificant a town. But there are throngs of people there, and bullocks and ponies laden with merchandise are passing you constantly. In the broad, open spaces called market places are groups of donkeys laden with vegetables, and bulls almost covered out of sight with loads of brushwood to be used as fuel. Along the little brooks which run through the city are washer-women with their clothes-lines. The Coreans build their houses by erecting four pillars or posts at the corners, and filling in the walls with mud. The better houses of the wealthy are faced with stone, pointed with cement. Though these are better in quality than those of the poor, they are much the same style. You enter a house through a sliding door or window about three feet high, consisting of a light wooden frame work papered over to exclude the air and admit the light. There is on good houses a veranda upon which the shoes of the inmates and visitors are left while they enter. In this tidy custom the Coreans resemble the Japanese; but the hollow space under the floor of the house, which is filled in winter with warm air, reminds you of the Chinese.

Grant and Stephens.

The following story is credited to Gen. Grant: He said that when the famous Peace Commission called on him and President Lincoln, in Virginia, he saw Alexander H. Stephens for the first time. He had often heard much of the Southern statesman, and had supposed him to be a very little man; but on seeing him in company with the other Commissioners he thought him astonishingly big. Stephens wore a huge overcoat, made of some rude material—coarser, the General said, than any Canadian cloth he had ever seen. The collar was more comprehensive than any he had come across, the tails touched the ground, and the circumference was in keeping with the rest of the ample proportions. In Grant's headquarters Stephens took off the coat and revealed himself the slender and in every way diminutive man he had been represented to be. It was the garment that had afforded bulk. The Peace Commission went up on the York River to see Lincoln, and a few days later the President came down to meet Grant.

"Did you see Stephens?" Lincoln asked.

"Yes, sir," replied Grant.

"See him in his overcoat?"

"Yes, sir."

"See him take it off?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well," and Lincoln roared with laughter, "ain't that the littlest ear out of the biggest shuck you ever saw in your life?"

Grant told the story with gusto, and seemed to especially recall Lincoln's quick sense of the ludicrous.

A Newly Discovered Metal.

Norwegium is the name of a newly discovered malleable metal of white color, with a tinge of brown. It presents when pure a metallic luster, but specific gravity is 9.4441. At 350 deg. C. on exposure to the atmosphere becomes coated with a tin film of oxide; its hardness is about that of copper, and it melts. It was found while examining a piece of nickel ore from Kragero, Norway.

A real King Charles dog weighs, when in good condition, about eight pounds, has a small, round head, a full, round hazel eye of great brightness and expression, a very short nose, fine dropping ears with black silky hair on them that almost touches the ground; a soft, long, black coat; delicate limbs fringed down behind each leg with hair of a rich tan; a graceful tail; tan at the side of the mouth and sometimes under the chin and on the eyebrows. There must be no white except a "tick" on the breast.

"Sir," said an old lawyer to a client that he thought was not telling him the truth, "never deceive a lawyer by lying to him about your case when he takes it in hand. He can attend to that branch of the business himself a great deal more efficiently than you can."

Diplomacy and Chinaware.

M. Renan, in introducing De Lesseps to the French Academy, told a little story illustrative of the childish jealousy of the barbarian against which the wise diplomat has so carefully to guard. It was of Said Pasha and the Suez Canal matter that Renan was speaking: "The barbarian is always a child, and this friendship might have been broken like a goblet. This you knew; and in the whole relationship your rich and supple readiness appears. It is only the strongest natures which know how to deal with barbarians. Said had in this journey a service of Sevres china, and you had another. In spite of all precautions, the service of the Viceroy was broken to atoms, while yours was complete. This would never answer, and so, one day, the well-trained camel who carried your equipments was replaced by one almost wild, and specially lively. Nor did you care to change back again. It was but a few minutes before your Sevres service also flew in pieces. The Viceroy broke out into laughter, and the enterprise of the Isthmus was saved."

The Clanger of an Alarm-Bell

Close by, in the stillness of the night, could scarcely startle the ordinary individual more than do trifling noises the nervous invalid. But once the nerves are braced and the system invigorated with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, this abnormal sensitiveness is succeeded by a tranquillity not to be disturbed by trivial causes. Impaired digestion is a fertile cause of nerve weakness and unnatural mental gloom, and a vigorous renewal of the action of the stomach is one of the surest means of invigorating and quieting the nerves. Insomnia, or sleeplessness, a form of nervous disease, is unquestionably benefited by sedatives, when it is prolonged, or of frequent occurrence, but its permanent removal is more effectually achieved with the Bitters. This medicine is also signally efficacious for malaria, rheumatism, constipation, liver complaint, and torpidity of the kidneys and bladder.

Obscure Men Happiest in Wedlock.

No woman will love a man better for being renowned or prominent. Though he be the first among men, she will be prouder, not fonder; as is often the case, she will not even be proud. But give her love, appreciation, kindness, and there is no sacrifice she would not make for his content and comfort. The man who loves her well is her hero and king. No less a hero to her, though he is not to any other; no less a king, though his only kingdom is her heart and home. If is a man's own fault if he is unhappy with his wife, in nine cases out of ten. It is a very exceptionable woman who will not be all she can to an attentive husband; and a very exceptionable one who will not be very disagreeable if she finds herself willfully neglected.—Alabama Baptist.

"I have sold hundreds, I might almost say thousands, of lots to Germans," said a Buffalo real-estate man, "and have noted one significant fact: The moment a German takes to whisky he's gone. He may swallow beer, ale, wine, and cider enough to float a ship and yet pull through and pay for his lot, but old rye will lay him out. When a whisky-drinking German wants to deal with me I say 'No' with an emphasis that makes his teeth rattle."

Our Progress.

As stages are quickly abandoned with the completion of railroads, so the huge, drastic, cathartic pills, composed of crude and bulky medicines, are quickly abandoned with the introduction of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are sugar-coated, and little larger than mustard seeds, but composed of highly concentrated vegetable extracts. A hundred diseases may proceed from one source—a diseased or debilitated stomach. No human being can be healthy when digestion is disordered. Tone the stomach and liver, and regulate the bowels with Dr. Walker's Vegetable Vinegar Bitters, and the work of assimilation and excretion will go bravely on. By producing perfect digestion and a proper flow of bile, it insures pure blood, a vigorous circulation, and a prompt discharge of all waste matter from the system.

Around the County.

Ironton.

J. B. Cater has nearly completed the alterations and improvements about his boarding house, and transformed it into a very comfortable hotel. It is a three story building, 62 feet front, with rooms on first and second floor for forty guests. The third floor is not yet finished. The office is in the corner and the ladies' parlor and sample room front the street. From the porch one has an unobstructed view of a large portion of Pine Lake, and from the roof can be seen the whole of Ironton, Holy Island, and Dwight's Landing, up the Arm; Undine, Oyster Bay, and part of Charlevoix. Mr. Cater thinks he will call it the Lakeview House.

The iron company are putting in a new hoist this week. At the company's store numerous changes and improvements have been inaugurated, among them being a meat market, with two refrigerators, one for fresh meat, and the other for butter, etc. The balance of the stock of summer goods is being disposed of to accommodate a large stock of winter goods which is expected in the near future.

Crouter & Harris are doing a lively business in drugs and groceries, competing with Charlevoix prices in all their goods. They also are buying wood and bark, and everything about their store presents a lively appearance.

Special Correspondence.

The furnace has been shut down to put in a double elevator.

The dedication of the M. E. church took place on Sunday last. Enough money was raised to remove the debt and to insure the house.

The annual school meeting occurred Monday night. There will be nine months of school,—five this winter and four next summer.

Miss Katie Schoffen of this place who has been in Chicago for the past year, is home on a visit.

Mrs. Frank Shaubut was in town on Monday.

Mr. Wm. Smith, of this place, was hurt quite badly on Saturday last, between two coal buggies.

Rev. A. M. Parmenter gave a temperance lecture in the church Friday evening.

Boyne City.

Newville & White, proprietors of the Boyne City mill, will do an extensive lumbering business this winter.

Boyne City claims the honor of possessing the only organized boat club in Northern Michigan. The members do their rowing in a four oared gig.

J. R. Kramer, the well-known Cadillac clothier, has leased the building of A. E. Hosmer and will remove his stock to this place September 21.

George Slater aged five years narrowly escaped drowning Thursday. He had to undergo a process of resuscitation before he could be induced to breathe. He fell through Schaub's dock.

The Sheboygan manufacturing company is one of most extensive chair manufactories in the world, and the lumber which is converted into chairs by them at their factories in Sheboygan, Wis., is cut from our forests, manufactured into lumber at their mill in Boyne City and transported to Sheboygan in vessels. This winter they will get out 5,000,000 feet of logs.

Boyne City is now indulging in a substantial building boom. George Gibson, of South Haven, will erect a brick block and will commence work thereon in about two weeks. It will be occupied by Shepard Bros., hardware dealers. Several places are now in process of erection and A. E. Hosmer will erect a building 20x50 which will be occupied by the Statesman printing office and postoffice.

Burgess.

We learn that McConnell's steam thresher frightened Hamlin's colt last week so that it ran into a barbed wire fence and was cut up pretty badly.

W. C. Arnold has threshed over 300 bushels of wheat this year.

A big crowd and good time is reported from the dance at Jack Saunby's last Friday evening. Another at the residence of Thos. Murray next Friday evening.

Isaac Stauffer had a steam thresher at his place last Saturday.

The Hamlin boys will soon start out with their threshing machine.

Rev. John R. Robinson preached his farewell sermon at Murray school house last Sunday.

East Jordan.

At a meeting at East Jordan last week, for the purpose of organizing an agricultural society, the organization was completed by the election of officers and adopting constitution and by laws. The intention is to hold the fair on Oct. 1st and 2d, on grounds about half a mile north and east of the village. The following are the officers: President, J. B. Palmeter; secretary, J. H. Stone; treasurer, H. P. Barbour; trustees, three years—W. H. Healey, W. F. Empey, and J. C. Glenn; two years—H. B. Hipp, O. Blair, and M. Hodkins; one year—Robt. Trimble, N. L. Cash, and J. S. Dixon.

The premium list is not yet fully made out, but we are assured that it will offer a generous array of prizes for a new county and entirely new organization. All that is necessary to ensure highly satisfactory results from the coming fair, therefore, is the hearty co-operation of all our people in the efforts put forth by the officers of the society. Those who intend bringing articles to the fair should begin to prepare at once to do their share toward making the display one that will show Charlevoix county's resources to the best possible advantage.

The Wilson Hoop Co. have commenced to build at South Arm.

The new hoop factory at East Jordan will use about 2,000,000 feet of elm annually and give employment to 30 men and boys.—Evening News.

A monument in honor of Father Matthew the Irish temperance apostle, is to be erected in Central Park, New York city, by the Father Matthew societies of the country.

A Chicago woman who has taken in sewing for a couple of years to support her drunken and lazy husband says it is surprising that the Board of Health has not had her indicted for "maintaining a nuisance."

Georgia has secured such prohibition in some of her counties, that the jail stands open night and day—notably at Jonesboro, where the whole institution has been offered for sale, and the conscientious sheriff is forced to think of resigning for lack of something to do.

Inebrity among American women is undoubtedly becoming more pronounced every year. Its increase is apparent in the great demand for narcotics, and the sale of wine and beer by grocers; also in the divisions of saloons into general and family entrances, with separate rooms for each.—Exchange.

We need nothing now in this country, to obtain entire emancipation from the horrors of the liquor curse, but a little fidelity on the part of the church to christian duty. The liquor traffic is the one great obstacle in the way of the progress of the gospel, and it seems to me the church should help with all its might to remove it.—Neal Dow.

A New York woman has made a practice of bringing suits for damages against saloon keepers of whom her husband obtained his drink, alleging that his capabilities for earning wages had been reduced by his drunkenness from $30 per week to $3 or $4. and stating the damages at $2,000. In a recent case the jury gave her a verdict for $200.

In Brazil where the inhabitants take coffee many times a day alcoholism is unknown. Immigrants gradually contract a fondness for coffee, and their children fall into the habit and never contract a love for liquors that are so fatal in other countries. The number of cafes in the large cities is enormous, while the drinking saloons are very few.

A tavern-keeper who had abandoned traffic in alcohol after being engaged in the business a number of years, was asked the reason. He took down an account book, and, opening it, said: Here are forty-four names upon this book. They were my customers. Of these thirty-two are in drunkards' graves, ten are professional topers, and I know not the where-abouts of the other two."

Liquor Made Him What He Is.

A gray haired man, whose muscles in every part of his body twitched and started convulsively, and whose face and manners indicated excessive dissipation, appeared before Justice Foote yesterday morning on the charge of being a troublesome drunkard. He gave his name as Charles A. Palmer, and the complainant was Mrs. E. Palmer. "I was divorced from him three years ago," she said, "because of his drunkenness. Every time he is intoxicated he comes to my house and raises a disturbance. When he's drunk he's crazy. I don't object to his coming around when he's sober, but when drunk something must be done with him."

"When I found him," said Officer Mahoney, "he was in Mrs. Palmer's house lying on a bed, kicking and screaming and threatening to kill everybody who came near him, with a revolver which he had in a bureau-drawer."

"Judge, I guess something must be done with me; liquor has made me what I am; but I can't help it. I guess I'm a wreck; but suppose we let this matter rest for a few days; it'll come all right. All's well that ends well, you know."

He was fined fifty dollars and costs and sent to the Washingtonian home.—Chicago Tribune.

Double Anniversary.

One of the most enjoyable events of the summer occurred at the residence of W. P. Brown, on Mason street, last Friday evening, being the thirtieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Brown, and the second anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brown.

It was the original intention to get the new residence on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets done in time to make the event a grand dedication of the home, but the wet weather of the past two weeks interfered with drying the plaster and putting on the finishing touches. It is estimated that nearly 200 people were present to join in wishing both couples many returns of the day. Two hours were spent in social chat, when refreshments were served,—a feast of good things, requiring another hour to discuss, and a good deal longer time to digest.

The following rich and appropriate presents were received.

French opera glass, in pearl and gold.
One dozen silver table knives, pearl handles.
Gold pen and case, pearl holder.
Pocket knife, pearl handle.
Pair of shells, pearl.
Case nut-picks and cracker, silver plate.
Glass fruit dish.
Hanging lamp, hammered brass, decorated.
Family bible, old and and new version, pictorial.
Frossart's Chronicles.
Two Burns' poems, illustrated, library edition.
Byron's poems, illustrated library edition.
Cowper's poems, illustrated, library edition.
Milton's poems, illustrated, library edition.
Gems of Great Authors, illustrated.
Souvenir, Jesus lover of my Soul, Illuminated.
Poe's Raven, illuminated.
Rock of Ages, illuminated.
Two papeteries, plush and satin.
One dozen stereoscopic views.
Four paper pails, one filled with flowers.
Game of Go Bang.
Music Rack.
Two packs of cards.
Package of paper.
Paper collar, (size-27.)
Three panel pictures.

A CARD OF THANKS,

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. and W. A. Brown desire to express their great satisfaction and delight resulting from the celebration of their wedding anniversaries, on Friday, the 11 inst. The attendance was very large and all seemed happy. The gifts were rare and numerous beyond their thought or expectation. The gratitude they feel to all for their presence and gifts, and to many of their dear friends from far and near; who so lovingly expressed their joy with regrets; is second only to that felt for the spirit which prompted them, and which is recognized as that of "the Author and Giver of every good and perfect gift."

They sincerely hope to do for each, some act of kindness that will afford as much happiness as was their's on that occasion.

Death of L. W. Skinner.

Our people were much surprised and grieved last Monday by the receipt of a letter from Claremont, Va., to H. Wood, stating that L. W. Skinner had died of fever after an illness of but a few days, and was buried. The surprise was greater, perhaps, because when Mr. Skinner was at home this summer he was in most excellent health and spirits.

He had located there intending to remain permanently, and his wife and daughter were almost ready to remove the household goods,—intending to start next Monday. Concerning his sickness, death, and burial, the Claremont Herald of last Thursday contains the following:

SUDDEN DEATH.

Our people could not have been subjected to a greater or more painful shock than that occasioned by the announcement last evening of the death of L. W. Skinner, who, less than a week ago, was seen and known as one of the most active, energetic, and healthful men in Claremont. On Wednesday of last week Mr. Skinner had occasion to go up on the A. & D. line to Leavelles, from which place he proceeded on foot several miles to examine some timber. The day was warm and he over exerted himself. He returned to Claremont on Thursday, and on his arrival complained of feeling ill and retired to his bed. Delirium and other symptoms of brain fever followed. Two days ago, Tuesday, he felt well enough to leave his bed, but was worse in the evening, and again went to bed from which he never again arose. At ten o'clock last evening he passed peacefully away, being entirely unconscious of everything about him. Congestion of the brain caused by undue exposure to the sun, was the cause of his death.

Deceased came to Claremont from Charlevoix, Mich., about two or three months ago, purchased a farm and was building thereon preparatory to bringing his family here. He was highly respected and esteemed by all who knew him, and leaves many warm friends in his new home. Mr. Skinner was about fifty-five years of age and leaves a family in Charlevoix, to whom we extend sincere sympathy. Everything was done to make him comfortable during his illness. Mr. E. S. Hawkes, his son in law who came on with him, being constantly by his bedside. Funeral will take place this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Virginia Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of which fraternity deceased was a member, will be present.

RESOLUTIONS OF BAXTER POST G. A. R.

HEADQUARTERS BAXTER POST,
No. 119, G. A. R.
Charlevoix, Mich., Sept. 14, 1885.

WHEREAS, The sad intelligence has reached this Post that our comrade L. W. Skinner has fallen before that dread enemy of all being, and his remains now lie buried in the far off soil of Virginia, a soil that was consecrated by the blood of thousands of his former comrades who there fell in the defense of their country; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of our comrade we recognize the fact that we have lost one of our most worthy comrades, and society a genial and obliging neighbor, the family a kind and devoted husband and father; that we hereby tender to the bereaved family and friends our heartfelt condolence in this sad hour of affliction; that the hall of the Post be draped in mourning for the space of thirty days; that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of our deceased comrade; that copies also be furnished each of the papers for publication.

"Terrace Farm."

Messrs. J. R. & J. S. Dixon are doing their full proportion toward developing the resources and showing up the advantages of this community. What they have accomplished is no more than anyone can do with the same energy and economy. Like all pioneers, they have worked hard, early and late, during all the long years since they established themselves, and like a few others they have a competency in their declining years.

The farm at present comprises about 120 acres, and is cultivated under a system of rotation calculated to improve the fertility of the land each year instead of diminishing its capacity for producing a crop. And the fine crops which they harvest from year to year is sufficient proof of the excellence of the system.

The farm is stocked at present with 25 head of cattle, besides swine and poultry. They are now milking 17 cows. A portion of the milk is sold in town, the balance used for making butter.

They are seeking to improve their stock by introducing Holstein blood. A vigorous young bull is kept on the place, and the intention is to devote considerable attention to raising thoroughbred stock. They have a Holstein heifer 1½ years old, equal in size and weight to most two-year-olds and many fullgrown cows of common stock.

Four acres of the farm are devoted to a market garden, from which a large number of families receive their daily supply of fresh vegetables.

They are experimenting with celery this year, and if fully satisfied, may undertake to supply the home market in the near future.

In their orchards are 300 apple trees and some smalls fruits, but this year apples are a short crop.

In the yards about the house are an almost endless variety of flowers.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Forty thousand persons visited Gen. Grant's tomb last Sunday. Subscriptions to the Grant monument fund in New York have dropped to an average of about $200 a day, and the hopelessness of raising by popular subscription the amount originally intended is now admitted, even by the committee having the enterprise in charge. It is said that not ten per cent. of the committee have yet even visited the rooms.

The yachts Puritan and Genesta started in the international race at New York, on the 7th instant, but, no wind blowing, the boats failed to cover the course in the specified seven hours, with the result that "no race" was declared. Throughout the contest, however, the Puritan led the English craft, and opinions were freely expressed that the Puritan would win the series, and keep the America's cup on this side of the Atlantic. Hanlan easily won the boat race at Sheepshead Bay, Lee defeating Ross ten lengths for second place. Hanlan gets $600, Lee $400, and Ross $200.

Vice Chancellor George W. Clinton, son of Dewitt Clinton, died suddenly in a cemetery near Albany. He was 78 years old, and a man of marked literary and scientific attainments.

The National Retail Druggists' Association convened in annual session at Pittsburgh, with a small attendance. The President reported slow progress the past year, many of the members failing to pay their dues.

The Hon. Edward A. Rollins, President of the Centennial Bank of Philadelphia, and formerly Commissioner of Internal Revenue, died at Hanover, N. H.

Increased activity is reported in the iron and steel trade at Pittsburgh. Orders are coming in freely, and prices generally are advancing.

Sebastian Boughner, who fought at Lundy's Lane and at the capture of Fort Erie, died at Sunbury, Pa., aged 90.

A rock which had fallen upon the track overturned the locomotive, baggage, and smoking cars of the Montreal Express near Whitehall, N. Y., the engineer being killed instantly, and five others severely injured.

WESTERN.

Clingstone and Harry Wilkes will trot at Detroit, Sept. 26, for a purse of $2,500, after which the latter will be matched against the stallion Phallas for a race at Cleveland.

The Denver and Rio Grande Railroad earned nearly $100,000 more during August than in the corresponding month last year.

The census of Wisconsin, just completed, shows a total of 1,563,430, the gain over 1880 reaching 248,450. There are 23,784 surviving Union soldiers and sailors of the late war.

Bloomingburg and Washington Court House, Ohio, were swept by a cyclone on the night of the 8th inst., the former town being laid in ruins, resulting in the loss of a number of lives. Property of all descriptions was greatly damaged. A cyclone demolished three barns and a residence near Adrian, Mich. One man was fatally and two others slightly injured.

A shocking tragedy is reported in the southern part of Vermillion County, Illinois, where Perry Whitlock, a farmer, shot his wife, inflicting fatal injuries, after which he shot her two sisters and himself. Whitlock had not lived with his wife for several months.

The schooner Advance, owned by Captain David Dail, of Chicago, capsized off Sheboygan, Wis., and her crew, with the exception of Jacob Rann, were drowned while attempting to reach the shore in a small boat.

The safe in the County Treasurer's office in Linn Creek, Camden County, Mo., was robbed of $7,000. Several stores in the place were also visited by the burglars, none of whom have been arrested.

The wheat crop of Ohio is estimated at 21,707,763 bushels, or 53 per cent. of the average for the past five years. The yield of oats will be the largest on record, and that of corn will probably surpass that of any former year except 1878. The damage to corn, buckwheat, and other growing products in Northern Minnesota by the recent frosts proves to have been very great. Wet weather in Iowa has seriously impaired the prospects of the next flax crop.

A dispatch from Rock Springs, Wyoming Territory, says: "Seven hundred Chinamen have returned here, under escort of four companies of troops. The miners threaten to destroy the company's buildings, all of which are under strong guard tonight. Serious trouble is sure to ensue as soon as the miners think they have an opportunity to carry out their threat."

The three sisters shot by Perry Whitlock in Vermilion County, Illinois, will recover from their wounds, but his infant child will die.

The storm which visited Washington Court House, Ohio, almost demolished the town. Every public building and business house in the place, and about two hundred residences, were destroyed. Ten persons are known to have been killed, and over a hundred wounded, several of them fatally. In Lancaster County, Ohio, the storm was severe, ten persons being injured, and many buildings wrecked. At Troy, Upper Sandusky, and other Ohio towns, the damage was extensive. Near Adrian, Mich., $100,000 worth of property is reported to have been destroyed by the elements, and at Dublin, Ind., twenty buildings collapsed. Reports of serious losses from wind and lightning come from other points in Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin. The damage to lake shipping was also very heavy, and several lives were lost.

The schooner Erie Wave capsized off Long Point, Lake Erie, the female cook and a passenger being drowned. The schooner Advance was wrecked off Sheboygan, Wis. Two vessels, with their crews, were lost off Two Rivers, Wis.

Capt. Bradbury, Deputy Warden of the Missouri Penitentiary, was dangerously stabbed in the back of the neck by a prisoner named George Patten.

Reports from Minneapolis say there is more demand for flour, both for export and domestic consumption, but that the millers are not selling at all freely, as the offers are mostly below the price they wish.

SOUTHERN.

Charles Williams, a drunken negro, at Chattanooga, Tenn., shot and instantly killed a street-car driver named Polk Mitchell. At night an infuriated mob forced their way into the iron-clad jail with sledge hammers and chisels, and battered down the door of Williams' cell. He was dragged to the third story of the jail by four of the leaders of the mob and a rope placed around his neck. The assassin maintained a stolid indifference, and did not utter a word. He was not given time to pray. After he had been securely tied the rope was placed around a beam, and he was suspended between heaven and earth.

A dispatch from Washington, Ark., says that "a mob visited Pike County Jail at Murfreesboro, and made an attempt to shoot the two Polk boys, but not being able to get within range the mob hauled a load of wood to the jail, piled it around the iron cell, saturated the wood with coal oil, and roasted both prisoners alive, nothing standing but the brick walls of the jail. The Polks murdered a peddler last year, and have had several trials. This was the third effort by mobs to kill the men."

The cotton crop in the Memphis district has been seriously injured by drought, but will probably exceed that of last year.

Great destruction was wrought in the Sea Island cotton section by the recent cyclone on the South Carolina coast.

James B. Walton died at New Orleans aged 72 years. He commanded the Washington Artillery Battery of Louisiana during the war with Mexico and also through the entire period of the civil war, serving on the Confederate side.

John R. Shelton and Ida Maxwell eloped at Atlanta, Ga., and when the girl's father and brother found them at Shelton's mother's house a shooting bee followed, in which the three men were wounded, young Shelton and the elder Maxwell probably fatally.

WASHINGTON.

The rumor that Secretary Endicott and Gen. Sheridan were estranged is authentically denied.

The War Department reports full compliance with the President's order for the removal of cattle from the Indian Territory.

The President returned to Washington on Monday, the 7th inst., much improved in health. Miss Cleveland is expected at the White House about Oct. 1. A brilliant social season is contemplated. The President has purchased, for $5,000, a fine span of Hambletonian horses.

Washington telegram: It is stated at the Treasury Department that the only significance of the recent cancellation of silver certificates to the amount of about $15,000,000 lies in the fact, as shown by experience, that the certificates of large denomination are practically worthless as a circulating medium. The notes destroyed were $5,000 and $10,000 certificates, and it is proposed in case they shall be required to replace them with $10, $20, $50, and $100 certificates, as the latter are much better adapted for general circulation.

Admiral Jouett has written a letter to the Second Controller protesting against the disallowance of $400 in his accounts for contingent expenses incurred in the entertainment of certain dignitaries at New Orleans. He says it has always been the custom to allow the expenditures, and that it was certainly known to Congress that the custom existed, and that the contingent appropriation was to cover expenses of this sort. He protests most vigorously against having the money deducted from his pay as an officer of the navy.

It is intimated in diplomatic circles at Washington that the United States may be called upon to arbitrate between Spain and Germany with reference to the Carolines.

The Secretary of the Treasury has made an agreement with an express company for the delivery at Washington of a large amount of gold and silver coin, which is lying idle at distant points, and which may be needed at commercial centers.

POLITICAL.

Thomas C. McRae, Democrat, has been elected to Congress from the Third Arkansas District, to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of James K. Jones, promoted to the Senate.

President Cleveland has appointed Mrs. M. A. Mulligan to be Pension Agent at Chicago, vice Miss Ada C. Sweet, resigned. Mrs. Mulligan is the widow of Col. James A. Mulligan, who died of wounds received near Winchester, Va., July 26, 1861. Col. Mulligan was brevetted Brigadier General for gallantry and bravery only three days before his death. He commanded the Twenty-third Illinois Regiment.

"The National Anti-Monopoly party of the State of New York," in convention in New York City, resolved to call itself by the above name, and appointed a committee to confer with other political bodies regarding the nomination of a State ticket. H. Clay Bascom, of Troy, was nominated for Governor by the New York Prohibitionists at Syracuse, and a lengthy platform was adopted demanding the suppression of the liquor traffic by the National Government and denouncing both the old parties for subserviency to the whisky interests.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lawrence Brainerd, formerly President of the St. Albans (Vermont) Bank, who decamped two years ago with a large amount of its funds, has been abducted from Winnipeg by detectives and carried across the line into the States.

Comparison of August railroad earnings with those of the corresponding month last year are as follows: Illinois Central, decrease $9,951, Peoria, Decatur and Evansville, increase $249; Oregon Railway and Navigation, increase $122,000; Denver and Rio Grande, increase $98,305; Louisville and Nashville, decrease $40,117.

According to New York reports the visible supply of wheat in this country is over 42,120,000 bushels, and of corn about 7,700,000 bushels.

Speaking of strikes, Mr. T. V. Powderly, General Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, in an interview at Cincinnati, said: "General strikes bring to the front a class of preying men who live off labor troubles and who commit acts for which the knights are blamed. We don't want any more such strikes. Better take very little and avoid them."

The National Convention of coal miners met at Indianapolis, with delegates in attendance from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kansas, West Virginia, and Iowa. The convention was called to order by John McBride, of Ohio. Daniel McLaughlin, of Illinois, was chosen Permanent Chairman; J. D. Fleming, of West Virginia, was elected Secretary, and J. J. Sullivan, of Ohio, Assistant Secretary. The reports of delegates on the condition of the miners in the section which they represented indicated that in the mines of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Iowa, the miners were in a deplorable condition, the prices for work being lower than ever before known. The flint-glass workers of the seven idle factories opposite Wheeling, met in convention in Bellaire, Ohio, and accepted the terms of compromise previously drawn up by a committee of manufacturers and workingmen. This virtually ends the strike, which has lasted for nine months, and puts about twelve hundred men to work.

A new national organization for the conduct of economic research was formed at Saratoga, with Professor Henry C. Adams, of the University of Michigan, as temporary Chairman. The Rev. Washington Gladden and Hon. Andrew White are also officers.

The sentence in the case of Louis Riel, the Northwestern Territory rebel, was confirmed by the Judges of the Manitoba court, at Winnipeg, on the 9th inst.

There is no abatement of the smallpox epidemic at Montreal. Cases of the disease which are supposed to have originated in the city have appeared in Ottawa, Ontario, and at Sutton, Quebec, near the Vermont line.

The Executive Committee of the Western Union Telegraph Company recommend the payment of a dividend of 1½ per cent. on the 15th of October, the transfer books to close September 19. The annual meeting will be held October 14.

FOREIGN.

Intense excitement prevailed throughout Spain over the landing of German sailors on Yap, 24th ultimo. In Madrid a mob attacked the German Embassy, hurling down the cost of arms and burning it amidst jeers of derision. The mob visited and cheered the French Embassy, after which it was dispersed by the military, many of the rioters being arrested. King Alfonso and his Ministers have been in conference regarding the situation, which is conceded to be critical in the extreme. The commanders of the Spanish war-ships stationed at Yap have been dismissed the service for their failure to anticipate the Germans in securing possession of the island. A German squadron has sailed for the Carolines, and a collision with the Spanish men-of-war in those waters is apprehended. At a meeting of liberal leaders in Madrid it was resolved that the German seizure of Yap ought to be considered tantamount to a declaration of war. The Spanish Government has peremptorily declined to submit its claim to the Carolina Islands to arbitration. The Spanish Government has requested Germany to evacuate the Caroline Islands. Spain in the meantime will refrain from a material occupation of the islands, and thus afford a basis for further parleying.

Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar has been appointed commander of the British troops in Ireland.

A number of white employes of the African Association are reported to have been roasted and eaten by Congo cannibals.

In the settlement of the Afghan boundary question, Russia abandons her claim to the whole of Zulfikar Pass proper, and to Meruchak. The frontier commission will define the boundary question in detail.

In a speech at Warrington, England, Joseph Chamberlain said that the Radical programme contemplated, among other things, a moderate scheme of domestic government for Ireland, land reform, and a revision of the taxation and game laws. The Radicals, he declared, comprised a large majority of the Liberal party, and were opposed to Mr. Parnell's home-rule policy, which, if adopted, would mean the destruction of the British Empire. Most of the London journals praise Mr. Chamberlain for his treatment of the Irish question.

The entente cordiale between Turkey and England seems to be firmly established. The Prince of Wales will shortly visit the Sultan, and the latter promises to send 5,000 troops to Egypt whenever so requested by England.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

President Adams, of the Union Pacific Railroad, says the floating debt of the company has been provided for, but declines to publish the terms of the agreement. It is rumored at New York that the company has sold a certain amount of bonds for cash, and placed another block of its securities as collateral for a loan.

Soon after the assembling of Congress, Representative Mills, of Texas, will offer a bill, now in course of preparation, providing for large reductions in tariff taxes.

Thomas J. Lathrop, of Taunton, has been nominated for Governor of Massachusetts by the Prohibitionists of that State on a platform declaring "uncompromising opposition to the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

When official intelligence of General Grant's death was received at Lima, flags on the Government buildings were placed at half-mast.

Lester & Allen, who have John L. Sullivan under engagement, having refused to sanction his pending fight with Ryan, the contest has been declared off.

In accordance with the request of the United States postal authorities, all mails from Montreal destined for the United States will be fumigated prior to dispatch.

The statistics of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue show that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, 69,156,902 gallons of distilled spirits were placed on the home market, and tax was paid on 19,185,953 barrels of malt liquors. The people of the country in a twelvemonth also consumed 20,508,345 gallons of wine.

According to returns received by the Department of Agriculture the wheat crop this year will be below, and the corn crop above, the average. The harvest in Great Britain will not vary materially in yield from that of last year. The September cotton report of the Department of Agriculture shows the prevalence of hot and dry weather during August, except in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Florida. The shedding of bolls and the decrease of vitality have resulted quite generally. Drought has been serious in Texas and Arkansas, and quite general in Western Tennessee, Southern Alabama, Georgia, and the Carolinas. The caterpillar has caused much damage in Southern Texas, Arkansas, and in Central and Southern Alabama, its prevalence is noted throughout Central and Southern Georgia, with small effect as yet. The boll worm is causing much damage in the black belt of Alabama, and in Arkansas and Texas. Condition has declined in every State. The average is 85, against 96½ in August. Last year it was 82 in September and 87 in August. The present is two points above the September average of ten years.

Christian Cooper of the Town of Livingston, Columbia County, New York, died last week aged 111 years, 10 months and 15 days.

Mr. Anthony M. Keiley was for the thirteenth time elected and installed as President of the Catholic Union at New York. The next convention of the association will be held at Lancaster, Pa.

—The Marquette Mining Journal, speaking of the gold mining boom in the Lake Superior country, says: "When an old claim, of which the title is disputed, can be sold for $10,000 there is evidently some foundation to the gold boom, and when a man like Peter White, who has the well-deserved reputation of being one of the keenest business men in the State, invests that amount in the lease of a few acres of ground the chances may be set down as decidedly on the side of a successful mine."

—The Free Press says: The Detroit clergyman who last Sunday preached a sermon to show that burial was preferable to cremation summed up the whole subject when he said near the close of his discourse, "After all it makes very little difference what is done with our dead bodies." That being the case, whichever process is the most healthful and in accordance with one's own feelings and those of his friends is the better of the two. In the country, as the clergyman suggested, the sanitary question is of little importance, but where cemeteries in the very hearts of large cities are crowded until there is scarcely room for another interment the affair is of great importance.

Death of Hon. Charles Upson, of Coldwater.

[Coldwater telegram.]

Hon. Charles Upson dropped dead at his residence here, at 7 o'clock, this evening. He was formerly a Representative in Congress from this district, Circuit Judge, and has been Mayor. He was one of the most prominent lawyers in Southern Michigan, and a very highly respected citizen.

Hon. Charles Upson was born at Southington, Conn., March 19, 1821. During his boyhood Judge Upson received his education in the district school; in his 13th year he attended in South ington a select school taught by Hon. Jesse Olney, author of the many text books used in those days. With the idea of fitting himself to enter college he subsequently attended the academy in Southington during two winters; and in the autumn of 1840 commenced teaching a union school in the old academy at Farmington, where he remained nearly two years. In 1844 he enrolled himself as a member of the law school at New Haven. After attending one year he removed to Constantine, Mich., where he taught district school during the winter. He taught the district school at Centerville in the winter of 1846-7, and in the vacation of next year read law in the office of Burney & Hammond. In 1847 he was appointed the deputy of the County Clerk of St. Joseph County, and in the following spring term was admitted as an attorney to the Michigan bar. In 1849 he was elected Clerk of St. Joseph County. In 1852 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of that county and in 1854 State Senator. In 1855 he removed to Coldwater and formed a partnership with Hon. Geo. A. Coe, then Lieutenant Governor of the State. In 1857 Judge Upson was appointed Railroad Commissioner by Gov. Bingham, and held the office four years. In 1860 he was elected Attorney General, and in 1862 was elected to the Thirty-eighth Congress. He served on the Committees of Elections and of Unfinished Business; was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress and re-elected to the Fortieth Congress. In 1869 he became Circuit Judge of the Fifteenth Judicial District of Michigan and remained in that office until his resignation in December, 1872. He was also State Senator in 1881-2.

ARRANT DEMAGOGY.

John Sherman's Political Hypocrisy Exposed.

[Washington special to Chicago Times.]

Senator Sherman's speech at Mount Gilead, at the opening of the Ohio campaign, has attracted considerable attention here. His endeavor to find fault with President Cleveland for appointing ex-Confederates to office naturally leads to a review of Senator Sherman's own record in that respect, and the showing is such as must convict him of arrant and unblushing hypocrisy in the judgment of any impartial person of any party. He says: "Two members of the Confederate Congress and one man who sympathized with them are at the head of great departments of the Government." This charge quite naturally recalls the fact that Judge Key, an ex-Confederate, was the head of one of the great departments in that administration of which Senator Sherman had unlimited personal control. When Sherman and Key met at a Cabinet session, Sherman did not denounce him in any such terms as he now uses against Secretary Lamar and Attorney General Garland. When Gen. Grant nominated a Confederate Brigadier—Amos T. Akerman, of Georgia—for a place in his Cabinet, Senator John Sherman unhesitatingly voted for his confirmation. When the Ohio Senator referred so indignantly in his Mount Gilead speech to the fact that "this country is now represented abroad by men who within twenty-five years were in arms to overthrow it," he must have forgotten that he voted to confirm James L. Orr, of South Carolina, when he was appointed Minister to Russia by Gen. Grant, and Judge Settle as Minister to Peru, as well as that he was not without personal responsibility in the cases of Longstreet and Mosby. A list of the ex-Confederates given office by Republican Presidents, and accorded the favor of Sherman's vote when before the Senate for confirmation, would fill two or three columns. Some of the names are worth recalling, however, as, for instance, William P. Canaday, whom Sherman helped to make Sergeant-at-arms of the United States Senate. He was a Captain of Artillery in the Confederate army, and his force of employes includes many ex-Confederates. Judges Hughes of Virginia, Settle of North Carolina, Hough and Boarman of Louisiana, and Humphreys of Alabama; District Attorneys Northup and Lusk of North Carolina, Walton and Chandler of Mississippi, and Leonard of Louisiana; Marshals Morphis and Hunt of Mississippi, and Wharton of Louisiana; Internal Revenue Collectors Young of North Carolina, and Henderson of Mississippi, make up but a tithe of the number of prominent officials who were appointed by Republican Presidents and confirmed by Republican Senators. Senator Sherman may not have voted for all who have been named, but he never protested against the appointment of any.

The Mullen Case.

The Mullen case, in which President Cleveland released a man from the consequences of gross partisanship on the bench, is evidently to be made as much of as possible by the Ohio Republicans, just as it is by Republican critics of the President in other States. The charge that Mullen deprived 160 electors of the right to vote, which was the basis of the indictment against him, was the text of Judge Baxter's sentence; and both charge and sentence will be read from the Ohio stump in the efforts which the Republicans are making to carry that State on something beside local issues.

Apparently, however, they are not to be undisturbed in their use of this matter as campaign ammunition. The charge that colored citizens to the number of 160, or to any number, were deprived of their right to vote is stoutly denied; and the facts shown in the statement of Mullen's counsel to a reporter of the Cincinnati Enquirer not only sustain the denial, but show that there never was any pretense of citizenship on the part of the arrested men except as to six of them.

From this statement it appears that Mullen, acting under an order of the Mayor to arrest all suspicious strangers, went to a notorious "crap" house on the river front which was kept by a colored man and which was reported packed with strange colored men from Kentucky. He found the report true to all appearances, the bar-room being filled at 2 o'clock in the morning of election with colored men sleeping on the tables and chairs. These were the men he arrested as suspicious persons and locked up.

Mullen was indicted for conspiracy with certain other members of the police force to prevent certain citizens from voting, and in one count was charged alone with preventing such citizens from voting. The single charge alone was examined, the prosecution withdrawing the charges of conspiracy upon Mullen's agreement to plead guilty to the sole charge, which he did, his counsel affirms, to relieve from arrest the men who had acted with him and under his orders. On the examination there was proof of citizenship in the case of six persons only, and these the witnesses in the case. The proof was their own testimony in their own and each other's behalf and the testimony of the keeper of the "crap" house where they were arrested and claimed to reside. The testimony showed, however, that their "residence" consisted in sleeping on chairs or tables in the bar-room of the house; and if there had been no plea of guilty in the case it is more than likely that even a Republican jury would have refused to find that the men were citizens of Ohio. Other testimony in the case showed that numbers of the arrested men were not citizens of Ohio, but came from Kentucky to vote illegally at the election in the former State.

If these are the facts—and most of them are undisputed, especially the last given—the President did an act of simple justice in pardoning Mullen, who was evidently sentenced to gratify a partisan sentiment which the judge either entertained on his own behalf or deliberately catered to. But even if the pardon were injudicious it is not easy to see how the Republicans can use the case to advantage in their State campaign. If they should succeed even in convicting the President of pardoning an undeserving man they will certainly succeed at the same time in convicting the Republican party in Ohio of a shameless attempt against the purity of the ballot-box. Whatever a jury might be led to believe, intelligent people outside the jury box cannot be made to believe that the scores of men who claimed their residence in a low gambling den by reason of sleeping on chair, table or floor were really citizens of Cincinnati and entitled to vote there. It looks a good deal as if the Ohio Republicans were blundering in trying to make the Mullen case an issue.—Detroit Free Press.

WILL DELVE DEEPER.

Rich Fields for Investigation Reported in the Vicinity of the Scientific Bureau.

[Washington special.]

While the Judges of the Court of Alabama Claims are answering the charges made against them of unauthorized expenditures and general extravagance, it will be well for them to explain why some of the stinting economy they have exhibited in the employment of messengers and scrubwomen didn't strike their salary list a little higher. Mr. Fessenden, the clerk of the court, gets $4,400 a year, and possibly has been able to make considerably more besides by miscellaneous fees, as his predecessor in the place did, but the clerks of other United States courts get no more than $3,500, and turn in all their fees. Mr. Walker Blaine, the assistant counsel, has drawn $3,500 per annum, but no district attorney in the country has an assistant who does so well. While the Court of Alabama Claims was blind to this fact, it was not above hiring two messengers at $400 a year, one at $360, and one at $300, notwithstanding the lowest pay the same class of men get in any other branch of the Government service is $720 a year. Economy also came out strong with the charwomen, who have been paid $8 only a month, although everywhere else in the departments they get $15. The Alabama Claims Court was manifestly resolved to show that it could economize when it wanted to do so.

The suspension of the accounts of the coast survey and of the Court of Alabama Claims is only the forerunner of a series of startling objections to be made by the new Treasury accountants. The fish commission, although under the management of so honorable a scientist as Spencer F. Baird, is drifting into trouble. Extravagant and illegal expenditures have been alleged, and are being quietly investigated, but there is no criticism or question of the value of the work performed. The geological survey and the weather bureau have also been so conducted as to justify severe scrutiny, and there are indications that the auditing officers have found accounts sadly in need of defense at the postal department. Evidently the end is not yet.

Those who are pushing the fight against the court say that a charge of the most serious nature will be brought against the court when Mr. Cleveland returns to Washington. This charge involves the integrity of the court, and, if it is sustained, will compel the summary removal of at least one of the Judges.

"If."

If Mr. Roach would construct ships with the consummate ability with which he makes assignments he would be a great and good ship-builder.—New York Graphic.

Not In the Saddle.

Murat Halstead is mistaken. The South is not in the saddle. At present it is occupying a spring wagon, and is on the high road to prosperity.—Mobile Register.

THE speech of Senator Sherman, delivered at Mount Gilead, is not a startling production. It is, indeed, no better than Foraker's speech. It is, however, the speech of Sherman, and people will want to know what this distinguished Republican leader has to say. He says nothing new; he refuses to recognize the close of the war. He preaches a threadbare sermon about Republicans not being permitted to vote in the South. He is one of the Republican "visiting statesmen" who swarmed in New Orleans when the electoral vote of that State was stolen from the Democrats by bribery of returning boards and the throwing out of Democratic votes.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MR. JOHN SHERMAN opened the Ohio campaign with a partisan screech of the true Bourbon tone. Defeat has brought to him neither wisdom, nor moderation, nor breadth of vision, nor appreciation of the changing conditions of politics. He always was a political soap-chewer, and the only difference that we notice about him this year is the fact that he gets up a more preposterous lather with a smaller piece of soap.—Philadelphia Record.

A GEORGIA SHOOTING-BEE.

An Elopement Near Atlanta Followed by a Bloody Tragedy—Three Men Killed.

[Atlanta (Ga.) special.]

A bloody tragedy occurred at a late hour this afternoon on Davis street, resulting in three men being mortally wounded and two happy families broken up. John Maxwell is a prominent fresco contractor in this city. He has a son, Matthew Maxwell, who is a carriage-builder, and three handsome and attractive daughters. The second one, Miss Ida, a beautiful brunette, for some time has been engaged, against the will of the family, to John R. Shelton, a well-known young man of this city. This afternoon Matthew Maxwell learned that at 2 o'clock Shelton would be at the family residence for the purpose of taking Miss Ida away and making her his wife. To prevent this, he went home at the hour named, and upon arriving there found the house locked up. After several ineffectual attempts to get in, he broke down the door and entered. He found Miss Ida within with her hat on, as if ready to go out. Seeing that she was determined, the brother put her in a room on the second floor, locked her up, and then left to find his father, and inform him of what was going on. Returning in ten minutes he found that his sister had escaped. Young Maxwell started out to hunt his sister, and soon learned that she had been married to Shelton by the Rev. Virgil Norcross. Continuing the search, Maxwell and his father visited the residence of Shelton's mother. As they approached they saw Shelton standing just inside the doorway. Father and son in an excited manner advanced, and Shelton met them with a large claw-hammer in his hand. The old man opened the fight, and as Shelton struck at him with the hammer the son sprung in between. The hammer came down with much force upon Matthew Maxwell's head, crushing his skull fearfully. Instantly two pistol-shots were heard, and the father and Shelton fell mortally wounded on young Maxwell's bleeding form. The father was found shot in the abdomen and Shelton in the left side. While the three men were lying on the ground in a group, with the life-blood flowing rapidly from their wounds, the bride fell on them, kissing first one and then another. The attending physicians say that young Maxwell will not live an hour, while the father and Shelton may live a day or two.

THE DEADLY GAS.

An Unlooked-for Explosion in a Pottsville Colliery Causes the Death of a Boy and Fatally Injures Five Men.

[Pottsville (Pa.) special.]

A gas explosion took place this morning in the Otto Colliery, operated by the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, one boy being killed and five men fatally injured. Eleven others were also more or less severely burned. About 450 men and boys are employed in the mine, both inside and outside. In the new level, upon which work has been prosecuted, the coal has been throwing off sulphur and this rose to the upper level, where a gang was at work. Not long before the explosion Patrick Kilrain and his son came out with naked lights, but noticed no gas. A short time afterward several men came out, and as soon as the door was opened there was a terrific explosion. John Lynn was the name of the lad killed. The fatally injured were: Thomas Lynn, 27, single; burned about the hands and face. Robert Lynn, 24; burned on breast, head, and arms. John Graham, 30, married, with wife and two children; burned about the body. Alexander Frew, 30, married, with wife and two children; badly burned on head and body. John Smith, single, 24; burned in the face and on the body. The father of the Lynn boys was killed by a fall of coal in 1876. The explosion created more than ordinary surprise, because this colliery was considered more than usually safe. Many of the men engaged were employed on new levels, and were not taking out coal. The force of the explosion was something fearful, and resembled the report of an immense quantity of gunpowder.

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Circular from the General Land Office.

[Washington telegram.]

A circular has been issued by the Land Office modifying the former circular issued by that bureau prescribing the rights of railroad companies in cutting timber from public lands. The circular states that timber can be cut only during the time of construction of the railroad and immediately adjacent to the line of road under construction. No more timber must be cut than is actually required for the construction of the road-bed, bridges, culverts, etc., and such timber cannot be cut for fuel, station-houses, sheds, and other structures. The trees cut must not be less than eight inches in diameter, and none but authorized agents of railroad companies will be allowed to cut timber. Railroad companies are not authorized to sell timber so cut to other companies or individuals. The companies are prohibited from cutting timber on public mineral lands, Indian reservations, or public parks. The right of a company to cut timber within a section ceases at the expiration of five years after the definite location of the section. This circular materially modifies the old circular in limiting the territory within which timber can be cut to the immediate vicinity of the line under construction, as it has been the practice to cut the timber anywhere within the terminal limits of the road, and another important modification is the limitation of the time within which the companies may cut timber.

MURDEROUS APACHES

Pursued by Mexican Troops—Soldiers Killed.

[Tucson (Arizona) dispatch.]

Advices from Oposwia, Sonora, say that August 30 the Mexican regulars were following up the track of Apaches. Three of their soldiers strayed away and stumbled on the Apaches at Rancheria, near Sierra Blanca. Two of them were killed, but the other escaped. The Mexican troops heard the firing and went up. The Indians evacuated. It is said that sixty Indians were in the band. It is estimated by the Mexicans that there are 150 Apaches in Sonora. Col. de Gourro has 400 regulars in pursuit. Other forces of Mexican troops are moving slowly after the hostiles.

POSTMASTERS.

The Changes That Have Taken Place Throughout the Country.

[Washington special.]

Since the present administration took charge of the reins of Government no harder-worked officials have been found in Washington than those employed in the appointment branch of the Postoffice Department. During the last six months nearly one-fourth of the Postmasterships of the first, second, and third classes, whose commissions are signed by the President, have been changed, while over one-eighth of the nearly 50,000 fourth-class and cross-roads offices, the commissions for which are signed by the Postmaster General, have now a new Postmaster. The records of the department show that the following changes in Postmasters have taken place in the States and Territories named:

State.	Presidential.	Fourth class.	State.	Presidential.	Fourth class.
Alabama	13	121	Missouri	20	351
Alaska	....	1	Montana	1	16

Michigan	22	141	Wyoming	3	1
Minnesota	10	46
Mississippi	9	108	Totals	521	6309

The number of Presidential offices in the country is 6,309, while the fourth-class offices aggregate 48,421. The table shows that the greater number of changes thus far have been made in Ohio, where the number is 641. New York comes next with 598; then Indiana with 508; Virginia with 455; and Pennsylvania with 449.

LUMBERMEN FRIGHTENED.

Some $16,000,000 Worth of Public Lands Declared Public Domain.

[Washington dispatch.]

Secretary Lamar has rendered a decision in regard to the Ontonagon land grant, which is calculated to make a commotion among a number of prominent capitalists in the West. For several years efforts have been made in one guise and another to get a confirmation by act of Congress for the title to a large amount of lands in Northern Michigan. This land was withdrawn from sale because it was granted to the Ontonagon & Brule River Railroad. In spite of repeated directions from the General Land Office the land agents at the Marquette Land Office sold these lands right along to lumbermen at $1.25 per acre.

For years these purchasers have paid taxes on these lands. Settlers who could defy the purchasers went and built houses and cleared farms on the tract, trusting to time to give them title. The lumbermen claim they bought in good faith and should be given patents. The last bill before Congress proposed to confirm titles only where there was no counter-claim by settlers. The property is worth from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000, and covers a number of mines and several fine, growing villages. The question of title was argued recently by ex-Senator McDonald for the settlers, and Assistant Secretary Jenks wrote the decision which Secretary Lamar has, after careful consideration, approved. It simply upsets the cash-entry men and throws into the public domain the greater portion of the land in question.

NOT SNAKES, BUT FIRE.

A Liquor-Crazed Man Sees an Imaginary Fire and Leaps from a Window, Fatally Injuring Himself.

[Boston special.]

Peter McCary, who had been drinking, awoke about 1 o'clock this morning with the idea that the house was on fire and that it was his duty to save the lives of the inmates. After having conducted a number of imaginary persons to a window and sent them to the ground, as he imagined, by a safety chute, he decided to save himself in the same manner. His wife, by this time being awakened by the noise, was horrified to see him making preparations to dive out of the window, head first. With a bound she landed upon the floor and succeeded in grasping one of her husband's legs just as he shot out of the window. Shrieking for help, she still hung on, but before the arrival of aid her strength gave out and she was obliged to let go her hold, her husband falling to the sidewalk below, where he was picked up unconscious and conveyed to the city hospital. On account of the terrible injuries received, there are but slight hopes of his recovery.

COURT OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

The Salary of the Government Counsel Stopped.

[Washington telegram.]

First Controller Durham to-day stopped a requisition to pay the salary of J. A. J. Creswell, Government counsel before the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, for the month of August, until it is settled that there is any balance due him. The First Controller takes the ground that Mr. Creswell is not entitled to a fixed salary of $8,000 per annum, but that that sum is named as the limit of the fees to be allowed him for the trial of cases. He says that the law organizing the court provided that the Government counsel should receive a reasonable compensation for each case tried, and that subsequent laws limited such compensation to $8,000 per annum. The court, however, he says, neglected to fix the amount of a "reasonable compensation," and has illegally treated that item as a fixed salary.

The Base-Ball Championship.

The race for the base-ball championship is becoming interesting to the lovers of the game. The other clubs are so far in the rear that they are out of the question, and the contest has narrowed down to the New York and Chicago Clubs, with the latter slightly in the lead in games won, but with this advantage about offset by the fact that the Chicago's future games are with stronger clubs than New York has to play.

A DEADLY DESTROYER.

A Section of Ohio Devastated by a Cyclone, Many Persons Perishing.

Washington Court House and Bloomingburg Almost Wiped Out of Existence.

[Springfield (Ohio) special.]

A terrible cyclone struck Washington Court House, a city of 4,000 inhabitants, twenty-five miles from here, at 8 o'clock this evening, and almost swept it from the earth. The storm came from the northwest, and broke upon the town very suddenly, carrying everything before it. The tornado whirled up Court street, the main business thoroughfare, and ruined almost every business block in it—at least forty or fifty in all.

Hardly a private residence in the town escaped, fully four hundred buildings going down. The Baptist, Presbyterian, and Catholic churches all suffered the common fate. The Ohio Southern, Panhandle, Narrow-Gauge, and Midland Railroad stations were blown to smithereens, and every building in the vicinity was carried away, making ingress or egress almost impossible.

As every wire within a circle of two miles is down, it is utterly impossible to get accurate details of this catastrophe. The only reports that can be had are through an operator who tapped a wire two miles west of the town, and is sitting in a heavy rainstorm to work his instruments. The panic-stricken people were taken completely unawares, and fled from the tumbling buildings in every direction through the murky darkness. A mad frenzy seemed to seize them, and they hurried hither and thither in their wild distraction, little knowing whither they were fleeing. After the whirlwind, which lasted about ten minutes, a heavy rainfall set in, which still continues unabated at this writing.

As soon as a few of the cooler heads recovered their senses searching parties were organized, and the sad work of looking for the dead began. So far fifteen bodies have been recovered from the debris of various ruined buildings. It is probable as many more will be found before morning. The glimmer of lanterns procured from farm houses in the vicinity and from the few houses left standing is the only light they have to work by. Two or three bodies have been stumbled upon in the middle of the street, where they were stricken down by flying bricks or timbers. The cellars of houses and every sort of refuge were filled with shivering people, huddling together in the vain attempt to keep warm. One baby in arms has died from exposure.

Advices from Bloomingburg say that town was struck by a funnel-shaped cloud and almost entirely demolished. Three or four persons were killed.

INDIANA'S SENSATION.

Certain Trustees Issue Illegal Township Orders to the Extent of $100,000.

[Indianapolis telegram.]

The discovery that certain Township Trustees of Daviess County, this State, had issued illegal township orders to the extent of $100,000 or more, and then fled to Canada, has caused much excitement in business circles here, where many of the orders were disposed of, and there is a well-founded belief that the swindle has been extensively practiced in other parts of the State. It is already known that such spurious obligations have been issued in Posey, Fountain, Vermillion, and Shelby Counties, and at the present time it is impossible to estimate their extent, although it is probably hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Investigation made to-day develops that R. B. Pollard, until recently a resident of Indianapolis, is at the head of the scheme, which was both original and daring. He was agent of various school furnishing houses in Chicago and elsewhere, and his business was almost exclusively with township trustees. With some of these he made a conspiracy by which they were to issue to him township orders in large amounts in alleged payment for school-supplies, and these he was to sell, dividing the proceeds with them. As he stood well financially, having a constant balance in bank of from $10,000 to $20,000, and the orders bore on their face evidences of their genuineness, he had comparatively little trouble in disposing of them, especially as he sold them at from 10 to 15 per cent. discount, and they bore 8 per cent. interest. They were sold principally to Eastern capitalists, although Pollard disposed of $4,360 worth of them to a diamond and jewelry house, said to be Coon & Co., of Cincinnati, for diamonds, and $2,300 to D. Van Wee, of this city, besides unknown amounts to the Third National Bank of Greensburg, and other national banks at North Vernon. In addition to this he paid for a large consignment of school furniture to a Chicago house with them, receiving his commission for them in cash. He and his family left here last week, ostensibly for Boston, but recent advices say that he is at Linn, Ont. There is a rumor, which cannot be traced down to definite sources, that before leaving he borrowed $20,000 in cash from a city bank, putting up $35,000 of these illegal orders as collateral security. The swindle is the most extensive one known in the history of the State, and its full extent is not yet known.

A CURIOUS INCIDENT.

A Dove Visits a Preacher in Church and Finally Alights on His Head.

[New Haven (Conn.) special.]

A curious incident occurred while services were being held in the Congregational Church in East Haven, a village five miles from this city, yesterday. As the pastor, Rev. Mr. Clark, gave out his text a dove, which had made its way into the church unperceived, flew down from its perch in the gallery and alighted on the large Bible from which the minister was reading. The bird remained near the pulpit during the rest of the service, and at its close hovered to the pastor's head. It was afterward discovered that the bird belonged to a small boy, and for some reason or other followed its owner to the church. The preacher's text was, "I saw the spirit descending from above like a dove and it rested upon Him."

Notes and News.

Traverse City claims 4,000 population.

The Grand Traverse county fair is to be held at Traverse City, Oct. 6, 7, 8, and 9.

It is gratifying to see the apparent increase of business of democratic papers throughout the state.

S. W. Fowler has sold the Manistee Standard to P. Madison. Mr. Madison will publish an independent paper.

A highly interesting serial story entitled "annual tax sales" is now running in nearly all of our republican exchanges.

The Cadillac publishing company will begin the publication of a redhot administration paper about October 1. Judge Fallass is president of the company.

The lighthouse keeper at Pelee Island is 70 years old. He has faithfully performed his duties in caring for that light since 1848 and has saved forty-nine lives.—Inland Marine.

Bids were opened at the Treasury Department, Thursday for the construction of life-saving stations at the following named places: Frankfort, Mich.; Pentwater, Mich.; White River, Mich.; and South Haven, Mich. M. A. McGowan of Washington, D. C. was the lowest bidder.—Inland Marine.

A Cleveland paper says: "The people of this country are very tired of John Sherman's sniveling about alleged outrages in the south. The worst outrage ever committed in the south, was the one that John Sherman was concerned in, when the vote of Louisiana was stolen, for Hayes, in 1876."

The heavy storm this week damaged the docks at Menominee as follows: Detroit Lumber Company dock, $1,000; three docks of Kirby, Carpenter & Co., at one of which the Goodrich boats land, $3,500; Leisen & Heines' dock and ice-house, $1,500; Island Lumber Company dock, $2,500. The total damage done was but little less than $10,000.—Inland Marine.

For months past the Harbor Springs Independent has been giving their village council and fire department "particular fits" for doing nothing, and last week the council got in their revenge in great shape by appointing C. S. Hampton, editor of the Independent chief of the department. After reviewing the previous efforts to establish a department, and accepting the appointment of the council, the editor says: "There's no money and no glory in the position of chief of a volunteer fire department, and we shall not hold it more than two or three months at the most. But so long as we are chief there's going to be a head to the department—if it is a wooden head. We'll run the machine while we are at it, and will then be glad to give place to some more competent man. Inasmuch as we have given others fits for their neglect and blunders we are willing all should have a fair chance at us; and if the Republican don't do us up in good shape we offer the use of our own columns to any one who has any comments, criticisms or suggestions to make."

Improvement in Business.

The current of trade the past week gives continued assurance of the steady but no less marked improvement in the general business of the country. The New York bank statement shows there was an increase of over $4,700,000 in loans, while the falling off in deposits is evidence that capital is coming into use more freely.

The textile mills at the east seem to be making both ends meet, which for a year or two past they have not been able to do. Some of the woolen mills are too busy to accept further orders for immediate execution, and the transactions in wool are larger than ever before. The range of grain values has been lower, and farmers are reported holding their grain back in the Northwest in the pretty well grounded belief that they will soon receive better prices for their product. The lumber trade continues to improve, the advance in prices is well sustained, and there is a fair and increasing distribution in stocks.

In the south the outlook is particularly cheering. Splendid grain crops have been gathered, and the cotton crop, despite some drawbacks, promises to be a large one, affording a reasonable guarantee of a fair business for the fall and winter months.

The Chicago Tribune says there is an increased demand for best grades of foundry and forge pig iron and a decided hardening in prices, but common grades remain as they were. Bar iron is firm at former quotations and in increased demand; plate iron is firm and advancing; sheet iron is more active and prices are a shade better. Structural iron, especially for bridges, is in greater demand, and bridge builders are in receipt of many new orders. Prices are unchanged, but firm. In oil and gas pipes, especially for natural gas companies, there is great activity and prices have greatly advanced. Nails are in better demand. Steel rails have advanced from $27 in July in Pennsylvania to $29 and $30 at the close of August. We know of several thousand tons of standard sections that were sold last week by a Pennsylvania company for delivery in November and December, at $30 at the mill. The mills in Pennsylvania and in other states are well supplied with orders to December, and some of them into next year. Inquiries are numerous. To sum up, there is a revival of confidence, an increase in the consumption of nearly all manufactured products, and a strong tendency to higher prices.

In 1882 there was a cash expenditure of $350,000,000 in railroad construction, and in the five years ended Dec. 31, 1883, over fotry thousand miles of new road was built, involving a cash outlay of at least $1,200,000,000, or an average of $240,000,000 per year. Last year only about $70,000,000 was thus expended, and in the reaction from the period of unusual activity it is estimated that fully 100,000 persons were thrown out of employment in this line alone. Business depression was inevitable, and the inevitable has been fully realized. But the worst seems to be now past. There are enormous maturing crops in all sections of the country, and business is already feeling their impetus. Railroad construction is again reviving, and under this stimulus an improvement in the iron industry has set in with a suddenness which is something remarkable. From the east there is reported "improvement of the very healthiest character, viz., steady and increasing demand without any undue excitement in prices; orders are numerous, the demand for steel unprecedented, mills running to their full capacity, and their output bespoke for a year in advance." From the south come similar reports with tidings of bounteous crops and overtaxed freight facilities, the projection of new furnace plants, and the extension or completion of railroads suspended by the depression.

Chicago Daily News: The evidences of a sound and healthy business revival are multiplying on every hand, not alone in this country but abroad. In England the iron industry, which has been almost paralyzed, is aroused to a state of activity to which it has been long a stranger; men are working on full time, many furnaces are relit which have been idle for months, and it is confidently believed that the decided improvement which already marks many lines of trade is the beginning of another era of general prosperity. Our neighboring dominion of Canada shares in the improvement, and a shrewd observer notes that it was not the late Wall street boom in stocks which is now dotting the Canadian rivers with logs where there was scarcely one to be seen on the streams a year ago, while the mills are again becoming active after a lethargy of nearly eighteen months. Throughout the United States the bank clearings show a constant gain, both as compared with previous weeks and with the corresponding week of 1884. The average increase in this last comparison is over 12 per cent.

John Sherman's Fallacies.

In his recent intemperate harangue Mr. John Sherman flies in the face of acknowledged facts. He charges that the democrats, and especially the southern democrats who have been restored to power, "hope practically to reverse all the results of the war." And he regards it as "vital and necessary" that the northern states should "unite again," as they united in the days of the war, to prevent such a wrong.

While Mr. Sherman utters these incendiary appeals, the world is witnessing the practical refutation of the long continued republican slander that the democratic party was incapable of governing without destroying the business interests of the country, and that the "solid south" only desired democratic success in order to pay rebel claims, to pension rebel soldiers and to destroy the constitutional provisions resulting from the triumph of the Union cause. The best reply to the senator's sophistry is found in the improved character of the government under a democratic president; in the economy, simplicity and honesty that have taken the place of prodigality, ostentation and fraud, and in the faithful and intelligent assistance in the work of reform rendered by those members of the cabinet and other official who have been selected from the southern states.

Mr. Sherman is as unfortunate in his historical allusions as in his assaults on the "solid south." Referring to the return to government positions of confederates who were in rebellion against the government a few years ago, Mr. Sherman says: "This strange turn in events has but one example in history, and that was the restoration of Charles II. after the brilliant but brief protectorate of Cromwell, and, like that restoration, is a reproach to the civilization of the age."

In this singular statement Mr. Sherman likens the confederates to the regular English government which was temporarily suspended when Charles I was deposed, and restored when Charles II. came to the throne, and the government of the United States to the brief protectorate of Cromwell. Such a bungling comparison ought not to have been made by a person of Mr. Sherman's intelligence in a carefully prepared speech. Notwithstanding the difference in their sentiments and objects, the confederates might more properly be likened to Cromwell, who for a time disturbed the regular government of England and threatened its overthrow. Cromwell's object was to strengthen liberty. The object of the confederates was to strengthen slavery. Yet the confederates were no doubt as conscientious as the protector in their belief in the justice of their cause.—N. Y. World.

Where is the Clean Sweep?

Before President Lincoln had been in office six weeks the victors had all the spoils worth taking. Not a democratic postmaster with a salary of more than four hundred dollars was anywhere to be found, and from that day until the 4th of March last democrats have not been permitted to hold an appointive federal office. There seemed nothing extraordinary or out of course in the prediction that in the event of democratic success there would be what is called a clean sweep. Mr. Candidate Cleveland's pledge of faithfulness to the dominant idea of civil service reform, which has been making millions of converts in this country, was received in many quarters with a smile of incredulity. The new administration has been in operation six months, and there has been no clean sweep—there has been no clean sweep at all.

In the 2,323 presidential postoffices there have been but 487 changes, and a large percentage of these were appointments made to fill vacancies created by death, resignation or expiration of term. There are 48,421 post offices of fourth class, that is, offices to which the masters are appointed, not by and with the advice of the senate upon the nomination of the president, but by the postoffice department. In these there have been but 6,400 changes, many of these appointments being made to fill vacancies arising from ordinary causes.

It was supposed that an extraordinary push for places would be overwhelming; that the president would be compelled to succumb to an unprecedented rush. The record does not bear out this suggestion. The great mass of federal employments are still enjoyed by men appointed as republican. If these places were still regarded as spoils it might be said that they continue in the possession of a captured enemy, but they are not so treated. The true doctrine largely obtains. Public office is regarded not as party rewards and incentives, but as a public trust.—Chicago Herald.

Good Habits.

There are many little matters which enter into good manners, which must be so learned as to be habitual, if we practice them at all. For example, manners at table involve certain forms of eating, the disposal of hands, the observance of acts of politeness, all of which should be constantly practiced, in order to become natural. So in general society, the art of being agreeable involves great delicacy and tact. Too much or too boisterous conversation; a frigid or uninterested manner; lack of agreement in the discussion of topics, the assertion of personal peculiarities, and much else, are entirely out of order.

The whirligig of time is bringing its revenges. Geo. W. Childs has made the statement that Gen. Grant conceded the rightful election of Mr. Tilden, and promoted the electoral commission because he supposed it would insure the triumph of justice and the inauguration of Mr. Tilden. More than this the statement of Mr. Childs is credited by all of the Philadelphia papers, republican as well as democratic, where Mr. Childs has lived so long and is so well known. The Philadelphia Call, a republican organ, says that the revelation shows "that Gen. Grant was the real promoter (of the electoral commission) and that his course was taken in belief that Mr. Tilden was elected, but also from motives of the highest patriotism." The statement of Mr. Childs is an important contribution to the political literature of the times, as well as affording a striking illustration of the change in republican sentiment on the question of the legality of Hayes' election and term of office.

GEO. W. MILLER.

How Barrios Fell.

Theodore Pasclike, Barrios' military engineer in the expedition against the Salvadoreans, writes to friends in New York giving an account of the battle of Chalchuapa, in which Barrios was killed. The power of the ambitions leader over the Guatemalan soldiery is shown in the few concluding lines of the recital:

"The dawn of the next day found our camp all up and alive with expectant men, and all felt that the day would be somewhat 'hot,' but all were in good spirits. The artillery opened fire again, but with a little more vigor than the day before. The circle of our troops around the enemy was made more perfect, and the reserves were put into position. Between 9 and 10 a. m. an officer came into headquarters and told Barrios that a certain batallion refused to go into the fight under the leadership of their commander. Here Barrios made the great mistake of his life. He left headquarters for the purpose of making a speech to these troops. In the heat of speech-making, in a moment of enthusiasm he forgot himself, forgot his country, his great work, his cause, and asked them if they would come with him. Of course the answer was one 'hurrah' and 'Viva!' and he then and there opened the battle in person and led this battalion, took a couple of trenches, but fell a victim, pierced by two bullets. The battle opened all around, and our troops began to close in on the enemy, but as one battalion after the other learned that their 'Patron' had fallen they became demoralized, withdrew and gave up the already won battle. Two hours later, when the fact became generally known, our whole army was demoralized. Some of the best disciplined battalions kept up the fight until late in the afternoon, but ineffectually. With Barrios the whole heart and soul, as well as the head and idea, had fallen. When late in the afternoon I saw that all was lost, and that nothing could be done, I also went backward and right straight with the body of our chief to the capital, where I arrived again on April 5. What we all have lost in him I do not need to make any comments on."

Antiquity of Natural Gas.

Natural gas is as ancient as the universe. It was known to man in prehistoric times, we must suppose, for the very earliest historical reference to the Magi of Asia records them as worshiping the eternal fires which then blazed, and still blaze, in fissures of the mountain-heights overlooking the Caspian Sea. Those records appertain to a period at least 600 years before the birth of Christ; but the Magi must have lived and worshiped long anterior to that time.

Zoroaster, reputed founder of the Parsee sect, is placed contemporary with the prophet Daniel, from 2500 to 600 B. C.; and, although Daniel has been doubted, and Zoroaster may never have seen the light, the fissures of the Caucasus have been flaming since the earliest authentic records.

The Parsees (Persians) did not originally worship fire. They believed in two great powers—the Spirit of Light, or Good, and the Spirit of Darkness, or Evil. Subsequent to Zoroaster, when the Persian Empire rose to its greatest power and importance, overspreading the west to the shores of the Caspian and beyond, the tribes of the Caucasus suffered political subjugation; but the creed of the Magi, founded upon the eternal flame-altars of the mountains, proved sufficiently vigorous to transform the Parseeism of the conquerors to the fire-worship of the conquered.

About the beginning of the seventh century of the Christian era, the Grecian Emperor Heraclius overturned the fire-altars of the Magi at Baku, the chief city on the Caspian, but the fire-worshipers were not expelled from the Caucasus until the Mohammedans subjugated the Persian Empire, when they were driven into the Rangoon, on the Irrawaddy, in India, one of the most noted petroleum-producing districts of the world.—George Wardman, in Popular Science Monthly for June.

Attention is called to the list of improvements in Boyne City, on the last page. We hope to give a similar report of business in East Jordan next week.

Chas. Swallow has painted his house old gold, with dark brown trimmings making it stand out conspicuously among the houses on the south terrace.

W. W. Fuller, of Boyne City, is one of the "get there" class of builders. He is energetic and pushing, and his work compares favorably with the best in town.

Frank Shaubut and L. Whitmoyer were the only representatives from Baxter post in attendance at the reunion at Reed City last week. They returned home Friday morning.

The Sunday School at Black's school house, having been so successful during the three months past, it is resolved to hold it for three months more. All are invited that can come.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken will preach an anniversary sermon at the Congregational church next Sunday morning. The occasion will complete the third year of the organization of the society.

H. P. Parmelee and Chas. Kelly finished grading the bank along the government work of the upper channel this week. When the grass grows next spring, this will be one of the most attractive lots on the resort.

On inquiry since our report of new buildings was published last week, we find a large number of improvements and additions exceeding our limit of $100, which had not been reported. We shall try to give them all in the near future.

While digging down the bank in front of Breezy Point cottage last week, H. P. Parmelee found two large pieces of pre-historic pottery. That spot was evidently headquarters of some of the ancient inhabitants of this region.

Rev. J. T. Iddings closes his ministerial labors for this conference year next Sunday. During the two years just closed he has worked hard, and the number added to his charge is flattering when all the elements are considered.

The Dr. Bosanko Med. Co., whose advertisements may be found in this paper, have an advertising agent who is a hard man to contract with. One inducement offered is that the company pays the price at the time agreed upon, in New York exchange, without any quibbles or technical delays, if the printer has done his part. With the recollection of past experience still fresh, we signed the contract with some misgivings. Last Saturday we were very much surprised to receive a draft for the amount due on first quarter, over a week before the expiration of the term. Not all patent medicine houses deal this way.

J. Milo Eaton has moved back and rebuilt the foundation of the tenement occupied by W. C. Mears, on Clinton street, and has graded and fitted up the front yard, repainted the house, and made other improvements about the premises.

A sensational story of rape, and escape of the perpetrator, comes from East Jordan this week. The story of the escape as reported here is very damaging to an attorney and justice of the peace interested in the case, but we hope to know more about it later on.

Hemmings & Hogan, painters, found more work than they could do, and W. F. Orrell has been taken into the firm. They will continue to take all orders that come, and promise usual excellent work with "quick time." A sample of their work may be seen on R. A. Emrey's new house.

When Fred Smith came down town after dinner last Saturday his face contained more than the usual good-natured smile—caused by the safe arrival of a visitor at his house that morning, who will remain 21 years, more or less, and who may sometime be a bank cashier like his father.

It is estimated that there is now at Boyne City, only about two cargoes of wood, one of cedar, and one of bark, and at Advance but one of bark. These articles of produce are sold off closer this year, than before in some time, and the intention now is to get out greater quantities than ever the coming winter.

There is little satisfaction in trying to make gardens or keep clean dooryards, when cattle are allowed to run at large in the streets, breaking down fences and destroying so much property as they do now. It is a question whether enough would not be saved every year in gardens and broken fences to pay all the pasturage necessary to keep cattle out of the street.

Chas. Kelly gave such excellent satisfaction as warden of the Charlevoix resort last winter, that he has been engaged for the ensuing year. So far as we can learn, nothing was stolen or even disturbed in any of the cottages of the resort. All the work entrusted to Mr. Kelly's care received the thorough attention which it deserved, and the fact of his reappointment speaks well for his management.

The brush has been trimmed out of the fine grove of evergreens on the point in front of King's and McKay's new cottages, and the ground leveled so as to make a vast improvement in appearance. The east slope of the bank has been terraced and sodded, and the level portions will be sown with grass seed so as to make a nice lawn for next season. These two cottages, with their fine surroundings, are valuable additions to the resort property.

These figures and letters following the name on the address label indicate that the subscription expires with the number for this week,—17th of September, 1885. The first figures indicate the day of month and the last figure the year in which the subscription expires. A little attention to this will keep the subscriber's account with the printer always before him. When a payment is made, if the proper credit does not appear on the next label, the subscriber will confer a favor by calling our attention at once, that all mistakes may be corrected.

Why Some People Fail to get their Paper.

Mr. Henry Wade called for his JOURNAL. The clerk understood the name as Reed, looked, and found none addressed Henry Reed. We happened to be present and called out the correct name, knowing that the paper ought to be there. The clerk looked for Wade and of course found the paper. To avoid such mistakes, call the name distinctly, and be sure that it is understood.

ONE OF THE INVALIDS.

E. M. PARMELEE, Dear Sir:—I have been taking your Dyspepsia, Diabetes and Liver Cure for some time past and have received more benefit from it than from all of the $500 worth of Doctor's medicines that I have used in the last few years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired all the time but now I can work all day without fatigue. Would not be without it in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world.

Yours, ROBERT A. LOUGHSIKYE, JR.,
Somers Lane, Pa.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

BY H. H. NEWHALL.

Night sailed resplendent in her jeweled robes
Above the silence of the wooded knolls
And o'er the crystal sheen of forest lakes
That gracefully indent the land once trod
By the swart Sioux in homicidal bands.
The quiet seemed intense, as though, with stealth,
Again the hideous painted demons stalked
To midnight carnage. Melancholy owls
The dusky ear of even jarred with notes
Identical with those which echoed there
A hundred years before. Yet, 'twixt the marge
Of fairest lakes and sainted Anthony's
Propulsive tide, there lay, in pomp of wealth,
A city vying, with its thousand lights
Made dazzling by the alchemy of heaven,
The firmament itself.

O change sublime!
O courage rare! To bear it with puny might
All nature in her savagery intrenched,
And from the nue mal combat snatch a prize
Like this. At every step the wondering mind
Wakes to new loveliness and finds a joy
In each fresh conquest of the civil hand.
No longer Minnehaha laughs alone,
But thousands mingle merry glee with hers,
And stun the groves with echoes far less fierce
Than when the pulsing war whoop shrieked dismay.
Proud Minnetonka's verdurous shores are gemmed
With clustered habitations reared by wealth
Hard won from out the snowy piles that feed
The millions of the world.

June, 1885.

ONLY A FARMER.

"I don't like the country, and I never would have come here but for the chance of becoming Mrs. Allen Waters—that's the truth."

And Miss Ada Atherton flounced into an easy chair, and prepared for a fit of the sulks.

Her mother looked up, amused at the frankness of her youngest daughter; as for her eldest, Dora, she sank back in her seat with a pained blush on her dark cheek.

"I am sure, Ada, you need not complain. You have a far easier time living at the Hollyhocks than either mother or I," she said.

"Why everything need be so hateful, I don't see," grumbled Miss Ada, frowning under her flaxen curls. "If father hadn't died now, he might have run along for years, until Dora and I were suitably married, and kept up appearances so that we could have made good matches. Now everybody knows we are poor."

"And everybody knows we are honest!" cried Dora, who still trembled at mention of her dead father. "We settled everything as honorably as possible; and came here to live, glad of Uncle Alfred's offer—at least I was."

"And I am sure I was, my dear," said Mrs. Atherton, with a sigh. "I am thankful to have a roof over my head in my old age."

"Uncle Alfred was absorbed in floriculture, and made a pet of the place for years. It's lovely here, I think," said Dora, leaning to look out into the bright summer garden.

"I don't care for flowers," returned Ada, moodily. "I can't make myself happy with hoes and watering pots. I did think it would be better than this, with the Waters' place opposite. But Allen Waters is away, and the gates shut against us. In fact, there is nobody here."

"You calculated a great deal on the society of a man you don't know in the least," said Dora, returning to her sewing.

"I'm not in the least like you, Dora, with your notions of congeniality and similar tastes," burst forth Ada. "I've a taste for comfort and luxury, and I could love any man who would give them to me. Besides," somewhat moderating her violence, as her mother looked annoyed at her extreme statement, "you know we have always heard what a fine fellow Allen Waters was!"

Dora said no more. Her bright, dark face burned with indignation. She was ashamed of Ada, grieved, yet secretly tried to make some excuses for her sister.

Perhaps the Hollyhocks was dull beyond endurance to Ada. They had never been alike. It was wrong, perhaps, to blame her too much. Yet she still shuddered at Ada's unwomanly words.

Day by day Ada continued her complaints of the Hollyhocks. She was miserable herself, and she certainly made everybody else so. While Dora was busy as a bee, Ada moped herself almost sick.

The little old phaeton which Dora had driven in as a child was left the family, and, at her mother's suggestion, Dora hired a mild, fat Dobbin of a neighboring farmer one day and invited Ada to a drive.

"There's lovely scenery along the valley road. It will make a little change for you, Ada. Besides, I've a bit of news to liven you up."

Ada turned languidly.

"Allen Walters is coming home," said Dora, with a faintly mischievous smile.

After a moment's thought Ada rose, arrayed herself in her prettiest driving costume, and entered the carriage.

"Drive past the Waters' estate, Dora. What a fat, lazy horse! There is no fun in driving if you can't drive in style. There, now, see the Waters' place. It's all I expected it to be. There'd be some comfort in living if one could be mistress there. It's no better marriage than I ought to have made if papa had not failed."

And, with discontented lips and an arrogant toss of the head, Ada was driven past a hay-wagon in which was a man in his shirt-sleeves.

He glanced at the young ladies with frank curiosity.

"Did you bow, Dora? Impudent fellow! How he stared! Country folks!" sneered Ada.

"I bowed because he bowed to us, Ada. You would not have me repel such a mere civility. He is probably some one who knows us, though we are strangers here."

"I detest such people."

"I don't think I could detest any one who wore such white shirt-sleves, and looked so comfortable under a broad straw hat this hot day," laughed Dora, carelessly.

But the very next moment Ada was thankful for the existence of "such people," for the phaeton broke down, and, with a dismal scream, she was tipped from her seat and landed among the roadside buttercups and clover.

The mild, fat old horse instantly stopped. Dora looked anxiously about for help. No house was near. She looked appealingly up and down the road; then—oh, gladly!—she saw the hay-wagon, the straw hat, and the white shirt-sleeves drawing near.

"You have broken down," said the owner, heartily, jumping down.

"Thank you, yes. The carriage seems coming all to pieces," said Dora, still trembling from fright. "Could you do anything to help us? I should be, oh! so much obliged to you."

"Yes," said Ada, shaking the dust off her silk skirts. "We are the Misses Atherton. We will pay you, of course."

The man bent to examine the axle-tree. His side face was toward Dora, but she plainly saw him smile.

"It's not so very bad, then?" she said, anxiously.

"It might be fixed, I think, so you could get home safely; but I haven't much time. In fact, I'm in a great hurry."

"What is your time worth to you?" asked Ada, with the air she had once seen a millionaire use when speaking to some workmen he was about to employ.

"Sometimes more, sometimes less," answered the man, with the same quizzical smile.

But he had procured a cord from his pocket, and, with deft fingers, began mending the broken trace. Then he produced some nails, and with a stone pounded away vigorously beneath the carriage.

"There! by driving carefully you will be able to reach home safely," he said, at last, rising.

There was something in his composed manner and distinct enunciation which made Ada stare for an instant; but she could see little beneath the broad straw hat but a curling black beard, a tanned cheek, and two piercing eyes.

"What is to pay?"

"Nothing."

He offered a hand to help Dora into the carriage.

She seated herself and drew out a little embroidered portemonnaie.

"I beg your pardon," she said, earnestly, "but you must let me pay you. You said you were in a hurry; we have taken your time, and you have done us a great service. I have nothing but a half-sovereign. Pray take it. I am sorry it is so little," blushing, as she tendered him a shining coin.

Again the quizzical smile and the eyes—they had a world of meaning in them, those piercing dark eyes under the hat-brim. Dora felt her heart thrill strangely.

It relieved her greatly that the man extended his hand and received the money.

"Thank you," he said, quietly.

"What may your name be?" asked Ada, who had seated herself unassisted, "and your occupation? You are quite handy," patronizingly.

The man laughed outright, a low, mellow laugh.

"My name does not matter; I am a farmer. Good-day, ladies."

He stepped back, lifting his hat, smiling again at the look of consternation upon the features of the girls at the grace and the face the movement revealed.

A kingly brow shaded by close-clipped yet beautiful hair, a white forehead, eyes dauntlessly bright, with scorn and a smile in them.

The phaeton turned one way, the hay-wagon another.

"Whoever thought that he looked like that, under that old hat, in a hay-cart?" said Ada, breathlessly. "Who can it be? How provoking! He was a right down gentleman, though he said he was only a farmer."

Poor Ada! Her mortification had just begun.

That evening, with silk hat doffed from the handsome head, faultlessly arrayed, Mr. Allen Waters presented himself in the little parlor of the Hollyhocks, and, introducing himself, begged leave to inquire if the young ladies had reached home quite safely.

Ada apologized quite eagerly and tried to be sweet, but Mr. Waters seemed to have eyes only for Dora's brunette face.

He came again and again to the Hollyhocks, and at last one day boldly declared himself Dora's lover.

"You have known me but such a little while, you don't know half my faults," murmured she.

"I don't care if I don't," he laughed. "I love you, and have loved you ever since you offered me that half-sovereign so charmingly, blushing and ashamed of the small sum. Why, you little darling, do you know your appealing dark eyes kept me from meeting a man who would have paid me a hundred pounds that day?"

"And you never got it?" cried Dora, aghast.

"No; but that does not matter. I have your half-sovereign, and had rather have it."

Such an incorrigible fellow as that of course had his own way, and Dora became Mrs. Allen Waters. She loves her husband because, under all circumstances, she finds him a gentleman. And Ada is in the sulks.

TRUE quietness of heart is got by resisting our passions, not by obeying them.

"I DON'T think freckles are so very bad," said a lovely girl. "I never object to seeing them on a rival's face."

IF you want enemies, excel others; if you want friends, let others excel you.

Keeping Old Letters.

A plea for the keeping of old letters contains these sentiments:

"In the stilly night, ere slumber's chain doth bind, an inspiration unbidden seemingly guides the pen while those exquisite thoughts that come trooping through the brain are written, and on the moving train the white-winged messenger takes its flight, bearing to some dear friend tokens of precious remembrance, words of lig htand beauty, words that will grow brighter as years go by."

Now, a grown-up person who can recommend in such a simple style an incendiary course like that, ought to know that it would bring about a good deal of discomfort and neuralgia in the stilly night, to get up and jot down those exquisite thoughts before they trooped off down into the back yard. It won't do. The unbidden inspiration that most usually gets under way ere slumber's chain doth bind takes its precious flight in the gentle murmur: "Ouch! Keep your great, cold, clammy feet on your own side of the bed." New York Commercial Traveler.

But we have never had any children," said Mrs. Ryckman.

MICHIGAN CONGRESSMEN.

B. M. Cutcheon,

Gen. Byron M. Cutcheon, of Manistee, represents the Ninth District, composed of the counties of Antrim, Charlevoix, Kalkaska, Lake, Manistee, Mason, Mecosta, Missankee, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Osceola and Wexford. He was born in Pembroke, N. H., in 1836. At the age of 13 he entered the Pembroke Academy, taught school at the age of 17, and shortly after removed to Michigan, locating at Ypsilanti. Became principal of Birmingham Academy, in Oakland County, in 1857. Entered the University of Michigan and graduated as a member of the class of 1861, when he accepted the position of Professor of Ancient Languages, etc., in the Ypsilanti High School. He entered the military service in 1862. Was Second Lieutenant 20th Michigan Infantry, July 15, 1862. Captain, July 29, 1862. Major, October 11, 1862. Lieutenant Colonel, November 16, 1863. Wounded in action at Spottsylvania Court House, Va., May 10, 1864. Brevet Colonel U. S. Volunteers, August 18, 1864, "for gallant service at the battles of the Wilderness, Va., and Spottsylvania, Va., and during the operations before Petersburg, Va." Colonel 27th Michigan Infantry, November 12, 1864. Resigned March 6, 1865. Brevet Brigadier General U. S. Volunteers, March 13, 1865 "for conspicuous gallantry at the battle of the Wilderness, Va." He commanded the Second Brigade, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps, from October 16, 1864, until the date of his resignation, having been compelled to leave the service on account of sickness in his family.

At the close of the war he entered the law school of the University of Michigan, graduating in March, 1866. Admitted to the bar at Ann Arbor, in 1866. Practiced law at Ionia in 1866-7, when he removed to Manistee.

On March 20, 1867, he was appointed a member of the Board of Control of Railroads. In 1866 he was appointed President of the Michigan Soldiers' Home Commission by the Governor. In 1868 he was elected one of the Presidential electors from this State. In 1870 he was chosen City Attorney by a Democratic council. City attorney of Manistee in 1871, and Prosecuting Attorney of that county in 1873-4. In 1875 he was elected Regent of the State University for the term of six years. He was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress in 1882; re-elected in 1884.

S. C. Moffatt.

The Eleventh Congressional District, comprising the counties of Baraga, Benzie, Chippewa, Delta, Grand Traverse, Houghton, Isle Royal, Keweenaw, Leelanaw, Mackinac, Manitou, Marquette, Menominee, Ontonagon and Schoolcraft, is represented by Seth C. Moffatt, of Traverse City. Mr. Moffatt was born in Battle Creek, Mich., August 1, 1841. He received a common-school education there, and removed in the fall of 1858, with his parents, to Colon, St. Joseph County, where he spent two years as a teacher in the seminary. In the fall of 1860 he entered the literary department of the Michigan University, but being obliged to abandon the literary course, he entered the law department the following year. He graduated thence in 1863. During his last year at the University he was in the office of Hon. Thomas M. Cooley. After graduation he entered the law office of Hon. Byron D. Ball, at Grand Rapids. In the spring of 1864 he removed to Lyons and began the practice of law. From there he went to Northport, Leelanaw County, in the fall of 1866. He was at once elected Prosecuting Attorney for that county and re-elected in 1868. In 1870 he was elected State Senator from the 31st district, and served through the regular and extra sessions of 1871-2, and the Edmonds impeachment trial. He was appointed a member of the Constitutional Commission of 1873. In the spring of 1874 he was appointed Register of the United States land office at Traverse City, vice Lieut. Gov. Bates, deceased, and held the office until its removal to Reed City, in 1878. In that year he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Grand Traverse County. Having been elected Representative in the State Legislature in 1880, his name was at once mentioned in connection with the Speakership, to which responsible position he was elected from among several prominent and capable candidates. In 1884 he was elected Representative in the 49th Congress, on the Republican ticket, by a vote of 16,467 to 8,992 for John Power, Fusionist.

The Eleventh district is the only one in the State that had no Prohibition candidate for Congress.

S. O. Fisher.

Spencer O. Fisher, of West Bay City, Representative in Congress from the Tenth District, composed of the counties of Alcona, Alpena, Bay, Cheboygan, Clare, Crawford, Emmet, Gladwin, Iosco, Montmorency, Ogemaw, Oscoda, Otsego, Presque Isle, Roscommon, and Tuscola. Was born in the township of Camden, Hillsdale County, February 3, 1843, and has resided in Michigan his entire life. He is a lumberman and banker by occupation. He is now serving his second term as Mayor of West Bay City; was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, in 1884, and has been twice elected Alderman. He is a Democrat, and was elected on the Fusion ticket, as Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress, by a vote of 15,366, to 13,078 for Charles F. Gibson, Republican, and 855 for Alfred M. Webster, Prohibitionist.

Minor State Happenings.

—Neebish, Chippewa County, is a new postoffice.

—Manistique harbor is receiving a great many improvements.

—Book agents when they strike Manistique are compelled to pay a license of $1 per day.

—A new stage route will soon be in operation between Manistique and Escanaba, touching at Fayette and other points.

—A Bay City man has a tobacco plant growing in his yard. The plant is six feet ten inches high and the stalk is five inches in circumference. The largest leaves are twenty-six inches long and nineteen inches wide.

—It is now thought Marquette will have the branch State prison. Hon. Peter White has offered to donate forty acres of land for a site. The commissioners were understood to favor a site half-way between Ispheming and Negaunee, but no land could be secured on any terms, the mining corporation refusing to sell.

—Almost every town of any pretensions whatever in the State sends in complaints of burglaries more or less severe, from no boodle up to a goodly haul. The trade is either becoming more fascinating or more profitable, or else the times have made more people reckless from being hard up or without opportunity of employment.

—A Michigan girl outdid her companions in a craze for autograph albums by having about one hundred letters from the same number of men bound in a volume for her parlor table. As the missives represented her extensive and unusual sentimental correspondence since she had arrived at the age of chirography the collection proved very interesting to callers.

—The imaginative individual who gave a description of that $2,000,000 a ton rock discovered near Negaunee was too previous. All well-informed mining men draw the line at $1,000,000 a ton, and a man whose rock exceeds this is looked on with suspicion. A million dollars a ton is richness enough for all practical purposes.—Marquette Mining Journal.

—The establishment of a "County House" in Schoolcraft County seems to be a paying arrangement. The Manistique Pioneer says: Before the Poor House was opened it cost the county $4 per week to board each pauper; now it costs $1.25. The poor are cared for just as well, and in some cases better than they were before. Then, too, the poor are where they can be frequently seen by the officers; they are subjected to better discipline; they are better off.

—The Huron Times recalls the memory of the awful fires which devastated the "thumb of Michigan," commencing Sept. 5, 1881. As an anniversary reminder it says: "Traces of the great calamity are, each year, growing fainter, unless we except the lines of care and suffering on the faces of many who faced the awful dangers and endured the privation and suffering which followed. God grant that our people may never again be called upon to undergo another such baptism."

—The Midland Sun says that the oldest log-scaler on the Saginaw River, and perhaps in the State, is S. B. Brown, of East Saginaw, who has been engaged in the business thirty-five years, having commenced in Maine thirty-five years ago, and continued in the business since that time. Mr. Brown has resided in Michigan about twenty-eight years. He once scaled 500,000,000 logs in two hundred days—a feat never before accomplished on the river. Though Mr. Brown is verging close on to 70 years of age he appears at least fifteen years younger, and is still in active service.

A Wayside Idyllic.

High in the zenith gloamed the golden orb of day with a brazen stare that palsied energy and kept the pores busy. It was hot. From the posied north came no bracing zephyr rich with the fragrance of heath and meadow to fan the brow dripping with the symbol of Adam's curse. The fly-besmitten cattle had waded into the frog pond, and stood knee deep in green water lashing their steaming sides with heavy tails in despairing languor, lazily chewing their cuds in abject hopelessness. It was a devilish warm day. The earth was as parched and dry as the throat of a tramp at sunrise, and the only cloud visible was a foggy mist of dust that overhung and crept slowly along behind a solitary horseman, who was gradually passing from view with about as much celerity as bad luck leaving a poor man's family. The heat was oppressive. The man on horseback was in his shirt sleeves and only wore one suspender and a billygoat beard of sad-dish bleached appearance. There was nothing dudesque in the mien of the man, though there was one point of resemblance not glaringly apparent to the casual observer. He had been half-witted from birth, but having served a term in the legislature the misfortune had ceased to attract attention. His manner was simple and very sweaty, for the day was sultry. The steed he bestrode arched not its neck with the proud impatience of the charger who scents the battle from afar off, but the sway in its back made ample amends for lack of contour further forward. It was bulky of limb, thick in wind, unfortunate in vision, and far from hasty in disposition. It was a horse that any woman could drive in safety, if she had strength to apply the whip with sufficient vigor to keep the animal awake and in motion. In short, it was a horse of great reliability and most exasperating deliberation of movement. The man himself was very full-breasted in the back, and had but little of the fashion plate look about him. His face was seamed with wrinkles and also seemed wrinkled. Perhaps it was. He wore a straw hat and blue cotton pantaloons tucked tightly into boots of cowhide that needed half-soling; but he was himself a shoemaker by trade and it mattered not. His eyes were smaller than peaches and larger than cherries. Of course we mean common-sized market cherries of the wormy order, ox-hearts being ruled out of this deal. They were of no particular color, and yet were far from white, though he was a white man himself, or passed for one among people not overly particular about such matters. His hair was long and bushy, and would have floated in the breeze, but for one thing. There wasn't any breeze. It is more than probable that he had ears of some description, but if he had them with him they were not discernible to a person of limited vision, on account of being concealed somewhere beneath his massive ringlets. Some folks would have said, under his hair, but ringlets seem to jingle nicer, and we go right smart on the jingle of everything except money. It was a day of exceeding great warmth, and our hero—for such he may as well be considered, unless somebody—bolder and better-looking should turn up and claim the position—found plenty of employment for his hands in mopping his honest brow with a handkerchief of silken pattern and cotton texture. It was a large bandana that had been used for about everything that a handkerchief could be used for, except strangling a baby and straining milk, from carrying eggs to market and bringing home groceries, to tying a colt and holding up a sore leg. But who is the bold buccaneer, and whither goes he on a day of such fiery fervidness, at such reckless indifference of speed that the day after to-morrow is chasing him? He is old Bill Jarvis, the mail-carrier, taking his own time to get to the settlement, in spite of the fact that Aunt Polly Barkins is burning with impatience to get hold of a letter from her old man, containing two dollars in greasy money and a recipe for drying squash that will give it the taste of pumpkin and keep ten years without turning pale.—Chicago Ledger.

A Performing Owl.

A prominent Clinch County physician has an owl that roams about loose at his house, and is a terror to cats and mice. Not only is he useful for this, but he is a rare bird, the doctor having taught his owlship some rare tricks. For instance, he will take the owl and whirl him around and about his hands, and will then put him upon the floor or table upon his back, side, or any other position he may see proper, telling the owl to sleep, and he will remain perfectly quiet. The Doctor can then tell the owl to dream a bad dream and awake frightened, when, after about thirty minutes, the bird will jump up from the table, apparently in a great fright, popping his bill, and showing other signs of alarm.—Savannah News.

Too Particular.

A male sparrow discovered a piece of bright-colored calico lying on the grass. At his summons a dozen hen sparrows approached and he was about to divide the prize among them, when a dispute arose as to whether the colors were fast or not. The calico was carried to the frog pond for the purpose of deciding the question, but before the washing could be completed a rag-picker appeared and the birds were left minus the calico and with the doubt unsolved.—New York Sun.

MAUD (an aristocratic child)—"How pretty and clever you are, mother! I'm so glad you married into our family!"

What Sporting Men Rely On.

When Louis R. Redmond, the South Carolina moonshiner, cornered, after for eight years eluding the Government officials, was asked to surrender, he exclaimed:

"Never, to men who fire at my back!"

Before he was taken, five bullets had gone clear through him, but strange to relate, he got well in the hands of a rude backwoods nurse.

By the way, if Garfield had been in the hands of a backwoods nurse he might have lived. A heap of volunteer testimony against the infallibility of the physicians has been accumulating of late, and people are encouraged to do their own doctoring more and more. It is cheaper and quite as certain.

Before Detective Curtin, of Buffalo, caught Tom Ballard he "covered" him with his revolver. Tom saw the point and tumbled!

Joe Goss was "covered" a few weeks ago and he tumbled, and so did Dan Mace. Death "fetched 'em" with that dreaded weapon—kidney disease. But they should have been lively and drawn first. They could easily have disarmed the monster had they covered him with that dead shot—Warner's safe cure, which, drawn promptly, always takes the prey. It is doubtless true that sporting men dread this enemy more than any mishap of their profession, and presumably this explains why they as a rule are so partial to that celebrated "dead shot."

Redmond was right. No man should surrender when attacked in the back. He should "draw," face about, and proceed to the defense, for such attacks, so common among all classes, will fetch a man every time unless "covered" by that wonderfully successful "dead shot."—Sportsman's News.

Epitaphs.

When with characteristic cynicism Byron derided the credulity of him who would "Believe a woman or an epitaph" he may have had in mind Ben Jonson's famous lines on the Countess of Pembroke:

"Underneath this sable hearse
Lies the subject of all verse,
Sydney's sister—Pembroke's mother!
Death ere thou hast slain another
Fair, and learned, and good as she,
Time shall throw a dart at thee!"

Could the memory of Shakspeare demand loftier strains? Compare the above with the quaintness and simplicity of the lines:

"Blest be the man who spares these stones,
And curst be he who moves my bones,"

Inscribed on the tomb of the Bard of Avon.

Strict adherence to mere matter of fact has scarcely been considered the special attribute of an epitaph—though the three following are well-authenticated examples of unvarnished detail:

"Sarah Yorke this life did re-gn, Sixteen hundred and seventy-nine."
—Norwich.

"Here lies the body of William Wix,
One thousand seven hundred and sixty-six."
—Richmond, Yorkshire.

"Here lies the body of honest Tom Page,
Who died in the thirty-third year of his age."
—Norwich Cathedral.

And in the same connection may be instanced the inscription on the tomb of the inn-keeper, buried in the churchyard opposite his hostelry:

"Here lies Tommy Day,
Removed from over the way."

Latin was long considered the only appropriate language for an epitaph. It is well known that Dr. Johnson refused "to disgrace the walls of Westminster Abbey" with an English inscription to the memory of Oliver Goldsmith. This is the more to be deplored, since the Doctor could (and did) write English epitaphs of merit—witness that upon Phillips, the musician—

"Sleep undisturbed within this peaceful shrine, Till angels wake thee with a note like thine."

Brevity, "the soul of wit," has been little considered in this class of composition, and ("O, rare Ben Jonson" excepted) there occur to the writer but three as remarkable in this particular—that upon Dr. Fuller—

"Fuller's earth."

Upon Burbage, the actor, a simple stage direction:

"Exit Burbage."

And the happy combination of eulogium and farewell to the memory of Knight, the publisher—

"Good Knight!"

Successive generations have pressed into this service such time-honored effusions as "Afflictions sore long time I bore," etc.

And the really beautiful lines by Dr. Donne upon a deceased infant—

"Ere sin could blight, or sorrow fade,
Death came with friendly care;
The opening bud to heaven conveyed,
And bade it blossom there," have appeared upon hundreds of tombs. The touching subject of infant mortality finds also fitting expression in the two following:

"Just with her lips the cup of life she pressed, Found the taste bitter—and declined the rest."

"This babe entombed on the world did peep, Disliked it—closed its eyes—and fell asleep."

A Loaded Bug.

A very extraordinary occurrence took place recently at the residence of one of our prominent citizens. The family were sitting in the parlor in the evening, when a bug was seen crawling on the table. One of those present seized the insect and placed it in the lamp, with the view of cremating it. A loud report was instantly heard, and the lamp chimney was blown to atoms. The explosion was certainly connected with the insect, but in what manner we leave it to the scientist to explain.—San Diego Sun.

VICTOR HUGO was a great lover of children and was continually made to feel their watchful care. The adoration of the young became one of his ruling passions. Jules Claretie, the novelist, relates: "One day he said to me, 'Do you know how I define paradise? A place where parents will always be young and children little.'" He was passionately fond of his grandchildren, Georges and Jeanne, and one of his greatest joys was when he had a number of staid political friends in his parlor, or a work to finish, to come in with a doll hanging out of his coat-tail pocket, and to walk about with Georges and Jeanne trotting behind him, their eyes riveted on the plaything, until slowly and softly they relieved grandpa of his burden.

The Home of Mr. Blaine.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The son of Senator Frye, of Maine, who has been suffering from a severe cold, which settled on his chest, was cured by a few doses of Red Star Cough Cure. He publicly indorses it as prompt, pleasant, and safe. Dr. Cox calls it the best remedy. It contains no opiates or poisons.

Chinese Woman's Tresses.

Joe James, whose other name was left behind him in the Flowery Kingdom, rejoices in the possession of the only almond-eyed wife this side of the Mississippi. He is as proud of her as is a boy of a new red wagon. When a reporter of the press saluted the slant-eyed beauty in the store last evening she sat upon a tea chest, coyly displaying the tips of her tiny feet, for she is a "little-foot" woman her husband says. She wore her hair in wonderful style—like the wings of a bat, making her hair resemble a schooner yacht running before the wind, with foresail and mainsail spread to port and starboard. The black tresses were stiffened with wires and glossy with grease. It takes six hours to do up this wonderful headdress, and in order that the dizzy affair shall not be spoiled, the fair owner sleeps with a block of wood under her neck. In this way the dressing of the hair lasts three weeks.—Philadelphia Press.

The Present Generation

Lives at telegraphic speed—eats too fast, retires too late, does not rise betimes, smokes, and (alas, that we should have to say it!) chews too much tobacco. The consequences are dyspepsia, a general absence of that robust and manly vigor which characterized our ancestors, and a manifest proneness to early decay. Regular hours, a due allowance of time for meals, the disuse of excessive smoking, and altogether of chewing tobacco, in connection with a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, will in nine cases out of ten efface consequences of the abuses of the laws of health indicated above. A want of stamina, dyspepsia, nervousness, and billousness are among these consequences, and they are bodily ills to the removal of which the Bitters is specially adapted. Nor is the Bitters less fitted to overcome and prevent fever and ague, kidney and bladder troubles, and rheumatic ailments. It is also a fine appetizer and promoter of convalescence.

The Philippine Islander and His Hat.

Felt and woolen hats are exported in large quantities from Germany to the Philippine Isles. The hat is the great article of adornment worn by the natives—"nobody is anybody without it"—but it must be of European origin. The home-made cane hats are relegated to homely wits and slender purses. Especial value is placed on a bright-colored silk lining, with a ticket nicely printed in gold. Indeed, when the hat is now the Manila dandy carries it in his hand, so that people may admire the external splendor.—Hatter and Furnisher.

A PHYSICIAN residing in Los Angeles, Cal., claims that the death rate among children there is proportionately very small. And this he attributes to the climate, which renders possible an out-of-door life almost every day of the year, and fruit at all times.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

What "Old Fritz" Said.

It was an aphorism of Frederick the Great's that "Facts are divine things." An undisputed fact is that Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the most powerful liver vitalizer extant, and by its characteristic and searching action will cure dyspepsia, constipation, dropsy, kidney disease, sick-headache, and other maladies which, popular opinion to the contrary notwithstanding, are directly traceable to a diseased condition of the liver, by which its work as purifier of the blood is made incomplete. HAY FEVER.

Ely's Cream Balm was recommended to me by my druggist as a preventive to Hay Fever. Have been using it as directed since the 4th of August, and have found it a specific for that much dreaded and loathsome disease. For ten years or more I have been a great sufferer each year, from August 9th till frost, and have tried many alleged remedies for its cure, but Ely's Cream Balm is the only preventive I have ever found. Hay Fever sufferers ought to know of its efficacy.

"Oh! But I Salivated Him!"

was the actual exclamation of an honest physician, spoken of one of his patients to whom he had given calomel for the cure of biliousness and a diseased liver. And he had salivated him for certain, from which he never recovered. All these distressing consequences are avoided by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," a purely vegetable remedy that will not salivate, but produce the most pleasing effect, invigorate the livor, cure headache, dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, and piles. The Broken Bottle.

"Come on, boys, let us go in and take a parting drink."

The speaker was William Scott, a hard working mechanic who, with three of his shopmates, was on his way home at the close of the week's labors. All of them had taken several drinks, and were beginning to show the effects of it, especially Scott, who staggered slightly as he walked.

The four went in and stood before the bar of the saloon, which was but a short distance from Scott's home and had for years been patronized by him. Drunken men seldom drink and leave a saloon when there are two or more together and on this occasion Scott and his frends stood at the bar and conversed, as one after the other treated in turn.

Suddenly their conversation was interrupted by Scott accidentally dropping the bottle, from which he was about to pour a dram, from his unsteady grasp.

"Hello!" said he, "that was an accident."

"Accident or no accident, you'll pay for that liquor and bottle," retorted the saloonkeeper, whose attention had been directed to Scott by the crash.

"You don't mean that, Lawrence," said Scott; "it was an accident."

"That's all right," replied the saloonkeeper; "but the price of that bottle and liquor will take the profit off many a drink, I can't afford to lose it, and you'll have to pay it."

"But," pleaded the mechanic, "I've but half my wages left, and I must take it home."

The saloonkeeper, however, was inexorable, and Scott handed over the money which was to have given his wife and little ones a Sunday dinner.

When he got his change he turned to the saloonkeeper and said:

"I didn't think you would do that, Lawrence, after I've been spending a good part of my wages here for the past ten years."

"Well, if you have, you got, the equivalent of every penny you spent," gruffly responded Lawrence.

"Did I?" said Scott, quietly, and picking up the pieces he started from saloon.

There was something in his manner that Lawrence did not like, and taking the amount he had received from the mechanic from the drawer, he threw it noisily on the counter and called to Scott to come back; but the latter had reached the door and went on out.

He proceeded direct to his home, and, meeting his wife, he placed the pieces of broken bottle in her hand, saying:

"There, Betty, I paid a lot of money for that, but I think you'll consider it cheap before we get through."

Mrs. Scott did not for a moment understand him; but, looking at the pieces of the bottle and inhaling the fumes of the liquor, she intuitively grasped his meaning, and with a glad feeling in her heart she said:

"What do you mean, William?"

"I mean," said Scott, "that for ten years that bottle has been swallowing my earnings; but now I've bought it, and I am going to see if the broken bottle is not better than the whole bottle."

Scott kept his promise. He never drank again, and in after years, when he had a comfortable little home and a profitable business of his own, he always told his friends that it all came through "the broken bottle.

PROBATE ORDER FOR HEARING. FINAL ACCOUNT.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. Probate Court for said County. At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the probate office, in the Township of South Arm, on Thursday the 20th day of August in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty five. Present, James A. Keat, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of ISAAC STAFFORD, an incompetent person.

Henry H. Vanmorman, guardian of said estate, comes into court and represents that he is now prepared to render his final account as such guardian. Thereupon it is ordered, that Monday, the 21st day of September next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for examining and allowing such account, and that all persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court, then to be holden at the probate office in the township of South Arm in said county, and show cause, if any there be, why the said account should not be allowed. And it is further ordered, that said Henry H. Vanmorman give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said account, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL a newspaper printed and circulated in said county, three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

A true copy. JAMES A. KEAT, Judge of Probate.

A Fallacy Exploded.

There is something at once inspiring and dreadful in the intensity with which these men work, writes a Mexico correspondent of the Boston Journal. Where or how the fallacy concerning their laziness has gained ground it is hard to understand. Whatever they do is done as if salvation depended upon it, and the exertion demanded, where manual labor takes the place of steam or horse power, is so bitterly hard that it makes their continuous application the more wonderful. We have yet to see the first instance of shirking or of carelessness. Slight of frame, small in stature, with every appearance of delicacy in physique, they will take upon the shoulders as much as five or six men can lift, and carry it an indefinite distance. Under these immense burdens they trot instead of walking. To see a mozo climbing five or six flights of stairs and traversing acres of corridors at this swift pace, with a heavy Saratoga trunk on his back, or to meet four persons rushing through the city streets with a Chickering piano on their shoulders are sights to which we are becoming so well used that familiarity robs them of their first painfulness. These brave workers are so surprised and unprepared for either pity or sympathy that we begin to cover both with the negative quality of indifference. Still, to look day after day at street pavers and sweepers working as if fame or fortune depended on dispatch, porters hurrying under the weight of their enormous burdens, farm laborers plowing, reaping, gathering wood, drawing water hour after hour without a turn of the head or lifting of an eyelash for the world outside, upsets one's preconceived notions and leaves one in a maze of reflections. This utter absorption in his occupation gives a certain dignity to the man; and one finds here often amid the most menial surroundings something of that fine spirit—that inbreathing of purpose into action—that makes Millett's sower a heroic figure. Think of the men lifted above these by every accident of education and fortune, whom we so often see in the fair fields, listless, uninterested, careful only to fill the time of their contract, and these earnest, eager, constant laborers become superb.

Rowland Hill and Penny Postage.

Some years ago, when it was the practice to write the name of a member of parliament for the purpose of franking a newspaper, a friend of mine, previous to starting on a tour into Scotland, arranged with his family a plan of informing them of his progress and state of health without putting them to the expense of postage. It was managed thus: He carried with him a number of old newspapers, one of which he put into the post daily. The postmark and the date showed his progress, and the state of his health was evinced by the selection of the names from a list previously agreed upon with which the newspaper was franked. Sir Francis Burdett, I recollect, denoted vigorous health. Once on the poet's (Coleridge) visit to the lake district he halted at the door of a wayside inn at the moment when the rural postman was delivering a letter to the barmaid of the place. On receiving it she turned it over and over in her hand, and then asked the postage of it. The postman demanded 1 shilling. Sighing deeply, the girl handed the letter back, saying she was too poor to pay the required sum. The poet at once offered to pay the postage, and did so. The messenger had scarcely left the place when the young barmaid confessed she had learned all she was likely to learn from the letter; that she had only been practicing a preconceived trick—she and her brother having agreed that a few hieroglyphics on the back of the letter should tell her all she wanted to know, while the letter would contain no writing.—The Royal Mail.

A Good Business Outlook.

New York World.

The Financial Chronicle in its issue of Saturday last refers to the Clearing house returns, which are regarded as an unfailing barometer of the rise or fall in the volume of business, as follows:

A considerable gain at New York (over $42,000,000) and some improvement at most of the other cities during the week bring the aggregate clearings for the whole country up to $771,062,294, a total exceeded only once since the third week of January.

In comparison with the corresponding six days of 1884, the total exchanges record an increase of $117,621,376, and the truth of these figures is attested not only by the oral statements of prominent merchants, but by a gradual hardening of prices for most commodities, by increased signs of life everywhere apparent in the wholesale dry goods district, and by more numerous applications to banks for discounts. The clerical forces of some of the leading wholesale houses are busily engaged far into the night packing and shipping goods to the west and south. It is noticeable that the demand is chiefly from those sections where the crops are largest, the south especially coming forward as a large buyer. The enormous cotton crop, to say nothing of cereals, bids fair to lead to such a revival in the trade and industries of the south as will exert an important influence on matters here. On the other hand, a vast amount of northern capital is likely to find its way into southern enterprises during the next 12 months, as many believe that the south and southwest at present offer a better field for operation than either the west or northwest, where the influence of overtrading during the boom several years ago is still felt to a greater or less extent. It is to be hoped that the present revival of business will be gradual in order to check any tendency towards excessive production, which always does much to shorten the period and detract from the stability of the improvement.

An Iowa Judge's Rebuke.

Hon. F. M. Hubbard, district judge of the eighth judicial district of Iowa, in passing sentence upon some liquor dealers for violation of the prohibitory laws of the state, said:

"While there are greater crimes known to the law which are punishable with great severity, there are none which involve more of those qualities known as despicable meanness and audacity than the selling of intoxicating liquors. There is something in the taking of human life so instantaneous that it shocks and terrifies the minds of all; and yet we look upon the man who takes human life quite as surely, but by a slow, lingering process, if not without condemnation, at least without horror. You who stand before the court for sentence are in every moral sense murderers, and you are within the spirit, if not in the letter, guilty of manslaughter; for the law says that who ever accelerates the death of a human being unlawfully is guilty of the crime. Your bloated victims upon the witness stand, and who undoubtedly committed perjury to screen you from the law, not only abundantly testify that you are accelerating death, but that you are inducing men to commit still greater crimes than your own. You still maintain the appearance of respectability, but how morally leprous and scrofulous you are inwardly. The ruin, poverty and idleness which you are inflicting upon this community declare as from the housetops that you are living in idleness and eating the bread of orphans watered with widows' tears; you are stealthily killing your victims, and murdering the peace and and industry of the community, and thereby converting happy, industrious homes into misery, poverty, and rags. Anxious wives and mothers watch and pray in tears nightly, with desolate hearts, for the coming home of your victims, whom you are luring with the wiles and smiles of the devil into midnight debauchery.

"One can have no adequate conception of a cataract until he has seen Niagara, nor of the terrible fury and grandeur of a storm in mid-ocean until he has witnessed one; so no one can know the utter degradation and total depravity to which his species can be brought until he looks upon the desolate ruin caused by your hellish traffic. You are persistent, defiant law-breakers, and shamelessly boast that in defiance of the law and moral sense of the community you will continue in your wicked and criminal practices. It has, therefore, now become the imperative duty of this court to let fall upon you so heavily the arm of the law that you shall either be driven from your nefarious traffic, or ruined in your fortunes or wicked prosperity. You have become a stench to the nostrils of the community, and all good men are praying that you be speedily reformed or summarily destroyed. By the providence of God and the favor of this court these prayers shall be speedily answered by signal and exact justice for your crimes. And finally, let me entreat you, if you are not lost to every sentiment of humanity, to desist from your criminal vagabond traffic and betake yourselves to some honest calling for a livelihood, that you may yet become virtuous, useful citizens and entitled to the respect of a Christian community. If you persist in this way, your ruin is certain, and you will receive, as you deserve, the execration of mankind. You may think that the sentence of the court is harsh and unjustly severe, but the court assures you that compared with your crimes and the desolation you have already brought upon the community, it is mild in the extreme."

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The first race between the yachts Puritan and the Genesta, which was sailed on the 14th inst. over what is known as the inside course of the New York Yacht Club, a length of thirty-eight miles, was won by the former in 6:04:30. The English cutter was beaten by a little more than a mile, and crossed the line in 6:10:30. The event excited great interest throughout the country and in England.

While temporarily insane, William H. Taylor, of Worcester, Massachusetts, shot his wife and then himself. Both were fatally injured.

Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, last week celebrated the centennial anniversary of its incorporation, the venerable Simon Cameron presiding over the exercises.

The Rev. J. G. Townsend, who has for eighteen years been pastor of the Asbury M. E. Church at Buffalo, has denied the dogma of eternal punishment, will resign his charge, and inten s to found a new church based upon his religious beliefs.

A notable improvement has taken place in the iron and steel trade at Philadelphia, and large orders for various kinds of material have been placed. Seven bar-mills resumed during the past week, and the wrought-pipe and bridge-iron mills are crowded with demands for supplies.

The failure is announced of the Willowdale Company, a Boston corporation having its manufactory at Meriden, Conn. The liabilities are said to be about $400,000, of which about one-half is secured by merchandise pledged or hypothecated. The company has manufactured blankets exclusively, and has done its own selling.

The Dwyer Bros., the famous turfmen, announced that they are tired of horseracing and will sell out to the highest bidder.

WESTERN.

C. H. Chamberlain has commenced a suit in St. Louis for $100,000 damages against the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad on account of injuries received in an accident at Woodlawn, Iowa, ten years ago.

The stage running from Fort Custer to Fort Maginnis was held up by three masked men near Forty-Mile Ranch and $600 taken. Twelve thousand dollars in army funds was sent through two days before.

The amount of fraudulent orders issued by township trustees in various parts of Indiana is estimated at $250,000. S. C. Fenton, Trustee of Adams Township, Warren County, is reported missing. Trustee Clawson, of Warren Township, who issued $10,000 of the fraudulent orders, is reported to be in Hamilton, Ontario.

Emery A. Storrs, the eminent Chicago lawyer, died at Ottawa, Ill., after a short illness. He had been complaining of a difficulty in breathing, was taken to his bed, and telegraphed for his wife. She arrived and found him resting easier. He ordered cigars and smoked one of them in bed, and appeared so much improved that she retired, and awoke at 7 o'clock the next morning and found him dead, the supposition being that he died several hours before of heart trouble. His remains were taken to Chicago for burial. The deceased was born at Hinsdale, N. Y., August 12, 1835.

John L. Sullivan, the pugilist, pleaded guilty at Cleveland to the charge of Sunday ball-playing, and was fined $1 and costs —a total of $16.

Miss Arvilla M. Bogart, aged 23, living near Oconomowoc, Wis., was stung on the head by a bee, and died in twenty minutes from the effects of the sting.

C. E. Cook, proprietor of the Jennings County Bank, at North Vernon, Ind., has made an assignment, having become involved by dealings in the warrants overissued by various township trustees in Indiana.

A female horse-thief, giving the name of Mary L. Sheppard, aged 14 years, of Webster City, Iowa, was captured at Dodgeville, Wis., while attempting to sell a stolen team.

Miss Dean, daughter of a wealthy lumber dealer of Chicago, began working in a spinning mill at Rockford last week for 60 cents per day. Her father, however, gives her a dollar for each cent earned.

The bodies of three hundred Chinamen, supposed to have been gathered from cemeteries in all parts of California, were discovered in a San Francisco cellar, where they were being prepared by fellow-countrymen for shipment to the Flowery Kingdom. Several Chinese were engaged in packing into tea-boxes the bones of thirty-five or forty of their countrymen for shipment to China, where they must be buried in order to insure their presence at the Celestial resurrection. It was learned that bodies are taken secretly at night from the cemeteries and carried to this cellar or central depot. Here the bones are boiled down so as to strip them of the putrid flesh. They are then placed in boxes lined with lime and hermetically sealed, to be shipped to the Flowery Land. The Coroner confiscated the remains and removed them to the morgue.

Careful estimate of the corn crop in Nebraska show it to be the biggest ever raised in the State. The State Board of Agriculture estimates a total yield of over 150,000,000 bushels. A dispatch from Des Moines says that from carefully prepared estimates the Iowa wheat yield will exceed that of last year about 13,000,000 bushels, or a total yield this year of 265,000,000 bushels.

The corn crop of Missouri will be somewhat below the average for the past five years, which has been 151,000,000 bushels.

Five indictments for illegal cohabitation were returned by the Federal Grand Jury at Salt Lake City, and two women who refused to testify were sent to the penitentiary for contempt.

The Chinese consuls located at San Francisco have gone to Rock Springs, Wyoming, to investigate the recent massacre of their countrymen at that place.

SOUTHERN.

A fire at Dawson Springs, Ky., destroyed a hotel, two dwellings, and four stores, causing a loss of $40,000.

A. M. Britton, President of the First National Bank, Fort Worth, Texas, has began suit against the Nichols estate to recover $30,000, the amount of Nichols' defalcation.

A recent dispatch from Denison, Texas, says: "The principle of woman's rights sustained an ignoble defeat here after an heroic onslaught. Three maiden sisters named Cash, of mature years, reside on a street that is being repaired and graded. They objected to any work being done in front of their premises, as they had no voice in ordering the improvement. This afternoon, while the street boss and his laborers were at work in front of the Cash residence, the three maiden sisters came out and assaulted the workmen with rocks, putting over a dozen brawny men to flight. The City Marshal and two policemen then essayed to protect the men while they returned to work, but the irate sisters were equal to the emergency, for this time they sallied forth with two old pistols and a garden hoe. The chivalric Marshal and his aids hastily retreated before the foe, and again the workmen were severely pelted with rocks, and fled. Calling re-enforcements, the Marshal rallied his men and finally captured the Amazons and landed them in the calaboose, where they are passing to-night singing hymns."

An express train on the Kentucky Central Railroad was wrecked near Lexington, Kentucky, the engineer and fireman being killed and many passengers injured.

A controversy between E. R. Murray, editor of the Anderson Intelligencer, and State Senator Moore culminated in a personal encounter in the streets of Anderson, S. C. Each fired about five times. Senator Moore was slightly wounded in the right hip. The difficulty originated in a difference of opinion on the prohibition question, which led Editor Murray to denounce in his paper Senator Moore as a liar.

WASHINGTON.

The Second Comptroller of the Treasury has made a decision refusing to reopen the accounts of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company for transportation of soldiers and supplies during the civil war.

Congress will be asked for an appropriation of $250,000 to improve the navigation of the Red River.

A committee has been appointed to open negotiations with the Choctaws, Seminoles, Creeks, and Cherokees with a view to opening their lands for settlement.

A. M. Keiley tendered his resignation as United States Minister to Austria, which was accepted. It is believed in well-informed circles at Washington that the mission will be left unfilled for an indefinite period.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics reports the total values of the exports of domestic cattle and hogs, beef, pork, and dairy products as follows:

	1885.	1884.
August	$ 7,333,117	$ 8,635,509
Eight months ended August 31	61,217,515	62,947,275
Beef and pork products for ten months, ending Aug. 31	73,761,451	71,736,810
Dairy products for four months ending Aug. 31	5,289,504	7,733,619

Comptroller Durham, of the Treasury, announces that his decision holding up requisitions for the payment of officers and employes of the Alabama claims court is final. This ends the controversy so far as the executive branch of the Government is is concerned.

Controller Durham has directed the Solicitor of the Treasury to bring suit against ex-Commissioner of Agriculture Loring to collect $20,000 alleged to have been expended improperly by him.

POLITICAL.

Rev. Moses A. Hopkins, a colored man of North Carolina, and an ex-slave, has been appointed United States Minister to Liberia.

Henry Ward Beecher strongly favors inserting a high-license plank in the New York Republican platform and "fighting it out on that line."

Under the provisions of the liquor law of Wisconsin, elections were held throughout that State to determine the rate of license to be charged in the several cities and towns. Low license ($200) was carried in Milwaukee, Madison, Oshkosh, Racine, Neenah, Oconomowoc, Green Bay, Portage, Janesville, Appleton, Fond du Lac, Mineral Point, Darlington, Watertown, Baraboo, Eau Claire, and other important towns. Among the places which voted for high license ($500) were Kenosha, Fort Atkinson, Whitewater, Fort Howard, Beloit, Waupaca, Depere, and Wonewoc.

The Maryland Democratic convention at Baltimore adopted resolutions indorsing the administration and denouncing the existing civil-service law. Candidates for Comptroller and Clerk of the Court of Appeals were nominated. The Maryland Prohibitionists also met at Baltimore, and selected a candidate for Comptroller on a platform demanding the suppression of the liquor traffic in the State.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A communistic uprising has occurred in the Mexican State of Vera Cruz. The rebels demand a division of all property.

A general curtailment of expenses has been agreed upon on the Pennsylvania lines. Time has been reduced fourteen hours a week in all of the company's shops.

The Indian Chief, Big Bear, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment for his participation in the recent rebellion in the Northwest Territory.

The lacrosse championship of Canada was won by the Montreal Club.

There are 42,248,200 bushels of wheat in sight, and the visible supply of corn is 7,152,963 bushels.

A dispatch from Winnipeg states that a respite has been granted Riel, under sentence of death for participation in the Northwestern uprising. Riel asserts his belief that even should the rope be placed about his neck, it would be removed by divine interposition.

Mrs. Joseph Airey, a confirmed inebriate, whose father was a prominent temperance advocate in England, cut the throats of her three children at Toronto, Ont., inflicting dangerous wounds. The woman was locked up.

The September report of the Department of Agriculture makes the distribution of wheat in eight years 435,000,000 bushels, while estimates of production average 445,000,000 bushels. Of the difference, over 8,000,000 bushels, at least 5,000,000 more are on hand than at the beginning of the period. The 3,000,000 remaining are scarcely sufficient to offset the loss by fire and on the lakes and in manufacturing. The average consumption is 243,000,000 bushels; seed, 52,000,000 bushels; exportation, 140,000,000 bushels. The exportation for eight years is only 47,000,000 bushels, less than the entire export of the fifty-one preceding years. The decline in annual exports since 1880 averages 58,000,000 bushels.

The seventeenth annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland was held at Grand Rapids, Mich. General Sheridan presiding. The Sons of Veterans of the United States and the Michigan veterans of the Mexican war held their annual meetings in the same city. A reunion of survivors of the famous "Iron Brigade" was held at Madison, Wis.

The fifth annual session of the Supreme Temple of the United Order of Ancient Templars was held in Chicago. S. M. Kennedy, of Chicago, was elected Supreme Templar for the ensuing year.

Barnum's great elephant Jumbo was run into by a railway train and killed near St. Thomas, Canada. A dispatch from Toronto gives the following particulars of the accident:

The animals were being transferred from the tent to the car on the London and Port Stanley Railway track, which was struck by a freight train on the Air Line, which crosses at St. Thomas. The baby elephant, which was standing alongside Jumbo, was also struck by the train, and had a leg fractured. The keeper of Jumbo did not, it is learned, see the train approaching. Jumbo gave the alarm of the danger first by trumpeting loudly. This attracted the attention of his keeper, who was leading the animal. He tried to get him off the track, but Jumbo seemed struck with terror at the impending danger, and powerless to move. The engine, which was attached to a heavy freight train, struck the elephant on the side, causing him to make a lurch to one side. The engine, after striking Jumbo and cutting badly into his side, ran over one of his legs. The cars coming against the locomotive with great force sent it crashing against the beast with renewed force, after which it was derailed. A regular stream of blood rushed from the injured side of Jumbo as he lay panting and moaning across the track, and in an hour or so he died from loss of blood and the great gashes plowed in his ribs and side by the front of the engine. The engine was badly broken up.

The anniversary of Mexican independence was celebrated in the City of Mexico by a grand civic and military procession, in which twenty thousand persons participated.

There is no perceptible abatement of the ravages of small-pox in Montreal. The cholera has practically disappeared from Marseilles. The yellow fever is abating at Vera Cruz.

FOREIGN.

Cholera is dying out in France and Spain, but is causing great anxiety in Italy.

A terrific gale at Paris inflicted great damage upon property and caused numerous casualties.

The Russian Government is making extensive additions and repairs to the fortifications of Sevastopol, to which it will transfer the Black Sea fleet. A new fleet will be organized and stationed at Batoum, on the east coast of the Black Sea. Barracks for accommodating 30,000 troops are being constructed at Rostoff, twenty miles from the Sea of Azov. New batteries are also being erected in the Crimea. A naval commission is to be appointed to make an examination of the harbors on the Grecian and Turkish coasts.

Three German officers, who were arrested while taking plans of French fortifications in the department of Haute Rhine, were escorted to the frontier. German spies are reported to be numerous in Eastern France.

The mediation of the Italian Consul having proved of no avail, hostilities have again broken out between the French and Hovas in Madagascar.

It is believed in European diplomatic circles that Sir Henry Wolff's mission to Constantinople will prove a failure. The Russian Ambassador has gained the Sultan's ear, and enjoys lengthy conferences with the Ministers while Sir Henry toasts his heels in the ante-chamber, awaiting an audience.

If other plans for an amicable settlement of the Carolines dispute fail, Germany, it is said, will endeavor to convene a conference of the European Powers and the United States, either at Paris or Vienna, for the purpose of deciding the principles which shall govern the acquisition and protection of territory in the Pacific. The convention will be similar to the recent Congo Conference.

The number of Poles expelled from Posen, Prussia, up to the present time, is estimated at 34,000.

England has offered to mediate with Spain for the settlement of the Carolines question.

The French Academy of Medicine discussed Ferran's theory and came to the conclusion that the so-called vaccine matter will not afford protection against cholera.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Mr. Chamberlain's meetings in Scotland are everywhere attended by great crowds. In one of his speeches he stated that Mr. Gladstone, having been restored to health, would assume the leadership in the electoral campaign. Mr. John Morley, in a speech at Hackney, England, said he was willing to make the utmost concession to Ire and short of separation.

The Irish-American citizens of the national capital, in mass-meeting assembled, unanimously adopted resolutions indorsing Parnell's programme.

Worthington C. Ford, of Brooklyn, has been appointed Chief of the Statistical Division of the State Department, vice Michael Scanlan, of Chicago, who remains in the bureau as a fourth-class clerk.

The Cincinnati Price Current estimates the corn crop of the country at 1,990,000,000 bushels, an increase of 77 per cent. over that of last year.

The annual statement of the Northern Pacific Railroad shows a decrease in earnings of over $1,000,000 as compared with last year.

Twenty-nine deaths from yellow fever have occurred at Guaymas since Sept. 1, and the disease has appeared at Hermosillo and Mazatlan.

A yacht capsized in Lake St. Francis, Ontario, and two of the three occupants perished after a night of exposure. The schooner Edwin Post has been sunk off Redloe's Island, and its captain and steward drowned.

In a Montreal restaurant six men were found eating, while a boy afflicted with a virulent case of small-pox lay in an adjoining room. The lad's father was serving as a juror in a murder trial, and the Judge, being informed of the circumstances, discharged the jury, after which the court was cleared and the building disinfected.

Louisville celebrated last week the sale of the one hundred thousandth hogshead of tobacco this season by a grand processional display of the varied interests, the tobacco industry being given prominence in the pageant. The procession was eight miles in length, and after reaching the Exposition Building the selected hogshead, weighing 1,190 pounds, was sold to Finzer Brothers, of Louisville, for $2,023. There were 50,000 visitors in the city, and the assemblage at the Exposition was the largest in its history.

The Lumber Manufacturers' Association of the Northwest met in Chicago last week. The delegates present seemed generally to favor decreased outputs to relieve the market.

The cage in the shaft of the Niantic mine, near Decatur, Ill., while descending with five men, suddenly dashed 200 feet to the bottom, the shock rendering all the occupants unconscious. Two of the men will not recover.

Santa Fe (New Mexico) special: "During the last ten days, Apaches have murdered six citizens in Grant County—a rancher named Brady Pollock, near El Muncho; Evaristo Abeytia, a Mexican near San Lorenzo; two sons of John McKennon on his ranch near Gallino Creek; George Horn, a wood-chopper, near Georgetown, and a Mexican sheep-herder, near Lake Valley, name unknown. The savages also destroyed McKnight & Keith's ranch-houses, near Lake Valley."

The President has appointed the following named Presidential Postmasters: Edward H. Thayer, at Clinton, Iowa, vice Charles Pell, resigned; Henry Williams, at Frederick, Md., vice Charles W. Miller, resigned; J. Henry Bowers, at Chico, Cal., vice James M. Ormsby, suspended; Russell T. Dobson, at Bowling Green, Ohio, vice John D. Bowler, suspended; James Murray, at Fremont, Neb., vice H. O. Payne, resigned; William H. Evans, at Princeton, vice E. R. Piney, suspended; John Crull, at Marietta, Pa., vice G. H. Etla, suspended.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The champion roller skater is beginning to bob up in different parts of the State.

—An Adrian man has a horse which he wants to match against any other horse in a walking-match.

—Jacob Hancock, who had resided in Hillsdale County since 1839, died in Cambria township, aged 76 years.

—Addison, Lenawee County, with a population of about four hundred, has four doctors and an equal number of druggists.

—Mrs. Hannah Phettoplace, of Madison Township, died last week, aged 92. She was one of the earliest settlers of Lenawee County.

—At Crystal Falls fire destroyed Bishop & Runkle's building, the Green Bay House, and several smaller buildings. Loss, $31,000; insurance, $18,000.

—Some resident of Toledo, whose name is not yet disclosed, is about to bring suit for property in Detroit valued at $4,000,000. The person claims to be a long-lost heir to the Dequindre family.

—There are over 400 boys in the reform school at Lansing. New cottages are about to be erected for the boys, who are divided into families of fifty each. The new hospital building is well under way. A few cases of diphtheria have been reported, but as a rule the inmates have excellent health.

—An increased attendance this year at the Michigan Agricultural College is credited to Mr. Willits, its new President. He is energetic and efficient. If anybody can make the institution serve its purpose he ought to. But up to date it has failed to persuade a large proportion of its graduates that farming is a desirable occupation. Being farmers' sons, they may have thought it was not before they went there and went only to get an education and avoid farm life.—Free Press.

—The action of the Detroit Justice of the Peace in protecting a witness from what he believed to be an attorney's impertinent question, is a good example for all the courts to follow. "I am here for both sides," said the Justice in answer to an insolent remark of the attorney. Judges are altogether too prone to allow the attorneys to conduct cases to suit themselves, regardless of the rights of the witnesses or the appropriateness of the ground they try to occupy. In this case the attorney resented the interruption, because, he said, the lawyer on the other side hadn't objected. The idea that nothing could be improper or illegal unless "the other side" called the court's attention to it, struck him as a novelty. It is altogether too much of a novelty.—Free Press.

—William M. F. Round, of New York, Secretary of the National Prison Association of the United States, visited Detroit last week, to perfect arrangements for the meeting of the association in that city Oct. 17 to 21. He says the coming meeting promises to be a very successful one. A large number of prominent men are to take part in the proceedings. Ex-President R. B. Hayes will be permanent Chairman, being already President of the association. Among others who will probably be present, most of whom will read papers, are Theodore Roosevelt, Treasurer of the association; Judge Francis Wayland, Dean of the Yale Law School; Charles Dudley Warner, Professor Carleton T. Lewis, of New York; representatives of the Government from the Departments of War and Justice, and many others of national reputation.

Crushed to Death.

A special from Ann Arbor says: At 1 o'clock Sunday morning a tenement house in the rear of a shoe-shop on Fourth street fell in and killed a colored woman, Mrs. Ausman Bailey. There were ten persons in the house before it fell. They were Will Bibbins and family; Ben Williams and Will Hinch, up stairs, and Mr. and Mrs. Ausman Bailey and Mr. Tolbert, down stairs, all colored. All escaped with slight injuries, save Mrs. Bailey. She was about 60 years old and had been affected with paralysis for several years. She had risen up in bed as the crash came, when she was struck by the brick wall. She was heard to scream when struck. Her remains were secured after two hours' work by the Fire Department.

Took Part in Perry's Victory.

A. R. M. Fitzsimmons, of Reading, writes to the Detroit Free Press as follows:

"In your issue of to-day you give an interview with a gentleman who claims he saw the engagement on Lake Erie, known as 'Perry's Victory.' There is now living in the Township of California, Branch County, this State, Mr. Alexander Odren, who was in the battle under Commodore Barclay, and was taken a prisoner by Perry's forces at that battle. Mr. Odren is of French descent, lived in Detroit at the time, was over in Canada with two other young men, and was arrested and pressed into the British service. After the battle he was taken as prisoner to Erie, where he enlisted in our army and served until the close of the war. He is now a pensioner at $8 per month for such services. After the war Mr. Odren returned to Detroit, and owned ten acres of land at or near where the City Hall now stands, which he sold in 1836 for $40 per acre and bought the land on which he now lives, having moved on it in 1837. He has lived there continuously since. Mr. Odren is 96 years old, is active and mentally all right, and relates the old scenes of those days as if they were of but yesterday. Nothing delights him more than to get with some Frenchman with whom he can talk in the language of his boyhood. His wife is still living and also enjoying good health, although she has been blind for a number of years. They have raised a large family of children, most of whom live near them."

FLAYED.

John Sherman Soundly Scored by Gov. Hoadly for His Recent Demagogical Utterances.

Time for the Shermans and the Forakers to Accept the Results of the War.

The Administration of President Cleveland Has Won the Confidence of the People.

Gov. Hoadly recently opened the Ohio campaign at Hamilton, in the presence of an immense assemblage, paying particular attention to John Sherman's resurrection of the bloody shirt. We make the following extracts from his masterly address:

Two years ago I opened in your midst the canvass which resulted in Democratic success. Surrounded now by the friends who gave me then the magnificent majority of 2,833 in this Gibraltar of Democracy, I ask for a renewed expression of confidence, and for an increased majority, which shall express with emphasis your opinion that Democratic success, as proved by results, means not only good government but reform, Union, personal liberty, economy, no fraud, no disguises, no concealments, open dealing, and candid treatment of the public in affairs—State and national.

The Ohio election will express the opinion of the people upon my administration and that of the Sixty-sixth General Assembly. It is the first State election after the inauguration of Cleveland and Hendricks. It will therefore be regarded as the expression of popular judgment upon the policies of the President and his advisers. Of these I ask your approval, confident that Democratic success means good government, State and national, which ought not to be rebuked by defeat.

The leader of the Republicans of Ohio has carefully prepared the appeal of his party and sent it from the stump through the press to the country. He waves the bloody shirt—he indorses the policy of alienation and hate—he seeks to transplant and cultivate in this country the feelings of the English aristocracy toward the Irish, to array section against section, to govern the South from the North as Dublin Castle governs Ireland, as a conquered province, and all this in the year of grace 1885, twenty years and more after the close of the war. The average life of an ordinary generation is thirty years. Owing to the casualties of war, which cost our country at least a million lives, the duration of the generation now passing away has been less than this. Twenty-five years have elapsed since Mr. Lincoln's election. Five-sixths, perhaps more, of the men who devised rebellion, the men who fought its battles and the men who overcame it, have passed away. The great civil and the great military leaders, Lincoln and Grant, both sleep in graves bedewed by the tears of the whole nation South and North; for both died with words upon their lips and feelings in their hearts of "charity to all, malice toward none." Seward and Sumner, Chase and Fessenden, Douglas and Stephens, Lee and Breckenridge, these are historic, not living names. Alone of the authors of rebellion, Jeff Davis survives. Boys born when the war broke out have been voting for three years past. Boys born after the war will vote next year. Boys too young to bear arms are now mature men of thirty-five. There is a new South and a new North. A new generation, full of new life is at work. A very large portion of the people of the South have never seen a slave, and have lived under no other regime but that of universal suffrage. Is it not time for the Shermans and the Forakers to accept the results of the war and no longer to continue in battles? Eight million bales of cotton, the probable crop of this year, is in sight. There are no idlers in the South, why croak in the North? White men and black men are side by side at work. The South is developing new industries, weaving cotton cloth, digging coal and iron, forging steel. God and nature, religion and the human heart, are the forces against which Sherman and Foraker contend and foster plots.

To the policy of alienation, we oppose Union; for hate we substitute love; we welcome the new South and the old South, old men and boys, fathers and sons, not as allies merely in a crusade against the forces of nature, but as brothers in affection and blood. We bid them all, white and black, join us in the great march of Union and liberty, to the peaceful conquest of the future.

"Let us have peace," said Gen. Grant many years ago. His eyes at last saw it. "I have witnessed," said his dying voice, "since my sickness, just what I have wished to see ever since the war—harmony and good feeling between sections." And again, rejoicing in the present, he prophesied the future in words of glowing hope. "We may now well look forward to a perpetual peace at home, and a national strength that will screen us against any foreign complication."

Let us then banish these unmanly fears of Southern wrong-doing, and cease to exaggerate occasional personal conflicts into wars of races. Danville and Coplah are worn out. Turn out some new grist, oh, grinders of the outrage mill! Rome rule, and as little application of the "eternal principle of regulation" as is consistent with the greatest liberty of all, will in time cure all the ills of State and nation.

Mr. Sherman will fail in his efforts to stir the dying embers of sectional animosity. Ohio has not forgotten what Gen. Garfield so well said:

"The man who attempts to get up a political excitement in this country on the old sectional issues, will find himself without a party and without support. The man who wants to serve his country must put himself in the line of its leading thought, and that is the restoration of business, trade, commerce, industry, sound political economy, hard money, and honest payment of all obligations; and the man who can add anything in the direction of the accomplishment of any of these purposes is a public benefactor."

The Solid South! Have Senator Sherman and Judge Foraker forgotten that there was once a Republican Solid South, and what became of it the South of Moses and Madison Wells, of Parson Brownlow, and Wagmoth, of Dennis, "the little giant of Alachua," who invented tissue ballots; of the strumpet, Betty Higgins, and the chaplain who joined efforts to debauch the Legislature and bankrupt the treasury of Tennessee; the Solid South of Kellogg and Eliza Pinkston? But a few years ago every Southern State, except Kentucky, had a Republican Governor and Legislature. Where are they now? Some in exile and some in prison, and their party, like Hans Breitmann's "party," "all gone away, in die Ewickeit"—fled away, as marsh miasma evaporates before the sun.

Mr. Sherman is distressed because Lamar and Garland and Bayard, "two members of the Confederate Congress and one man who sympathized with them, are at the head of great departments of the Government." Oh, yes! it was well to put Mr. Key at the head of the Post-office Department. One Confederate in the Cabinet was all right, but two—two are a lamentable concession to treason. No, not quite this, even. Akerman was a proper Attorney General, and Key a most becoming Postmaster General, but two at a time, Garland and Lamar together—nye, there's the rub. The tears of crocodiles are freely shed, as Sherman softly sings, "Insatiate archer, would not one sufflce?"

Mosby, Madison Wells, Mahone, and Chalmers the guerrilla, the Returning Board, the repudiator and the Fort Pillow butcher, all these have had their garments washed, but Lawton and Jackson, Jonas and Lamar and Garland, the best and purest of the South, these to our Senator are the ungenerate children of the political Satan, unfit to serve the republic.

And Bayard, too, is a hug-a-boo with which to frighten Republicans—Bayard who "sympathized" not quite so long, nor yet so furiously as Logan, whose name it used to delight the New York Tribune to adorn with the prefix of "d. w." "dirty work John A. Logan," because he boasted of his delight in doing the "dirty work" of returning slaves to their masters.

And all this that John Sherman may be Senator, or perhaps President, with our beloved Foster for Senator, and that Foraker may be Governor.

What can an opposition Senator do for Ohio? A chronic negative, a continuing scold, a running sore of petty party complaint, is not what will best serve Ohio. Let us put an equally sound Democrat by the side of Henry B. Payne, to join him in generous support of Grover Cleveland, helping to settle the silver question, to settle the Mormon difficulty, to revise the tariff on the lines of principle stated in the Chicago Democratic platform, and to reform the civil service.

Against Senator Sherman's appeals for disunion, we set the good work of the Democratic party, its President and Cabinet, and their declared aims and purposes. I ask for re-election, not for my own sake, but that it will be understood as Ohio's indorsement of these.

No doubt there are dissatisfied Democrats. Yes, and fortunately there are satisfied Republicans. How much better would either have felt, had Blaine and Logan triumphed? In January, 1863, Mr. Lincoln said to my friend M. D. Conway, "Most of us here present have nearly all our lives worked in minorities, and may have got into a habit of being dissatisfied."

Speaking at a jollification meeting in this city last November, I pleaded for generous confidence in our newly elected President, and that every Democrat, educated though he might have been for twenty-four years in opposition, "should treat him with sympathy and guard against carping criticism. Leave that to Sherman and Foraker."

Now, I ask for more. I solicit approval, not forbearance. Mr. Cleveland has held office six months. Congress has not been in session, yet much has been accomplished. The spirit of reform and economy has entered all the departments, useless offices and expenses have been done away, while the performance of duty, civil and military, has been enforced. The Government is not solicitous to provide such offices for pets, but to save money for the people and to keep the faith pledged in the platform.

If the navy, which the Republican party destroyed, be restored, it is now certain that it will be honestly done. Under this administration there will be no loose contracting, no jobs let at prices nominally low to be made high by extras or by scamping the work.

The remnant of the national domain, which Democratic Presidents, Jefferson and Monroe and Polk, added to our territory, the residue which Republican extravagance has not wasted on corporations and favorites, is saved from cattle kings and other plunderers for the benefit of the people.

No more assessments will be levied on the departments to carry elections; no more clerks will be dismissed because they refused to bulldoze the people at Congressional elections, in the guise of Deputy Marshals; the Pension Bureau will never again be emptied of its officers to defeat a wounded Democratic soldier for Congress; there will be no more star-route frauds; no more whisky rings; in short, a breath, a strong breeze of economy and honesty is blowing through all branches of the public service.

No more wool will be drawn over the eyes of Ohio farmers by a tariff nominally high, but ingeniously leveled down at the Custom House by fraudulent invoicing.

Mr. Sherman has recently boasted that he has converted Senator Morrill, of Vermont, to the support of the wool tariff of 1867. But is Mr. Sherman sure of himself on this question? Is he certain that he will not again attempt its reduction, as he did in 1872? Is he sure that in his anxiety to secure other tariff reductions he will never again give the casting vote in favor of reducing the wool tariff, rather than lose the opportunity to cut down duties on other articles as he did in 1883? Is he sure that if ever elected President he will not, as President Arthur did in 1882, recommend "a substantial reduction" in the duty "on wool?"

The three great Republican scare-crows have been taken in for good, and relegated to the rag-bag and the dust-heap. There will be no payment of the rebel debt, no pensions to rebel soldiers, no freedmen reduced to slavery. The results of the war, which Hancock and Ward, Warner and Mogan, Ewing and Rice, and thousands of other Ohio Democrats fought to secure, will be preserved intact.

Here in Butler County we have a memorable instance of the beauties of Republican protestations. Except for a short time under Andrew Johnson there has not been a moment since the close of the war when Ferdinand Vandeveer, the hero of two wars, could be permitted to enter the civil service of his country. He was welcomed to light in Mexico, was welcomed to fight the rebellion, honored, promoted, made a Brigadier General. He was invited to shed his Democratic blood for his twice imperiled country. Against foreign foes and domestic traitors he freely exposed his life, but under a Republican President he has no been good enough to be even a whisky gauger. Thank God, Grover Cleveland has destroyed all this. Democrats, who for twenty years have only been considered fit to be enlisted as private soldiers at $13 a month; are now, at least occasionally, promoted from hard tack and sowbelly to the oysters and champagne of official position. At last it has become possible for the majority of the American people, the majority not in numbers merely, but in all that makes a nation great in intelligence, virtue, sobriety, right thinking, and right living, to see an officeholder occasionally at least selected from their midst. Doubtless Mr. Cleveland seems to some to move too slowly, but remember he is the head of a Government, not of a machine for the distribution of spoils. Of one thing I am sure, and that is that while maintaining and executing in all their force, as is his duty, every law he finds upon the statute book, including the law for the reform of the civil service he will in time fill every office involving political action by men believing in the Chicago Democratic platform of 1884, and in sympathy with Democratic progress. For twenty years the Republican party of Ohio and the nation has proved by its action that its single idea of the public service has been that no Democrat should hold any civil office whatever, business or political, and that every public place, great and small, should be filled by a partisan Republican, put there because, and only because, he was a partisan Republican. All this is now reversed, and "the mourners go about the streets." It is sweet, it is delicious, brethren, to hear the Republican lamentation, as expressed by John Sherman, who worked the Treasury Department for all it was worth in 1880 to nominate himself for President, and who never recommended a Democrat for civil office in his life, that the impartial, non-partisan civil service of our country is in danger! Why, John, brother John, there is a beam in thine own eye, don't say-behold?—Yes; a beam of—wood, a whole forest. Go thou and pluck it out, then come, and after we have done our share of official duty we will rub out our little motes, and listen to your complaints. And while these reforms have been in progress, the country has not gone to the "demolition bow-wows," as every Republican orator has prophesied for a dozen years past. If that great and wise leader of the Democratic party, Samuel J. Tilden, that clear-sighted reformer, before the electric light of whose penetrating vision fraud and waste shrunk and slunk into hiding places and exile, or was driven to prison, were inaugurated, the country would be ruined—so prophesied our Republican Cassandras; the store, Florida and Louisiana, the latter with Mr. Sherman's own personal connivance, were robbed of their electoral votes, and the Government for four years handed over to a usurper. But lo! the hour has come and the man. Democracy has effectually prevaded at last, and where is the calamity? What has become of the disaster? Business revives, stocks advance, are these the marks of disaster? Time, times are still hard, made so by Republican misgovernment. Rome was not built in a day or a year. It is only six months since the Republicans lost power. It may be that the revivals of industry we read of are not the results of Democratic success. They are at any rate coincident. Republican prophesy is falsified, and Republican prophets silenced. Let us take heart, and with renewed faith in Democratic principles, and doubled courage, with generous confidence, continue our support of President Cleveland, sure and secure that his indexible integrity, his invincible courage, his persistent labor, supported by the counsels and wise legislation of a Democratic House of Representatives this year, and a Democratic Senate and House in 1887, will richly reward his, their, and our endeavors. The country will thus enter upon a career of prosperity such as has attended other Democratic triumphs, such as came in with Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, under whose administration all political opposition to the Democracy ceased, and who gave to the country Louisiana and Mississippi, the territory west of the Mississippi, and Florida, or with Jackson, who paid the public debt, or with Polk, who added Texas and California to the national domain.

And at the election of 1888 Democrats and Republicans alike will have the satisfaction of voting for the man of their choice, unawed by rations drawn from the slums of distant States and Territories, armed with bull-dog pistols and headed by Lowell Chrysom, Dudley, Bathbone and Lot Wright. Marshal Lowe is a Democrat and a gentleman, and his deputies will be gentlemen, and they will repel, not actively aid the happy family of Republican colonizers who may be then enjoying the hospitality of Hopehead John.

AMERICA STILL LEADS.

England's Phenomenal Yacht Outsailed in Her Contest for the America's Cup.

Victory Snatched by the Puritan from What Seemed to Be Almost Certain Defeat.

The possession of the America's cup was decided at New York on the 16th inst., by the Puritan beating the Genesta over the long course by 1 minute 38 seconds, corrected time. The race is said to have been the closest ever contested; the Genesta leading for nearly three-fourths of the distance, and being 2 minutes 6 seconds ahead at the outer mark. The wind was fresh at the start, and increased toward the finish to half a gale, resulting in a lumpy sea. A New York dispatch says of the great race:

The cup won by the America more than a generation ago was never in such peril as to-day. Its possession has been often challenged and warmly contested, but never before has Great Britain sent a champion so hard to vanquish. Had it not been for the building of the Yankee yacht and the sailing of the Yankee skipper we might have been compelled to yield the trophy which we have so often defended, and always with much greater ease than to-day, when for the first time American yachts have had to bend their sails in competition with an antagonist to be feared in any weather. There never was such a race in American waters. There probably never was sailed before, in the history of yatching, a race in which the laurels hung tantalizingly before two famous rivals until the very end of a long fifty-mile course. No boat but the Puritan could have saved the day; none but the Genesta could have made victory so dubious. It was a grand race from the moment that the fleet-winged racers crossed the imaginary line until the whistles blew and the guns belched forth their welcoming to the returning conqueror. The yachts looked grand as they dashed across the line. Both were taken in tow by the tugs Scandinavian and Luckenbach and cast off at their Staten Island anchorage. At 6 o'clock the race was over, and the America's cup was still retained on this side of the Atlantic. In speaking of the race ex-Commodore Smith, who has seen every important race for the last thirty years, said: "It was the grandest race ever seen in the world, and if the Puritan had been properly handled she would have beaten the cutter more yet."

The Genesta was regarded as the best "all around" boat in the British fleets of last season. She won her first race in a fresh whole-sail breeze, beating the Vanduara two minutes and fifty-five seconds. In her third race she beat the fastest two-sticker in British waters, in a fresh wind and a nasty jump of the sea. In her fourth race she beat, in a light wind, the fastest light-weather boat in England. In another race she won, with the wind unsteady, varying from a lower-sail breeze to a flat calm.

THE RIVAL CRAFT.

The Genesta.

The Genesta, owned by Sir Richard Sutton, has had a considerable measure of success, though she was frequently beaten by other English boats in match races on the coast of England, before concluding to try to recover the Queen's Cup. Her designer, Mr. Beavor Webb, accompanied her to this country. The Genesta was built at Partick-on-the-Clyde, in May, 1884. Her dimensions are 90 feet over all, 81 feet on the water line, 15 feet extra beam, 11 feet 9 inches depth of hold, and 13 feet 6 inches draught of water. Her register is of 81 tons, and she is enrolled in the Thames Royal Yacht Squadron. She made a quick passage to this country, proving herself a good sailer, but in no case before the great race did she fully exhibit her abilities.

The Puritan.

A Yankee boat—built in Boston, by Boston men for Boston parties—the white flyer Puritan, is especially the pride of New Englanders. She was built by George Lawley of South Boston, is 93 feet over all, 80 feet water line, 23 feet beam, 8 feet 2 inch draught. The qualities of the Puritan were tested by three races with the Priscilla, built also for the purpose of racing the Genesta. Of three trial races the Puritan won two, and was selected as the champion of American yachting interests in the contest with the Genesta.

FIGHTING THEIR BATTLES OVER.

Veterans of the Army of the Tennessee Hold Their Eighteenth Annual Reunion.

The Society of the Army of the Tennessee held its eighteenth annual reunion in Chicago on the 9th and 10th of September. Gen. Sherman presiding. There was a large attendance, including Gen. Logan, Govs. Alger of Michigan, Sherman of Iowa, Oglesby of Illinois, ex-Gov. Fletcher of Missouri, Gen. J. B. Sanborn of Minnesota, Gen. G. M. Dodge of Iowa, Gens. Huckenlooper and Force of Ohio, and Bishop Fallows of Chicago. The Treasurer's report showed $10,000 cash on hand. Gens. Sherman, Logan, Oglesby, and Rauth, and Bishop Fallows were selected to prepare resolutions on the death of General Grant. Governor Oglesby delivered the address of welcome. He offered them in behalf of the soldiers of Illinois their platter, canteen, and cap. He had heard something of their deeds, knew something of their fame, and had a strong sentiment of gratitude for the glorious work they had accomplished in the days gone by. As the guardians of a nation's life, and the representatives of one of the great armies of the country, he bade them welcome to the hospitable soil of Illinois. Gen. Sherman delivered an address eulogistic of the late Gen. Grant. The speaker accepted all the hospitalities extended, and then said he would devote his attention to "the old and first commander." It was Gen. U. S. Grant who had, during the cold winter of 1861–62, raised a company at Cairo, Ill., and it was he who took his final leave of his family and friends on earth on July 23, 1885; all were willing to admit that mankind had lost a kindred spirit. His comrades, who had shared with him the trials of the campaigns from Henry to Vicksburg, knew better than any other that a great soldier, a loving man, and a wise statesman had been taken off. Hundreds, aye, thousands of pens were engaged in an effort to describe the man who did so much in so short a time. These looked to the comrades of the Army of the Tennessee for information which ought to be forthcoming, and which he would try to give. He met Grant at West Point in 1839. The speaker was then a classman, a more exalted position, he asserted, than he had ever reached since, although he had been reasonably successful in life. One day a number of the classmen were perusing a list of names of cadets, and among them appeared that of "U. S. Grant." This was regarded as a somewhat singular name, and the boys began to cogitate as to what the initials "U. S." meant. Some thought they meant "United States," others that the "S." meant "Sam," and still others "Uncle Sam." However, Grant served under the name of "Sam" in the Mexican war in the Fourth Infantry. The speaker knew very little of Grant while at West Point, because one was a classman and the other was a plebe, and classmen would hardly deign to notice plebes. Grant's reputation while serving in the Fourth Infantry in the Mexican war was that of a willing officer, ever ready to do the fighting, extremely social and friendly with his fellows; but in no sense did he display those qualities that were developed during the civil war. It was the old commander who had restored order when chaos had been let loose and the gates of hell were wide open all around. He raised the dark curtain that enshrouded the Federal commanders when he won the victory at Belmont, so that it was only necessary to follow the course mapped out. He did not care how a battle was fought so long as it was won.

In closing, Gen. Sherman said it was fitting that the dead hero should find his last resting place in New York, and hoped that any monuments to be erected would, like himself, be strong and simple. He then introduced Gen. Sanborn.

Gen. J. B. Sanborn also paid an eloquent and graceful tribute to Gen. Grant.

Gen. William F. Vilas was then demanded by the audience, and gracefully came forward, when he was received with enthusiastic applause.

He said it had been understood that his part in the programme was to be that of silence. He felt that he would be a daring man indeed who would attempt extemporaneously to add to the burning words of the soldier-President and chosen orator upon that grand theme of Grant. He would, however, touch upon one feature which added greatly to the fame he had so justly earned. He alluded to the love he had won from the enemies he had fought, and pictured the grieving ex-Confederate officers standing by the death-bed of the man who had struck such deadly blows against them, with tears of honest, manly sympathy glistening in their eyes. Grant had not fought for selfish ambition, nor waged war through vindictiveness. His love of country was too great for this, and that very love endeared him to his enemies. It was Grant's quiet, earnest labor in behalf of returning harmony among the sections that had materially led to the grateful reuniting, now happily accomplished, of the once divided and fiercely fighting sections of the country, and when he died who were found following his body to its last rest but the leading generals now surviving of the enemies with whom he combated. He referred to the two communications which passed between Grant and Buckner, and pictured Grant's joyful reception of the approaching unity and peace, and in most eloquent and feeling terms referred to the fact that the sunshine of a sweet and enduring peace was the glorious fruition of the years of war.

Resolutions of respect to the memory of the old commander were adopted.

The committee to name officers presented the following names in their report, which was adopted unanimously:

President—General W. T. Sherman.

Vice Presidents—Major George W. Colby, of Alabama; Colonel W. S. Oliver, of Arkansas; Captain Richard S. Tuttill, of Illinois; Lieutenant Colonel J. M. Dresser, of Indiana; Major Charles E. Putnam, of Iowa; Colonel A. J. Lucy, of Missouri; Captain W. M. Crery, of Minnesota; Captain W. S. Burns, of New York; General L. H. Murray, of Kentucky; General George E. Wells, of Ohio; General J. M. Rusk, of Wisconsin; Major W. M. Dunn, of the United States army.

Corresponding Secretary—General A. Hickenlooper.

Recording Secretary—Colonel L. M. Dayton.

Treasurer—General M. F. Force.

It was determined to hold the next meeting at Rock Island, Ill., Sept. 15 and 16, 1886. The reunion concluded with a banquet at the Grand Pacific Hotel, at which numerous speeches were made in response to toasts, the festivities lasting until nearly 3 o'clock a. m.

CAPTURE OF CANTA.

Defenseless Inhabitants Massacred by the Victors Without Regard to Sex or Condition.

Suicide of the Officer Responsible for the Defeat—Flight of the Survivors.

[Panama dispatch.]

The latest advices from Lima give details of the battle at Canta on the 14th ult. On the morning of that day a detachment of Government troops occupying the town of Canta, sixty miles from Lima, in the valley running parallel to that of the Rimac, was surprised by a division of Gen. Caceres' army, and after a sharp action of several hours was forced to fly in disorder.

The Government troops operating against Canta were 350 men of the line, with one Gatling gun, 50 cavalrymen, and 50 mounted gensdarmes, the whole force being commanded by Col. Torres.

Canta had been occupied for several days, the montoneros or irregular revolutionary forces retiring on the approach of this detachment. On Friday evening news arrived of the approach of a considerable division of the enemy, and upon Col. Bustamente's advance it was decided to defend the town.

On Saturday at 7 a. m. the hills inclosing Canta were occupied by the enemy, apparently 1,500 or 2,000 strong, and with about 200 cavalry. The latter were stationed at the outlets of the valley leading toward the coast and to the interior, so that from the first the Government forces were effectually corraled. Col. Torres had placed his men in the barracks, situated in the principal square of the town, having also small outlying squads behind some of the walls in the suburbs.

Caceres' artillery, four small field-pieces, opened fire from the hill at Huaychullani at half-past 7, and in a few moments the firing became general.

The enemy descended the hills and attempted to enter the town, but were repeatedly driven back. For two hours the positions of the combatants were unaltered, the fire being all the time very heavy.

At midday the defenders of the place slackened their fire, for their ammunition was rapidly becoming exhausted, and for an hour they received without reply the volleys of the attacking party.

At 2 o'clock a desperate effort was made to drive the rebels from the town, which they had then entered, at the point of the bayonet. This failed, and then the defeat was accomplished.

The fight was hand to hand in the streets, no quarter being given, and the most dreadful scenes of carnage occurred. Houses where some of the defeated soldiers had taken refuge were broken open and all found within murdered without distinction of age, sex, or character, and then were burned.

A few of the most determined of the Government cavalrymen, headed by Colonel Pachas, cut their way through their opponent and made good their escape.

Col. Bastamente, to whose counsel the defeat was due, seeing that all was lost, blew his brains out on the field of action.

Col. Torres escaped early in the fight, and the Government has named another officer to command the decimated "Cugamarica."

Of the five hundred or six hundred men engaged on the Government side, probably two hundred escaped by flying to the mountains or following Pachas. They are still coming in in parties of two or three. Very few prisoners were taken, for, as has been stated, no quarter was given.

The Caceristes were commanded by Col. Morales Bermudas, and it is stated that Caceres with his staff arrived at Canta the day after the battle. The losses of the revolutionary forces are not known. From the fact that the Cugamarica battalion was decidedly the finest in the Government service the partisans of Caceres here are jubilant over his success.

The 5,000 soldiers in garrison at Lima are not at all affected by the reverse, and their officers are confident of their loyalty in case of an attack on the city. Energetic precautionary measures are being taken. The church towers are occupied to-night by strong detachments of riflemen, and the Prefect has issued a notice offering a reward of from 50 to 1,000 soles to any one who may denounce the existence of conspiracies or aid the police in their efforts.

The Government forces have been withdrawn from Chosica, and are now stationed at Santa Clara, fifteen miles nearer to Lima. Nothing positive is known regarding the whereabouts of Caceres.

As Others See Us.

Over the signature of "Resorter" a correspondent writes a two-column letter to the Shelbina, Mo., Democrat, descriptive of Charlevoix and its surroundings, from which we take a few paragraphs. From the description of the trip from Chicago we would infer that "Resorter" arrived on the Champlain during the storm of Aug. 13th, that interfered so much with the regatta on the 14th.

A trip of two or three days on so large a body of water as Lake Michigan is quite an interesting event to one who has never enjoyed the experience. It furnishes all the novelty of a regular sea voyage with the sea storm occasionally thrown in if you want it. The wide expanse of water with no object visible except an occasional sail or passing steamer, the mirror-like surface reflecting the blue above in the still deeper blue beneath, the foam-capped crests of angry billows as the waves struggle in desperate embrace, may all be seen and enjoyed on a trip from Chicago to northern Lake Michigan. * * * I have been as far north as Mackinac Island; but this locality is, I think, the most desirable of any I have seen along the peninsulas of Northern Michigan. Extending along the shores of both Pine and Round Lakes, are the Chicago and Charlevoix summer resorts, built up within the past few years. Each has its hotel surrounded by a number of nicely arranged cottages, many of which are models of architectural beauty. They are owned principally by residents of Chicago and southern Michigan who yearly bring their families here to find a pleasant summer home. Charlevoix is in no sense "a fashionable resort," but on the contrary it is a place where you can, if so desired, wear out your old clothes without exciting idle curiosity, or put on your new ones without becoming a special object of attraction, and where you can also enjoy a social life as pure and refined as that of your own home. * * * The tourist finds the choicest sport away from the lines of travel and among the inland lakes and brooks which empty into them. There black bass, perch, pickerel, and speckled trout abound in quantities sufficient to satisfy the demands of the most zealous sportsman. * * * One encounters a number of small farms in traveling through the interior, but this portion of the state is a comparitive wilderness, and whatever its agricultural resources may be remain yet to be developed. The surface is everywhere thickly covered with timber, chiefly maple and hemlock, and it is worth several times as much as the land costs to put it in cultivation. This whole region, however, is one great sanitarium for hay-fever and asthma as well as for fever and ague and other malarial diseases. The hay-fever sufferer can come here with assurance of most perfect exemption from that terrible malady, as thousands can attest who annually find it a safe asylum. The atmosphere is pure and invigorating, the days pleasant, and the nights cool and refreshing. The public accommodations are good and the price of board ranges from five to seven dollars per week. It is only within the last few years that it has become a health as well as a summer resort, and to the seeker of either, I can say that I know of no place where he can enjoy equal benefits for the same expenditure of money.

Vicksburg Commercial: Charlevoix has made rapid strides during the past two years in the way of growth and building improvements. According to the Journal the sum foots up $131,150 expended in that time. In our favorable opinion of the charming resort and its hospitable and enterprising people, we don't wonder at its prosperity. May it ever continue.

Bronson Journal: The Charlevoix Journal of last week gives a tabular statement of the building improvements in that prosperous northern town, which foots up $131,150.

Chase Eclipse: The Charlevoix Journal gives the amount of building done in that live town in the past two years at $131,150.

Plainwell Leader: A marked copy of the Charlevoix Journal states that $131,150 has been spent in that resort in the past two years for building purposes.

The Traverse Herald prints the recapitulation of business in full as heretofore printed in the JOURNAL. Thanks, Bro. Bates.

Detroit Free Press: The Charlevoix Journal claims that $131,150 worth of building has been done there the past two years.

Eaton Rapids Times: In the past two years $131,150 worth of public buildings have been erected at Charlevoix.

Kalamazoo Telegraph: Charlevoix shows up $131,150 worth of new buildings for the past two years.

Manistique Pioneer: The new Charlevoix flouring mills will cost $20,000.

Bellaire Breeze: Charlevoix has had 4,912 transients at her hotels this season.

Notes and News.

Nearly all the cattle are off the Indian reservations, and one great source of trouble with the Indians has been removed. A little backbone on the part of the president has righted a great evil in a very short space of time.

It has been announced in all the executive departments at Washington that there will be no interference with those employes who desire to go home and cast their ballots this fall. But the "election leave" of ten days with pay heretofore annually granted to every male employe of the government will not hereafter be granted. Anybody who goes home to vote will have the period of his absence deducted from his annual vacation leave or else will have his pay stopped during his absence from duty. Of course there will be no more partisan political work on the part of departmental employes.

Rev. Geo. B. Stocking recently addressed an audience at the Knights of Labor hall in Lansing, on the subject of capital and labor. He commenced his admirable address with a statement of what he believed to be the true relations to each other of the three factors which enter into the problem—capital, labor, and land. He thought the solution was not to be found in strikes or in the triumph of communistic ideas. He "would recommend such a union of labor and money in all associated enterprises as would secure to the laborer a share of the surplus profits of such enterprises. The money of the capitalist secures a factory, machinery and stock; but without the laborer you can do nothing. Brain and muscle is his capital. Skill multiplies the worth of brains and muscles. The man who puts in his money is allowed to share in the profits of the enterprise. Now tell me by what law of justice or equity the man that puts in his brain and hand shall be excluded from a share of their surplus profits?" The speaker thought the repeal of the foreign contract labor law was a step in the right direction. He would also have restrictions placed upon the further immigration of European laborers—would have the American laborer protected as well as the American manufacturer.

In nothing has republican mismanagement proved itself more conspicuous than in the contempt it has bred for this country by foreign nations. We hail with satisfaction the restoration of the respect which democratic administrations have always enforced from foreign powers, as shown in the case of ex-Consul C. A. Van Bokkelen, who has just returned from Hayti to New York. The story of his outrageous treatment by the Haytien government is enough to arouse the indignation of of every true citizen. At the end of his consulship he married a Haytien woman. For buying a piece of land at Port au Prince, contrary to the laws of Hayti, which restrict real property ownership to natives, he was imprisoned by President Salomon in a loathsome dungeon, eight feet by four, dripping with water and infested with vermin. The small prison was sometimes crowded with nearly three hundred convicts, most of them degraded negro murderers and desperadoes. Here he suffered from March, 1884, to June 27, 1885. His health, which was robust when he was first imprisoned, is now entirely broken down, and he has become a victim to both consumption and chronic catarrh, while his face is pale and haggard and gives every evidence of long suffering. Mr. Van Bokkelen says no attention was paid by President Salomon to letters from Secretary Frelinghuysen, and he was not released until Secretary Bayard wrote the Haytien president stating that if he was not released a United States man-of-war would be dispatched to Port au Prince with instructions to adopt severe measures if necessary. Good for Bayard and Democracy!—Detroit Democrat.

The People of Hudson Bay.

We come now to Lieutenant Gordon's observations upon the natural history of the country, and first of all as to its human inhabitants. These are very scanty, and with the exception of a few white men at the traders' posts, are solely Eskimos. On the north side of the strait they are quite familiar with the ways of white men, and seem to be highly pleased at the prospect of increased intercourse with them. Occasionally one is met with who has mastered the English tongue, but not often. Many others understand well enough what is said to them in that language, although they can not be persuaded to speak it. They are particularly fond of any article of civilized clothing, and the head-man at North Bluff manifested no small pride at the possession of a stand-up linen collar, which he displayed to the utmost advantage. In character they are docile, amiable, and willing to work. When landing the stores and coal at North Bluff they worked all day along with the men, carrying heavy weights up over the rocks, and toiling away as cheerily and heartily as could be desired, asking no other remuneration than biscuits, of which commodity they are inordinately fond. These people have no farinaceous food of any kind, and, as a consequence, the children are not weaned until they reach the age of three or four years. The families are small, there rarely being more than two or three children, and, although early marriages are the rule, their numbers must be diminishing, because signs of their presence were met with everywhere, while the people themselves were found at only three places along the straits, and there are only some five or six families known to be between Cape Chudleigh and Nachvak. Along the Labrador coast the Eskimos gather in small settlements around the Moravian mission-stations. Nain is considered the largest settlement, and its Eskimo population does not exceed two hundred souls. Those at the states are all educated, being able to read and write in their own language, and, according to the missionaries, are regular attendants at church, and very fond of music—two excellent and hopeful traits certainly.—J. Macdonald Oxley, in Popular Science Monthly for June.

The resignation of Miss Sweet, the pension agent at Chicago, was one of those alternatives which are offered delinquents very frequently. It was a case of "get out or be put out," and with a very woman like air of spite the lady announced her "victory" over the authorities. When her resignation was demanded, amid a storm of indignation from republicans and mugwumps, Miss Sweet announced her refusal to leave until bounced; but just before bouncing time a very convenient "better position" was offered her, and she gave up the office with as poor grace as possible.—Detroit Democrat.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

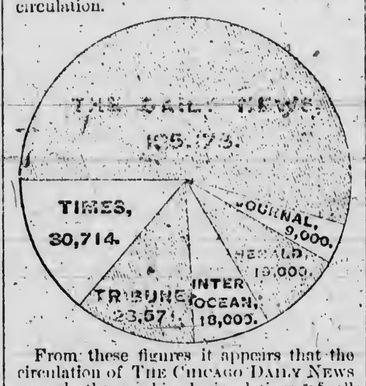
The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2-cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket-sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

Divine service with holy communion, will be held in the new bank building, on Sunday morning next, at 10:30 o'clock; also evening service, with sermon at both services by Rev. J. W. Bancroft. All are invited.

The schooner Surprise, which sprung a leak at Charlevoix, has been towed to Frankfort. The tug is awaiting fair weather to take her waterlogged consort to Milwaukee. The Surprise is leaking at the rate of four feet a day.

Thatcher & Blair, of the Jordan River House, East Jordan, expect to give a dance at their hall on Friday evening, Oct. 2d, and respectfully invite Charlevoix young people to turn out and give them a benefit. They promise an interesting time.

J. A. Mitchell has completed the repairs of the north pier, and departed on Wednesday. The old work was leveled up, and one full course of timber added, the whole filled with stone,—not simply cobble stones, but great rocks, as large as could be handled.

In the construction and finish of Brown & Co.'s bank building, described elsewhere, Messrs. Ranger and Lamoreaux were the masons, Messrs. Wheat and Carr the carpenters, and Messrs. Hemmings and Orrell painters. The work throughout is creditable to all in their respective departments.

Last Friday evening, the ladies of his congregation in Ironton and vicinity, tendered to Rev. C. F. Van Auken, a reception, at the Lake View house, which was attended by nearly 250 people. The evening's exercises contained an address of welcome by Mr. Lewis, a welcoming recitation by Miss Munson, and response by Mr. VanAuken. Appropriate vocal and instrumental music was furnished by a choir. After these exercises the assembly was invited to a feast spread in the two largest rooms of the hotel. The tables would accommodate about 90 persons, and they were filled three times. All present pronounced the affair a great success,—one of those social events which are never forgotten by the participants. A number of Charlevoix people were in attendance.

The schooner Surprise sprung a leak on her last visit, and sent for the tug D. P. Hall, of Frankfort, to take her to Milwaukee. While trying to make the channel, the tow-line gave way in some manner, letting the schooner into one of John Nicholls' lumber piles, breaking the jib-boom of the vessel, and tearing down a lot of lumber.

W. N. Moore, of East Jordan rejoices over lively times in his law, real estate, and collection business. He has offices in the Stevens block,—he claims the best in town,—centrally located, and convenient. Having but recently located here, and already having so good a business, he is naturally enthusiastic in the future of the town.

The Wilson Hoop Co., of South Arm are finishing a solid foundation for their main building, which will be 78x100 feet in size. The building for the steam tanks will be 26x55. The foundations for machinery are constructed by driving piles as close together as possible, cutting them down to the waters edge, and filling above with broken stone and cement. A large force of men are pushing the work rapidly. They expect the machinery to arrive early next month.

The township library has been removed to rooms in the village hall, and will be open on Tuesday and Friday afternoons of each week. Harrison Berdan is librarian, and Miss Effie Berdan will have charge at present. The rules provide that no book shall be held longer than two weeks, and it is hoped that all books now out, which have been out two weeks or longer, will be returned at once. The rules provide a fine for failure to return books promptly, and we are requested to notify those interested that the rules will be enforced and fines collected of all delinquents.

A wealthy company of lumbermen, with offices in Chicago, have purchased (the deeds are on record) a water front on South Arm, and another on Intermediate lake, and have secured the right of way for a railroad connecting the two; the evident intention being to build a saw mill on Intermediate lake, and ship by way of South Arm, where there is a chance to load during the entire season of navigation. The company pushing these preliminaries are close mouthed as to their intentions, but a gentleman who has had considerable deal with them, says they are not in the habit of paying out money for nothing, and in his opinion would not buy valuable mill sites and large tracts of hardwood timber unless they intended to convert it into lumber. The railroad is a necessary part of their business, to convey the lumber from the mill to the nearest and best point for shipment. This company owns several mills and railroads in Wisconsin, and their work here will be but a small item of their entire business.

Messers. Brown & Co. are to-day moving their banking business into the new building. An adequate notice of the work in this building was impossible during the progress of the builders. While the finishing touches were being applied, each day brought new surprises. The building is a two-story veneered brick, for banking rooms and residence, with basement only under the residence portion, for furnace, fuel, etc. The entrance to the first floor is in the corner, into a hall. The business office is at the left of the hall, is 11x18 feet, and is a bright, pleasant place to do business. There is a private office, and a fire and burglar proof vault, inside of which is a fire and burglar proof safe with a time lock. The residence may be reached through a door on Clinton street or through the banking office. The front parlor is 13x25 feet and is connected with the dining room (16x16 feet) by wide double doors. To the left of the dining room is a wash room, private stairway, china closet, and kitchen, with cellar stairs under the private stairway. The family sleeping room occupies the corner, east of the dining room. The kitchen is supplied with sink and pump connecting with stone cistern in the basement. The east end of the building will have a wide double veranda extending the entire width. The upper floor is reached through the hall in front, or through the private stairway from the dinning room. The two front rooms are finished for offices. The next rooms correspond in size and finish with the parlors below, and will be occupied W. A. Brown and wife until he builds his house on the north side. The balance of the second floor is fitted for sleeping rooms, the one in the northeast corner being fitted especially for W. P. Brown's father, Mr. P. K. Brown. The woodwork finish throughout the building is birch, oiled, except the doors, which are of pine with birch panels. The casings, brackets, ornaments, etc., are in Eastlake patterns. The selection of timber gives some very fine effects in natural-wood finish, many of the panels being especially rich. In building for permanence, Messrs. Brown & Co. have also built for comfort and pleasure, and the beauty of their surroundings must be seen to be fully appreciated.

Claremont Va., Sept. 11th, 1885.

Mrs. L. W. Skinner and Family,—Respected Friends: As secretary of the park commission, I beg to convey to you the sympathy of that body, in the loss of your husband and father, and our friend and fellow commissioner, L. ONE OF THE INVALIDS.

E. M. Parmelee. Dear Sir:—I have been taking your Dyspepsia, Diabetes, and Liver Cure for some time past and have received more benefit from it than from all of the $500 worth of Doctor's medicines that I have used in the last few years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired all the time but now I can work all day without fatigue. Would not be without it in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world.

Yours, Robert A. Loughsikys, Jr.,
Somers Lane, Pa.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

MEDICINE FOR CHILDREN

Must not only be effective but so compounded that no harm will result from the use. Such a preparation for worms (to which almost every child is subject) is Parmelee's Santonine Worm Candies, which are made from the best drugs, particularly adapted to this use. They work quickly, surely and harmlessly, passing off the worms after they are dissolved. Do not neglect the children even though they do not complain. Worms are almost always present. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

QUICK RELIEF.

Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure is not only a valuable internal remedy for all stomach and bowel difficulties such as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Heartburn, Flatulence, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cramps and Colic, but cannot be excelled for an outward application in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, Side and Backache and Strains in any part of the body. Used freely with warmth and rubbing it gives quick relief. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture like perspiration, producing very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 1y2

Proper Treatment for Coughs.

That the reader may fully understand what constitutes a good Cough and Lung Syrup, we will say that Tar and Wild Cherry is the basis of best remedies yet discovered. These ingredients with several others equally as efficacious, enter largely into Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, thus making it one of the most reliable now on the market. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter. 2

Farmers and Mechanics.

HOMEOPATHIC BROTH.

Take a robin's leg,
(Mind) the drumstick merely;
Put it in a tub
Filled with water nearly;

Set it out of doors,
In a place that's shady;
Let it stand a week
(Three days for a lady);

Dip a spoonful in
To a five-pail kettle;
It should be of tin,
Or perhaps bell-metal;

Fill the kettle up,
Put it in a-boiling;
Skim the the liquor well,
To prevent its oiling;

For thickening and for salt,
Take of rice one kernel;
Use, to light the fire,
Any but our journal.

Let the liquor boil
Half an hour—no longer.
(If it's for a man,
You can make it stronger.)

Should you now desire,
That the soup be flavory,
Stir it once around
With a stick of savory.

If of thyme you choose
Just to put a snatch in,
'Twill be flavored fine
If you dip your watch in.

When the broth is done,
Set it out and jell it;
Then, three times a day,
Let the patient smell it.

If he chance to die,
Say 'twas nature did it;
But if he gets well,
Give the broth the credit.

GETTING IN AT NIGHT.

BY JIM JONES.

The door was locked when I got home, and how to get in without waking up "the governor" was the difficulty. I knew he'd give me "partienlar fits" if he knew I was out after ten, and the clock had just struck one. The back yard was an impossibility, and but one chance remained. There was a porch over the front door, the roof of which was but a few feet below two windows. One of them I knew was fastened down, and the other opened from a bedroom, which might or might not be occupied.

An old maiden sister of Tom's wife had arrived on the second day, and it was very probable that she was in that room; but I knew the bed was in the farthest corner from the window, and hoped I should be able to get in without waking her, and then I had comparatively an easy thing of it. So, getting a plank from a neighboring board-pile, I rested it against the eave of the shed, pulled off my shoes, put them in my pocket, and then "cooned up."

All right so far, but I thought it necessary, in order not to arouse any suspicions in the morning, to remove the plank; so, dragging it up, I threw off the end, and down it went with an awful clatter on a stray dog who had followed me for two or three squares, who immediately set up the most awful howl a whipped hound ever gave tongue to. That started half a dozen other dogs in the neighborhood barking. A mocking-bird in the window above commenced singing as if he intended to split his throat at it, and an old woman, in her night clothes, with a candle in her hand, appeared at her window across the street. I knew I was safe as far as she was concerned, but if any one came to our windows the candle gave enough light to very probably discover me. Nobody did come, however, and the old lady, after peering up and down the street for a minute or more, popped her head in and retired. The mocking-bird kept up its eternal whistle, and it was fully half an hour before it and the dogs settled down and gave me a chance to move.

Creeping slowly along the wall till I reached the window, I put my hands on the sill, spring in, and, with my head and shoulders within, and my legs hanging out, I stopped to listen.

Yes, she was in that room, for I could hear her breathing. After waiting for a minute I cautiously drew up one leg, then the other, slewed them around, and putting them down to the floor, was just conscious that I had stepped on something soft and yielding, and was about withdrawing them when another yell broke out at my feet; the old maid jumped up crying "Murder," and the dog and the mocking-bird started again.

I saw through it all; I had "put my foot in it," more ways than one. A little darky was lying on her back under the window, and I had stepped on her face, and of course, woke her up. I decided in a flash what to do. The house would be aroused, and I caught, to a certainty, unless I could get to my room before the governor was up. But, I had not a moment to lose, for the little nigger was yelling, and the woman screaming, so I started for the door, made three steps, and struck a chair, tumbled over, and, of course, made the awfulest racket you ever heard of in the "dead hour of night" in a peaceable house; the nigger and the old maid screamed louder than ever; the mocking-bird whistled like a steam engine, and the dogs fairly made a noise as loud as the Anvil Chorus."

I reached the door, however, swiftly and quietly opened it, and just got out in time to see the old gentleman open his door, with a candle in his hand, and come hurrying up the stairs. Not a moment was to be lost. There was a wardrobe near where I stood, and I sprang behind it. Up came the governor, reached the door, went in, and in the meantime there were all sorts of confusion and inquiry down stairs as to what was the matter. Nobody else came up, though, and from where I stood I heard every word of inquiry in the rooms. Of course they could not make much of it. The little nigger was too much frightened and too sound asleep at the time to understand the truth, and the upshot of the business was that they concluded she had been dreaming, and the governor, after giving her a sound spanking, and explaining the matter to the aroused neighbors, from the window, went down to his room again.

So far, so good. I now had to go down stairs, reach the back door, unbar it, get into the back yard, and make for my room, which was in the second story of a back building that stood unconnected with, and about a dozen yards from, the main one. After giving everybody another half-hour to settle down again, I started.

Boys, did you ever try to go up or down a pair of stairs at night without making a noise? You may try all sorts of ways, but every step is sure to creak, each with a peculiar noise of its own, and loud enough, you are certain, to awaken everybody. I had gotten nearly to the bottom, when a little fat dog came trotting along the entry toward me, barking furiously. A suppressed "Come here, sir; you, Zip!" silenced him, for he recognized me; but the noise started the mocking-bird, and the dogs in the neighborhood having learned to take the cue, of course all joined chorus for the third time.

I ran along the passage, reached the door, and unlocked it, just as the governor, roused the second time, opened his door, and, seeing a man escaping from the house by the back way, of course cried "Thieves! Thieves!" and made a rush after me. I was too quick for him, though, opened the door, sprang out, and broke for the door which opened into the room below mine, and had just reached it when crash! within a foot of my head went a brick, and another voice, that I knew belonged to next-door-neighbor Tompkins, joined the governor in the cry of "Thieves! Murder! Thieves!" I was safe enough. Rushing up the stairs I shelled myself quicker than I ever did before or since, and was in bed and sound asleep in less than half a minute. Wasn't there a row, though? I never heard so many dogs before; the mocking-bird, of course, outdoing all previous efforts; the chickens even began to crow. Tompkins, next door, was hallooing "Thieves!" and calling the governor. I could hear screams and all sorts of noises among the neighbors, until at length the old gentleman's voice was heard in the yard, calling "John! John!"

John was sound asleep—snoring.

"John!" cried the old man in a voice that would have roused a man from an epileptic fit.

I judged it prudent to wake then, and, jumping from my bed, raised my window, and, rubbing my eyes, and looking particularly frightened (which I was), asked:

"Why, father, what in the world is the matter?"

"There's thieves in the house," was the reply. "Get your gun and come down, and be quick. He's in the room below you, John!" hallooed Tompkins. "I'm certain of it. I saw him as he ran down, and threw a fire-brick at him. I know he didn't pass that door, Mr. Jones."

I was directed to "look out for myself." The governor stood sentinel at the door below, armed with a club, while Tompkins had five minutes to collect aid from the neighbors, and in less than half that, so thoroughly was every house alarmed, there were a dozen or more men in the yard armed with guns, pistols, and sticks.

The governor led the attack. Opening the door he called: "Come out here, you house-breaking scoundrel! If you attempt to run or resist, I'll blow your brains out."

Nobody came, however.

"Watch the door," was the order, "while I go in;" and I was told to "look sharp," and "shoot the rascal if he came up stairs." A momentary search was sufficient to satisfy everbody that the thief was not in the room.

"He's up stairs, then," cried Tompkins, "for I'll take my Bible oath he didn't pass that door."

So up stairs they trooped, but I had lit a candle by that time, and there was no burglar there. The strictest search, even in looking under a boot-jack, didn't show the slightest trace of him. The yard was next examined, then the house, and everybody being tolerably well satisfied that he had escaped, the neighbors dispersed to their several homes; but I was appointed sentinel for the rest of the night, and ordered not to sleep on my post under penalty of a flogging.

The articles missing, on a thorough investigation next day, were two pies and the old lady's silver thimble. The thimble turned up in a week or two, being discovered under the corner of the carpet, but the pies have never been accounted for to this day.

On oath I could have given very material testimony as to the disposition of the stolen property, but as the case did not come before the courts I remained quiet.

Didn't the local editors boom, though? One of them elongated himself through a half a column, and headed the item: "A Diabolical and Atrocious Attempt at Burglary and Murder," describing, with graphic particulars, the fiendish attempt to throttle Miss—— and her servant, complimented the "coolness and resolution of R. Tompkins, Esq.," and perorated with a withering anathema on the want of vigilance displayed by the police.

It was fun for me to see with what wide-awake sagacity the watch used to stop at the door and listen during their nightly rounds for months after; and you could not have hired a youngster to go under the porch, on any account, after dark. The excitement died away, though, after awhile; but I'll never forget the night I tried to get in without making a noise.

WATERLOO.

A Short but Interesting Description of the Great Battle.

The battle of Waterloo was fought June 18, 1815, between the allied British, Netherland and German troops under Wellington and the French under Napoleon. On June 16 Napoleon had attacked the Prussians under Blucher at Ligny and forced them to retreat toward Wavre, and Marshal Ney at the same time attacked the British and Dutch forces at Quatre Bras, but was forced to retire after an engagement of five hours. Napoleon's object, however, which was to prevent a union of the Prussians with Wellington's main army, was partially gained. The latter commander, having learned the next morning of Blucher's repulse, moved on to Waterloo, expecting that the Prussian commander, according to previous arrangement, would join him there as speedily as possible. On June 17 Napoleon also moved toward Waterloo with the main body of his army, having directed Marshal Grouchy with 34,000 men and ninety-six guns to pursue Blucher's command toward Wavre. Both armies bivouacked on the field of Waterloo, and the next morning Napoleon, confident that Grouchy would prevent the arrival of the Prussians, delayed attack until the ground should become dry, a heavy shower having fallen on the day previous. The forces under Wellington occupied a semi-circular ridge a mile and a half in length, and the French were on an opposite ridge, the two being separated by a valley about 500 yards wide. The plan of Napoleon was to turn the allied left, force it back upon the center, and gain possession of the enemy's line of retreat. To draw off Wellington's retreat to his right, French troops were sent about eleven o'clock to attack the chateau of Hongnemont, which the English had fortified. After a fight of more than two hours this was still in the possession of its defenders. About one o'clock a Prussian corps under Bulow was seen approaching on the French right, and Napoleon finding it necessary to send 10,000 men to check their advance, was obliged to change the plan of battle. He therefore ordered a fierce attack upon the allied center. Wellington massed his troops here, and the battle was obstinately maintained for five hours, with varying success to the participants, both commanders hourly expecting re-enforcements. Wellington was waiting for Blucher and Napoleon for Grouchy. The French at last were gaining ground; the allied troops in the center were wavering under Ney's impetuous onslaughts, Gen. Durutte had forced back the left, and Bulow's troops on the right had been forced to yield the position they had taken. Now, however, there were rumors that Blucher's army was approaching, and the allies again rallied. At seven o'clock Napoleon, despairing of the approach of Grouchy, determined to decide the day by a charge of the Old Guard, which had been held in reserve. At this stage the advance of Prussian horse on the allied left forced back Gen. Durutte's troops, and the Old Guard formed in square to cover this retreat. Ney's division, surrounded, made a gallant struggle—their brave leader, still unwounded, though five horses had been shot under him, heading them on foot, sword in hand—but were forced to give way. The Old Guard held their ground against overwhelming numbers. Finally, when five squares were broken, the Emperor gave the order to "fall back." The cry "The Guard is repulsed" spread consternation through the French army and threatened to turn retreat into precipitate flight. Napoleon, seeing this, reformed the Guard in order to give a rallying point for the fugitives. Failing in this, he declared that he would die within the square, but Marshal Soult hurried him away. The heroic band, surrounded, was bidden to surrender. "The Old Guard dies, but never surrenders" is the reply popularly attributed to Gen. Cambronne, and with the cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" the remnant of the Guard made a last charge upon the enemy and perished almost to a man. The forces of Blucher, being now upon the field, the rout of the French was complete, and the Prussians pursued the fleeing troops, capturing guns and men. There is no doubt that the failure of Grouchy to come upon the field caused Napoleon to lose his last great battle. It was subsequently asserted that that Marshal was bribed, but there seems to be no real foundation for so base a charge. The trouble was that he had been ordered by Napoleon to follow the Prussians toward Wavre and thought it necessary to follow the strict letters of his instructions. Before he reached the village the main body of the Prussian force was on its way to Waterloo, but one division had been left there to occupy his attention. Engaged in skirmishing with this, he paid no attention to the advice of his subordinate generals, who, hearing the terrible cannonading at Waterloo, besought him to go to the aid of the army there. Napoleon, believing that he was either holding back Blucher's forces or was hotly pursuing them, did not recall him to the main army, and the decisive battle was lost. Grouchy was summoned before a council of war, but the court declared itself incompetent to decide his case, and nothing further came of it.—Inter Ocean.

Birds and Their Feathers.

The best time for seeing perfect feathering is in the winter, or onward to the spring; then, after a very short honeymoon, the birds settle down to domestic drudgery with exemplary ardor, with the result that at the end of a few weeks their tail-feathers are rough and irregular, their pinions worn and ragged from constant contact with the nest in sitting; and by the time their new suit comes at midsummer they are more than ready for it. The spring, of course, is the climax of a bird's life. With scrupulous care he arranges hourly his feathers, all their markings are seen to perfection, and many peculiarities of decoration are then and then alone displayed. The fleshy combs and protuberances become scarlet and enlarged, and any one who has not seen a pheasant or cock grouse at this season of love would be astonished at the alteration from his normal state. The cock pigeon swells that part of his body most adorned with iridescent feathers to make the grandest show he can; and every humble finch and small bird brushes up his modest finery. It is said that not a single bright-colored feather on any bird's body is left idle or undisplayed. If birds have bright-colored tails they raise them to their highest and fullest and abuse their heads; if bright heads, then they shake out their plumes, their eye distends, and their wattles swell; and if, as in some cases, they have large tippets of feathers falling on both sides of the head, they contrive the bewilded hen shall see all the glories of both sides at one glance, and so drag all the feathers of the far side round to the near side, making such a huge mass that the face is nearly hidden, and the projecting beak alone shows where the head must be. All this done for the hen's benefit, and it is only done when she is near; it all turns on her existence, and ceases if she be absent.—Charles Whimper, in Magazine of Art.

American and Foreign Soldiers.

It is no doubt true that the Franco-Prussian war is the only one of modern times which can be compared to our own civil war in size of the armies engaged, or in number of men killed and wounded. For instance, in the three battles near Metz—Courcelles, Aug. 14; Thionville, Aug. 16, and Gravelotte, Aug. 18, 1870—the Germans lost on the first day 4,000 in killed and wounded; on the second, 17,000, and on the third, 25,000, a total of 46,000 men from an entire fighting force of about 200,000. The French had 130,000 men, and lost a total of 40,000 men. In the bloody battles before Sedan, Aug. 29, 30, and 31, McMahon had a force of 150,000 men, and the Prussians had 250,000. The loss is variously stated, but was probably about 20,000 for the Germans and 25,000 for the French, including all wounded. We can give no figures for our own war more probably accurate than those of Gen. Dodge in his "Bird's-eye View of Our Civil War." For four battles, which we may regard as typical engagements, these are as follows:

DATE AND BATTLE.	UNION.		CONFEDERATE.
	Engaged.	Killed and wounded.	Engaged.	Killed and wounded.
April 6-7, '62, Shiloh	54,000	13,000	50,000	11,500
May 1-4, '63, Chancellorsville	125,000	17,000	58,000	13,000
July 1-3, '63, Gettysburg	80,000	23,000	70,000	25,000
Stone River, Dec. 31, '62–Jan. 2, '63	43,000	12,000	47,000	10,000

In connection with these figures we may quote Dodge's comparison of American and foreign soldiers. The percentages that he gives cover sufficient ground to be a most valuable proof of his point. He says: "To attempt to give the American his proper place among the soldiers of other nations, ancient or modern, is an inquiry demanding a volume by itself. But the staunchness of the American in battle may be measured to a fair extent by a few statistics. Courage is only one of the necessary virtues of the soldier, but it is an important one, and if we take the average number of killed and wounded in the prominent battles of the past century and a half, we arrive at a conclusion reasonably secure. The following percentages of men killed and wounded are from the most reliable sources. They comprise the most noted battles since 1745. Only those whose statistics are wanting are omitted:

	Percentage
Up to Waterloo, the Prussians in eight battles lost in killed and wounded of the number engaged (mostly Frederick's)	.1400
At Koniggratz they lost	.0336
Up to Waterloo the Austrians lost in seven battles	.1147
Since in two battles	.0356
Up to Waterloo, the French lost in nine battles (Napoleon's)	.2238
Since, in nine battles	.0837
The Germans, since 1745, in eight battles	.1151
The English, in four battles	.1036
During our civil war, the Union forces lost in eleven battles	.1289
The Confederate forces	.1416

"It thus appears that in ability to stand heavy pounding, since Napoleon's Waterloo campaign, the American has shown himself pre-eminent. Of course there are other factors in the problem. But these figures may surely be looked upon with pride—even if no absolute conclusion can be drawn from them."—Inter Ocean.

From an examination of several skulls found in North and South America, and believed to have belonged to inhabitants living before the glacial period, Dr. Kollman concludes that the races of that ancient epoch are those of to-day, the same cranial and facial forms being found, in spite of lapse of time and change of environment.

Angle-worms, fish, etc., are often caught up into the clouds by revolving storms, and then dropped again many miles from the place where they were taken up. Small fish have often been found in puddles of water in village streets, to the astonishment of people who are unacquainted with the phenomenon.

HER SILENCE.

She moves in a mysterious way,
Ignoring callers, day by day;
With brow resolve and solemn face,
With measured air and queenly grace,
Following up each firm endeavor,
Seldom observing—smiling never.
Her meals she crunches all alone,
What, think you, makes this maiden fair
Move with a sad and solemn air?
Why does she never smile again

He understands her reason well;
He knows what all her grief's about
All her front teeth have been pulled out!

"How's Your Liver?"

In the comic opera of "The Mikado" his Imperial Highness says:

"To make, to some extent,
Each evil Liver
A running river
Of harmless merriment."

A nobler task than making evil livers rivers of harmless merriment no person, king, or layman, could take upon himself. The liver, among the ancients, was considered the source of all a man's evil impulses, and the chances are ten to one to-day that if one's liver is in an ugly condition of discontent some one's head will be mashed before night!

"How's your liver?" is equivalent to the inquiry: Are you a bear or an angel to-day?

Nine-tenths of the "pure-cussedness," the actions for divorce, the curtain lectures, the family rows, not to speak of murders, crimes and other calamities, are prompted by the irritating effect of the inactivity of the liver upon the brain. "I had one experience in this smoky old town that I will not forget soon," said the veteran actor, Joseph K. Rowe.

"What was the experience?"

"It was during the war, and everything was red-hot here. Old Beauregard was expected every day to come marching up across the hills from Virginia and burn the town. The city was full of soldiers, and they ran everything. We were playing here at the time, with Henderson as our manager. He had just got hold of a new war piece called the "Storming of Fort Fisher." It carried a good deal of red fire and spread-eagle, of course. Henderson though it would catch on, and it did. There was a scene in the play where the rebel Colonel tears down the American flag and tramples it under his feet, with an oath about the "Yankee rag," and a lot of that sort of stuff. The house was about two-thirds full of soldiers. Officers filled all the boxes, and most of them had been drinking. I knew how reckless the soldiers were, and felt a little leery about taking the part of the Colonel, but Henderson insisted. When I tore down the flag I heard the cocking of half a dozen revolvers in different parts of the house. One big fellow in a private's uniform, seated directly in front of the orchestra, rose up with a six-shooter in his hand and said: 'Drop that flag, Johnny.' I 'dropped' it like a hot potato, and retired as gracefully as circumstances would permit. How I was hissed, though. I tried to go on and finish my part, but it raised such a row that I wasn't permitted to go on the stage to even explain. Half the house didn't even wait to see the rest of the play. Next day I heard a young officer swear that if that blanked rebel Colonel pulled that flag down that night he'd put a hole clear through him. Well, I didn't like the character, and was working for money. The prospect of fighting the whole United States army, or that portion of it in Pittsburgh, from behind the scenes, was not alluring to me. I was young and eager for glory, but I didn't care to be made a martyr of, either for the Southern Confederacy or the dramatic profession. Consequently I informed Mr. Henderson that the flag would not be there that night for me to pull it down. He insisted. I resigned. He pleaded. I was firm. Then he talked compromise. It was finally settled this way: A 'super' was found who was highly elated with the prospect of doing something. So the reading was changed, and in the lines I ordered him to tear down the Yankee rag. This was received with hisses and calls, but the audience caught on to the concessions made to them, and let it go, and we had no more trouble."

"Why, you can have no idea of the bitterness of the war spirit here then. John E. Owens came up here to play 'Paul Pry.' It had been reported that Owens was Captain of the New Orleans Cocktail Guards. Those stories were frequent at the time about different members of the profession. Maggie Mitchell, it was claimed, trampled under foot the American flag, and was hissed for it dozens of times, although the story was a malicious lie. Well, Owens came in one day on the 4 o'clock train, and went into a barber shop to get shaved. While in the chair he heard a young officer swear that if that —— rebel came on the stage he should shoot him.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

A Convert.

First Merchant—No, sir, I don't believe half as strongly in Ingersoll as I did. In fact, I don't think he's right, let him say what he likes.

Second Merchant—Indeed? I thought you would come to that opinion in time. What changed your mind?

First M.—Well, I've lost two or three good customers who didn't like my standing up for Ingersoll's doctrines.

Second M.—Yes?

First M.—I have, and I've come to the conclusion that there's nothing like religion after all.

Second M.—I'm glad to hear you say so.

First M.—Yes, sir; and I've about made up my mind to do as lots of people do; that is, to show I'm not a follower of Ingersoll but a Christian.

Second M.—Ah! Going to make a profession of religion?

First M.—N—not exactly. I'll hire a pew in one of the churches.—Boston Courier.

Mr. G. E. Bryan, No. 151 Putnam street, Cleveland, Ohio, has naturally much experience in sickness with a family of seven children, and his doctors' and druggists' bills are heavy. He states publicly that he has given Red Star Cough Cure a thorough trial in his home, and finds it to be the best remedy that he has ever used for coughs or colds. It contains neither morphia nor opium, and therefore leaves no depressing effects.

Priority of Invention.

The following are points in decisions on priority of invention:

The party who first reduces an invention to actual use is entitled to the patent for it, although the other party may have first conceived it, if he did not exercise reasonable diligence in reducing it to practice.

If the party who first conceived a machine followed up the idea diligently, and was the first to reduce it to actual practice, he is entitled to a patent for it, although his competitors had complete working drawings of it previously prepared, and had obtained a patent.

Whoever first reduces an invention to practice, and makes an application of it to use, will usually be held the prior inventor.

In order to defeat a patent the courts require it to be shown that another not only conceived the invention in dispute before the patentee, but was also the first to perfect and adapt the same to practical use, or was using reasonable diligence for that purpose.

The parties who first embodied an invention in a machine which they kept in operation afterward for actual use, besides manufacturing and selling other machines, are prima facie entitled to that patent.

He is the inventor, entitled to the protection of the patent law, who is first to complete the invention and publish it to the world, and not he who confines the knowledge of it to his client.

Where an invention consists of a combination of elements, the date when all the elements are combined is the date of the invention.

When one is first to conceive an invention, throws aside all evidence of the conception, makes no effort to complete or introduce it to the public, and delays making an application for a patent nearly four years after another has brought it into extensive use, he has no standing as an inventor.—Electrical Review.

The Best Trap for Bachelors.

In a New Hampshire town a few years ago a club of young men kept up handsome rooms, a well-stocked sideboard and a pretty robust poker game. No one married. Finally the girls started a counter club. It included only young married people and those who were engaged. They met twice a week, had cards and other amusements, with a simple supper. It was the most popular gathering in town. Inside of two years its membership trebled and the other club died out.—Boston Record.

DARING DONALD

THE INDIAN SCOUT;
OR,
THE TREASURE TRAIN OF LOST RIVER.

By WELDON J. COBB,
AUTHOR OF
"At Her Mercy," "Love of Her Life," "The Telegraph Detective," "Wild Nan," "The Manacled Hand," Etc.

Publishers of The Chicago Ledger:

GENTLEMEN—The story of "DONALD MCKAY, the Celebrated Indian Scout," the manuscript of which is handed you herewith, embraces the most thrilling and eventful period in the life of that eminent chieftain and borderman. The facts employed in the same were given from McKAY'S own lips, and verified by such eminent authority as General Phil Sheridan, George Crook, Brigadier General of the Department of the Missouri, and other reliable authority. The portraits are authentic ones, the topography of the romance practically correct, and the capture of the Modoc chieftain, Captain Jack, with the startling incidents leading to that climax in a stormy episode in national history, are almost literally depicted as they occurred.

To-day the Government of the United States is debtor to DONALD MCKAY in the sum of twenty thousand dollars in gold for the dislodgement of the Modoc warriors in the lava beds—a feat performed after the expenditure of thousands of dollars and the loss of many men, among them the heroic Gen. Canby. Single-handed, DONALD MCKAY captured the terror of the West, Captain Jack; and this wonderful exploit and kindred adventures form a portion of the romance of this brave man, who is now Chief of the Umatilla Indians.

The iron warp of reality and the golden woof of romance intermingle in the story of "The Treasure Train of Lost River." The natural rapacity of savage hordes, the worthlessness of the renegade, the absorbing incidents of frontier capture, skirmish and rescue, all find a place in this story, and an earnest effort has been made throughout to show the natural bravery, intelligence, and shrewdness of this King of the Western War Trail, the oldest scout in the Government service, DONALD MCKAY.

In this connection I hand you one of several letters received concerning MCKAY, although he needs no indorsement, the press and history of the country perpetuating his deeds of valor and heroism.

LETTER OF BRIG. GEN. CROOK.

HEADQUARTERS DEPT. OF THE PLATTE,
COMMANDING GENERAL'S OFFICE,
OMAHA, Neb., July 11, 1882.

W. J. Cobb, Esq., Chicago:

MY DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your letter of the 8th inst., with reference to the record of Donald Mckay.

Mckay was a scout in my command during 1867-'8-'9, and served with me in Washington Territory, Oregon, Idaho, and Nevada, and must be very well known in that portion of the country. He was a good man and an excellent scout, and his services were valuable to me. I should think a narrative of his varied experiences in the Northwest would prove very interesting. Very respectfully yours,

GEORGE CROOK,
Brigadier General U. S. A.

The story above referred to will appear in THE CHICAGO LEDGER of September 26th, and be continued from week to week until completed.

This highly interesting history of Wild Life in the Far West has been secured by the proprietors of THE CHICAGO LEDGER at great expense, and will not be published in book form. The opening chapter will contain accurate portraits of Donald McKay and his wife, and succeeding chapters will be handsomely illustrated.

Send in your subscriptions early, and get the opening chapters of the most interesting narrative ever offered the reading public. Terms, one copy one year, $1.50; eight months, $1.00; six months, 80 cents; three months, 40 cents. For sale by all newsdealers.

To the Editor of the Journal:

DEAR SIR,—I take great pleasure in announcing through your columns to the the public the permanent organization of the "Charlevoix county Agricultural Society.

On the first day of September inst., the officers of the society were duly chosen, among whom Mr. Jas. Palmiter was chosen president, H. P. Barbour, treasurer, and Jas. Stone, secretary. The directors are: one year—Robt. Trimble, Nathan L. Cash, J. S. Dixon, and A. J. Stroud; two years—Hiram Hipp, Orlando Blair, Marion Hudkin, and John E. Darrah; three years—Wm. Healey, W. F. Empey, J. C. Glenn, and Wm. Mears.

This being our first move of the kind in the county in the direct interest of agriculture and the arts, we feel more anxious that our movement should not receive a cold reception by the people of the county, but that all should do what they can toward advancing the interest of this our first effort. The many advantages growing out of the formation of such a society are not to be counted in dollars and cents; for in the first place it brings together the people of the different towns with their agricultural products, by means of which they are led to become acquainted with each other and exhibit the products of their farms. In this way a healthy emulation is created and a noble rivalry springs up, challenging competition to excel in raising whatever the soil may produce and in bringing to the highest state of perfection the horse, the ox, the sheep, and that most useful of animals the cow; together with the hog and domestic fowls. What may be said of state fairs as to their usefulness may be said of county fairs. At the former, people from different parts of the state meet and exchange views, and exhibit their best horse or cow,—in short any thing that may be reared on a farm. The same with a county fair. And no more can be said of the Centennial Exhibition as to its usefulness when the whole world was on show, than may be truly said of our newly organized agricultural society. To be sure the first was on a grander scale but they differ only in degree. The society has secured the rink as a suitable place for a floral hall and art exhibition. Sheds and pens will be erected in the near vicinity for live stock. The first, second, and third days of October have been selected as the time for the exhibition. The East Jordan cornet band will be present to enliven the scene with right good music and we are looking forward to a gay time, provided the generous citizens of Charlevoix county will turn out and help us to advance this good work.

Premiums to the amount of $500 will be distributed among the successful competitors. As this is the nucleus toward which in the future, the whole people of the county will look with admiration. We invite one and all to bring their finest pictures, their most delicate flowers, and their prettiest babies to adorn floral hall, and we will venture to say that the first, second, and third days of October next will be held by them in pleasing remembrance ever after.

Yours truly,
C. W. DUNHAM.

Clarion.

Fine fall weather.

Those that have threshed report a fair crop of wheat and oats.

Potatoes and corn look fine.

Mr. Ealy, of Petoskey, has moved to Clarion. He is to be night watch in Blood Bros. mill and handle factory.

Johnson & Mills shipped a carload of shingles last week.

The windmill is in operation and will grind feed, graham, etc.

The bowl factory is running at full capacity.

The total number of children, between the ages of five and twenty in Melrose township as returned by the directors of the several school districts, is 92.

Blood Bros. are turning a fine lot of broom handles.

Dan. Herrington is the happy father of a fine girl. He is now pushing his residence to completion. It will be a handsome one when finished.

John A. Hass has returned from Dakota. He thinks of moving there in the near future.

The taxes to be raised in Melrose township for school purposes for the ensuing year amount to $905 and the valuation of the school houses, $1175.

N. A Card, a rising young democrat of Melrose, will teach the Norwood school this winter. He is a No. 1 teacher.

Burgess.

Philip Howe has bought a lot in Charlevoix, and will build on it and move there.

The sick at Mr. Gibson's are convalescing.

The board of school inspectors were in session Monday and Tuesday of this week.

John Brown has threshed over 500 bushels of grain this fall.

The man that is famous for gastronomy, had a set back after visiting Charlevoix lately and hasn't felt well since.

Several threshing machines in town this week and good weather for threshing.

Heavy frost in some localities Tuesday evening.

Mr. Leeds is expected here soon, to return with with his family to Louisville, Ky.

The absolute monarchy has subsided to a limited; with few adherents. [Chap. five.]

Sometimes things get badly mixed in the mail,—here as well as elsewhere.

Eastport.

Warm weather.

News rather scarce.

No damaging frosts as yet.

D. D. Blakely is making improvements on his house, preparing for winter, as many others ought.

We wish it distinctly understood that Eastport has had a law suit. And we didn't have to go out of our own town for attorneys either. [The balance of this interesting story can not be given, page two of the letter having been, by some accident, omitted in sealing the envelope.]

Farm for Sale or Exchange.

One hundred acres of the best farming land, 40 acres improved, over 40 apple trees bearing, good buildings, seven miles from Charlevoix. Will be sold cheap for cash, or will exchange for other property. For further particulars inquire at this office. 1041f

Facts About the Sutler.

I sing the song of the sutler who fought in the battle of life,
The song of the prize-packet artist who never got into the strife;
Not the song of the soldier who never forgot to lay claim
To the greenbacks that stuck in the jack-pot at the end of a winter night game.
But the song of the beautiful sutler, who traveled in sunshine and rain
For the sake of the almighty dollar and whatever else he could gain.
And his youth bore no flower on its branches, but his age was a bright, sunny day,
For the prize that he gloriously grasped at was the cash that he carried away.
And the work that he did for the army in the rear of the soldiers was seen,
Where he set up his crackers and herrings and the smell of the festive sardine
That he sold to the boys on a credit or the clamp of a paymaster's lease,
And six boxes he gave for five dollars, while the rest brought a dollar apiece,
While the world at large sheds a tear to the hero who may be bereft,
I drink to the grand army sutler, who never was known to get left;
How he held to his faith unseduced with the glint of the cash in his eye,
And for this great cause how he suffered—for the cash, not the country, he'd die.
Then rear to the sutler a temple of granite and brass that will stay
Where the spirit of Shylock shall hover and shine on the blue and the gray,
That once paid a tribute to genius with a gall that no mortal could rule,
And a smile like a lightning-rod peddler and a cheek like the grand army mule.
—Colonel John A. Joyce.

THE GEYSERS.

A Great Natural Curiosity Newly Visited —Scalding Water and Hot Mud Pots.

My first glimpse of a geyser in action was at the end of a long prospective of pine-bordered road, as we came down from the hill-tops toward the Fire Hole river. Jolting over deep ruts and projecting stumps of the newly-made road, suddenly, against a background of blue gray hill, arose a column of soft white steam. For a few moments it attained a lofty height, and then slowly dissolved into air. Involuntarily we had taken off our hats and made our bow. "It is the Great Fountain in the Lower Basin," said our communicative driver. The river bank presented an animated appearance as we reached the top of the overhanging ridge; wagons and tents dotted the level in all directions; campfires were being lighted, and all the busy preparations for approaching night were engaging the attention of the campers. But to us the pillars of steam rising on all sides and hovering overhead like a cloud were the first objects of attention.

The latest item of wonder was a new geyser that had broken out, and each morning played its waters in sight of the hotel. This early riser had been named the Cleveland by some of the admirers of the then democratic nominee for president. The notice bearing the name had been removed, however, and one bearing the words "Officially named the Crevice" substituted in its place; but the first, like Banquo's ghost, would not down, and so the war waged.

In the morning the whole basin was filled with steam, condensed during the night. In the following description I intend only to speak of the geysers in a picturesque sense, not trying to make a theory in regard to their action; neither will I inflict a certain "oatmeal theory," being unable to accept it myself. We were not at the geysers under any remarkable circumstances, as is claimed by so many tourists; there was no special exhibition of water jets for us. The marvels of the Geyser basin are enough, without extra sensations. Neither do I consider it a matter of importance to tell those things which so soon pass from the mind—exact distances, heights, etc.

The three basins, Upper, Middle, and Lower, seem to me to have been about six miles in length by half a mile in width on the average. The Fire Hole river flows through each and drains the outpouring waters, and although this stream is of considerable width, depth, and swiftness, an eruption of the Giant is said to almost double its volume. We were not fortunate enough to see the monster in anger, but looked down his throat in repose. Even then his heated breath forbade a too close inspection—but I anticipate. The road follows along the river bank after leaving the first group of geysers, of which the Fountain is the most important, and shortly after passes by the Ægeria springs, or Middle basin. Raised in a high terrace, they can not be seen from the road; only the water which comes pouring over the brink is visible. More of them anon.

Soon we reach the first installment of those beautiful springs or wells, which abound in such numbers that to count them would be a task. Nature has apparently used the arrangement of the solar spectrum in obtaining her effect, which is startling in its brilliancy. Imagine a deep, round pool, of vivid emerald, or sulphurous blue, and then surround it with cones of vermilion, crimson, dun, primrose, and deep yellow, on a white or gray mound, and you have a correct image of it yourself, remembering all this, that they show all degrees of action, from perfect calm to a gentle simmer, on to bubble and gurgle, and finally to those which boil with passion and vehemence indescribable. That many of the springs should be named after the spirit vulgarly called the devil is natural. There are devil's wells, caldrons, and punch-bowls; why no one has thought to give him a kettle is a mystery to me. Once fairly among the famous geysers of the Upper basin, you hardly know which way to turn. Here are the fierce, spasmodic Grotto, the powerful Giant, the massive Castle, and last, but by no means least, majestic Old Faithful. We had not pitched our tent before it was time for that standby to give an exhibition, and, true to his reputation, it came to the minute; at first two or three preliminary jets, as though he were trying his strength, and then the waters shot to a height of over two hundred feet. It marks a period in one's life, the witnessing of that grand display. During our stay the Castle indulged in an eruption which lasted, with varying force, for several hours. Old Faithful joined it several times, his periods of action being fifty-five minutes apart; while those two were playing a third geyser followed their example and sent a rocket-like stream skyward. It was the Splendid, on the opposite side of the river; so the three played in sight at once.

On walking over to the Blue Crested spring, and viewing the Castle from that point, the outlines seemed familiar to me. I certainly had seen them elsewhere. It was in the Provo valley, of Utah, which undoubtedly at one time was the theater of exactly such performances as are now taking place in the Yellowstone. The big boiling pot and attendant spring must have been in their youth a counterpart of these two now before me. Moreover, Provo valley bears a strong resemblance to Fire Hole basin; a high conical hill, a striking object in the valley, has its duplicate in the basin. The Provo canyon also bears the same relative position as the canyon of the Madison. Ages past, then, Provo valley was occupied by thermal springs and geysers, subject to the same laws as those in the park. Now, in their old age, their mounds are grass grown, and the tiller of the soil runs his plow to their very foot, and of their crumbling geyserine builds a wall around his field. When Provo valley was first discovered, other denizens than these held possession; the deadly rattlesnake, attracted by the lingering warmth in the old basins, had made there his home. Five hundred of these reptiles were destroyed in a single day by the invaders of their strange haunts.

Some of the geysers in the park are lacking both cone and mound, and in a state of rest cannot be distinguished from the springs. The Fountain is of this description. Endless are the forms, material and texture of the crater rims, polished, rough, flaky; some are named from their peculiarity in this respect, as the Sponge; some are surrounded with globes, hard as cannon balls, and others are fritted as with hoar frost; the basins of many are scalloped and embroidered with delicate patterns; there are wedded and single geysers, and whole family groups.

Take my advice and indulge in the luxury of a solitary walk; it will repay you. Don't take a guide book; never mind the names; try to forget they have a name, and so experience some of the thrill of the first beholders. Such a luxury was ours after sundown, and many were the sights and marvels we seemingly discovered. The strangest of these was a round pool, tranquil at first. Without warning, a mass of water was belched up from the center, making the whole pool in commotion. By the time it had subsided to quiet, another ejection took place, and so continuually. In the twilight, threading between the fissures became a feat of some difficulty. The scalding water would spit viciously and the hot mud pots were a constant trap. Both tent and supper were welcome.

Could we not rest contented with the sights of that day? Apparently not, for, after an hour's rest, a moonlight ramble was in order. A foot bridge crosses the river to where more of the heated and troubled waters gushed from the earth's depths; ghostly, indeed, were they then, the warm colors being dimmed, and the cold ones being brought out with more force by the cold gray light.

We have deferred our inspection of Hell's Half Acre until our return trip, and right glad am I that we did so. All other things would have palled after the unapproachable beauty of Prismatic lake, at once so lovely and awful. Words can not tell of the shimmering, evanescent tints which played upon its surface, and few would believe the brightness of its zones. It occupies an immense mound of geyserine, probably of its own creating, and you approach it up a series of slightly raised terraces, splashing through the overflow. Nearer the river, on the same mound, is the Cliff Caldron, sharing attention with its rival. It is plainly of more recent origin, having broken through the old deposit which walls it around on three sides. These walls are of dazzling white and yellow, and are crumbling, tottering piecemeal into the indigo depths. The following information is from the Hayden report: "Cliff Caldron was long thought to be simply a boiling spring; subsequently it has been proven to be a most formidable geyser, in fact the greatest and most powerful in the world. There seems to be no set period to its eruptions, which when they occur are of such force as to shake the surrounding earth."

There are other springs which elsewhere would be of interest, but in such company they receive but little attention.

EASTERN.

In the annual regatta of the New York Yacht Club, the Genesta won the Douglas cup for cutters or sloops, and the Grayling the Bennett cup for schooners.

The English team was defeated in the international cricket match at Philadelphia.

The cotton-mills at Lawrence, Mass., which have been closed for a year, are to resume at once, giving employment to nearly 3,000 operatives.

Seven hundred feet of an embankment thirty feet in height on the New York, Lake Shore and Buffalo Railway, near Glen Erie, has sunk suddenly, taking down the track. A new road will be built around the cavity.

The pier of the Royal Netherlands Steamship Company, in Jersey City, was partly destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $60,000. A large number of telegraph and telephone wires were burned.

Advices from Philadelphia are to the effect that coal of all kinds will be advanced at an early day at the mines on account of the increasing demand for shipment.

An explosion of natural gas at Sharpsburg, Pa., fatally injured two persons. The concussion threw a passing street car from the track.

At Pittsburgh, Pa., the Coroner held an inquest on a piece of bone one inch long, all that remained of John Ostermeir, a 14-year-old boy, who met a sudden and terrible death by being ground to pieces in a rock-crusher. The unfortunate lad was engaged feeding rock to the crusher, and fell in, and before the engine could be stopped he was crushed to atoms, a small piece of bone being all that was left when his fellow-workmen went to look for him.

Thomas J. Curran, of New York, was elected President of the International Boiler-Makers' Brotherhood, in session at New York.

WESTERN.

A distemper among hogs in the district of Shirland and Rockton, Ill., and Newark, Wis., has resulted in heavy losses to farmers. The disease swept away 2,000 hogs in the past two weeks.

Several lumber mills in Northern Michigan have been closed owing to the ten-hour law, the men refusing to work more than the statutory number of hours unless wages are proportionately increased. At Manistee alone 1,000 men are idle.

A Bismarck (Dak.) dispatch says "The prairie fires continue in every direction, and unless rain comes soon the whole country will be burned over. Farmers who have escaped now have their grain well protected by plowed fire-breaks, and are busy hauling their hay to places of safety. At this time fires moving toward the woods in Washburn County and this county have run down Bart Creek to the timber on the Missouri bottoms in Emmons County, south. Most of the low meadows have been burned over in this and Kidder Counties."

A dispatch from the West says that work has been resumed at the Rock Springs, Wyoming, coal mines, with a force of Chinese miners and a few white mechanics. The white miners refused to work, and were paid off. No violence was attempted, but the situation was threatening, and Gen. McCook advised the President to declare martial law in Wyoming. It was believed that a general strike would be ordered along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad by the Knights of Labor.

Hog cholera in a virulent form is prevalent in many portions of the West.

Wilcoxen's flouring mill, at Lewiston, Ill., was burned, entailing a loss of $70,000, with but $16,000 insurance.

Indianapolis telegram: "General reports from every county in the State on the yield of the cereal crops show that in the Northern Indiana counties the average yield per acre of wheat is fifteen bushels, central counties twelve bushels, and southern eight bushels. The average yield per acre for the whole State is eleven bushels. The actual area of wheat harvested, according to the best attainable data, is 2,560,900 acres. This shows the production for the year to be 28,169,900 bushels."

A Lewiston (Idaho) dispatch gives the following account of the lynching of five Mongolians: "Five Chinamen, implicated in the murder of Daniel Frazier and a robbery in Pierce City, were taken from jail by citizens last night and hanged to convenient trees. Mr. Frazier, who was one of the pioneers of Southern Idaho, was well known and respected. His room in the rear of his store was entered on the night of the 11th inst., and he was murdered and his body horribly mutilated. An attempt was then made to blow open the safe, which was unsuccessful. The tracks on the outside of the building showed that a Chinaman had done the deed. In the next five days thirteen Chinamen were arrested, and finally five confessed to the deed. These were taken out and summarily disposed of."

Disguised and armed men visited the Black Diamond Mines, near Seattle, W. T., drove the Chinese from their houses, and burned the premises.

A St. Louis policeman who had been whipped several times by people who objected to being arrested, killed himself while insane from injuries and fear.

A dispatch from Omaha says the Knights of Labor have served their ultimatum upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company, demanding, among other things the dismissal of B. O. Clark, Superintendent of the Coal Department, and the discharge of all Chinese employes. The dispatch states that the officials of the company do not believe that these demands will be pressed. Quiet prevails at Rock Springs, and the working force at the mines is increasing. The troops will not be withdrawn for the present.

SOUTHERN.

Miss Sallie McDonald, of Boyle County, Kentucky, claims to have been cured of an obstinate spinal complaint through the prayers and laying on of hands of a Cincinnati parson.

A coal barge was wrecked near Galveston, Texas, two of the lifeboat's crew and the crew of five on board the barge perishing.

Nicholas Snowden, a negro who recently outraged a little colored girl, was taken from jail at Ellicott City, Maryland, and hanged, by a mob composed of members of his own race.

In a drunken quarrel near Stanford, Ky., William Ball, a well-known distiller, was shot and instantly killed by his son George.

At Johnston, S. C., an alleged murderer was taken from the Sheriff by a mob, shot several times, and left for dead. He subsequently revived, made a statement implicating several of the lynchers, and died.

Ten convicts escaped from a plantation near Hearne, Texas, visited the latter town, and entering a hotel purloined the garments of the male members of a theatrical troupe, leaving their striped suits behind. A large posse started in pursuit, and reports have reached Hearne that four of the criminals had been recaptured.

New Orleans finances are at a very low ebb, in consequence of wasteful expenditures. The city employes have not been paid since June and the teachers since April.

WASHINGTON.

The Treasury Department has issued orders for the inspection of all vessels coming from ports infected with small-pox.

A formal order has been made for the immediate removal of all of the illegal fences on the public domain in the Western States and Territories.

The issue of standard silver dollars during the week was 661,443.

In the case of Paymaster General Smith, defendant's counsel have applied to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for an injunction restraining the Secretary of the Navy from further proceedings against their client, on the ground that the court-martial had no jurisdiction.

John W. Mackay is at Washington urging the allowance by the General Land Office of $250,000 to the Bank of Nevada for money advanced on surveying contracts. Commissioner Sparks refuses to pay the claim until a thorough investigation can be made into the matter.

POLITICAL.

Washington telegram: "Gen. Rosecrans, the Register of the Treasury, has thought the thing over, and has concluded that it would not be in consonance with the policy of the administration for him to accept the invitation to take part in the Ohio campaign, and has so informed the Democratic State Committee. It is understood that before coming to this conclusion he consulted with the President, who took very firm ground against officials leaving their desks to take part in political campaigns."

The Prohibitionists of Iowa met in State convention at Cedar Rapids and placed in the field the following ticket: For Governor, James Mickelwaite, of Mills; for Lieutenant Governor, W. H. Steer, of Cedar; for Supreme Judge, Jacob Rogers, of Fayette; for Superintendent of Schools, William H. Tatt, of Mills.

The letter of Mr. Dorman B. Eaton to the President, under date of July 28, tendering his resignation as a member of the civil-service commission, and the reply of Mr. Cleveland accepting the same, to take effect Nov. 1, were given to the press last week. The correspondence is quite lengthy, Mr. Eaton testifying in the strongest terms to the fidelity with which the President has executed the reform laws, and the latter announcing his determination of adhering to the policy already adopted.

Col. Absalom Baird has been appointed Inspector General of the Army by the President.

Ex-Congressman S. M. Stockslager, of Indiana, has been appointed Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The New York Republican State Convention met at Saratoga on the 22d of September. Senator Warner Miller was made temporary, and James W. Husted permanent, Chairman. An informal ballot was taken for Governor, thirteen candidates being placed before the convention, with the following result: Davenport, 105; Carr, 295; Morton, 42; Seward, 57; Swinburne, 32; Low, 10; Warren, 137; Drexel, 37; Bliss, 53; Cornell, 4; Evarts, 1; Starin, 1; Charles Andrews, 1. The convention then adjourned until the following morning. Upon reassembling a second ballot was taken, Davenport receiving 215 and Carr 102. On the third ballot there was a landslide for Davenport, and his nomination was made unanimous amid great cheering. The whole convention then yelled "Carr" for second place. General Carr was quickly nominated for the Lieutenant Governorship by acclamation. The remainder of the ticket went through with a rush, and when it was completed stood as follows: For Governor, Congressman Ira Davenport of Steuben County; for Lieutenant-Governor, Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr of Rensselaer County and at present Secretary of State; for Secretary of State, Col. Anson S. Wood of Wayne County; for Controller, James W. Wadsworth of Livingston County; for Treasurer, Charles F. Ulrich of New York County; for Attorney General, Senator Edward B. Thomas; for State Engineer and Surveyor, William V. Van Rensselaer of Seneca County. The platform, which is very lengthy, demands the strengthening and extension of the civil-service laws of the State and nation and the rigid enforcement of their provisions; favors the repeal of the silver-coinage law; reiterates the protective tariff resolution adopted by the last Republican National Convention; condemns "the hypocrisy of the Democratic party in pledging itself before election to civil-service reform, and after election denouncing through its press and its leaders the civil-service act as unconstitutional, while the national administration removes tried and faithful public servants, and replaces them with persons whose only recommendation is active and, in some instances, disreputable political work;" declares it "the duty of the Republican majority of the Senate to oppose the confirmation of any person appointed in violation of the letter or spirit of the civil-service act;" insists that "the right of suffrage must be maintained free and untrammeled" in all of the States; and recommends the passage of various measures for the benefit of the laboring classes. The candidate for Governor, Ira Davenport, is at present a Congressman, having been elected last fall. He has large business interests, and has proved to be a most successful business man. He has been Trustee of the Grand Army of the Republic Soldiers' Home, and Treasurer of the Davenport Female Orphan Asylum. He has been a State Senator, and was State Comptroller in 1881 and 1882.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Montreal committee acting in behalf of Riel, the condemned rebel, have issued an appeal asking French-speaking people to assist in saving him from the gallows. Riel's counsel has gone to England to intercede in his behalf.

Omana, the Mexican Congressman who recently killed the American, Hardie, will be tried for murder, it having been decided that he cannot claim immunity on account of his official position.

A freight train on the Lake Shore Road was thrown from the track at Fairview and completely wrecked. The engineer and fireman were thrown under the wreck, but managed to extricate themselves. The former, Michael Brocen, of Collingwood, Ont., signaled a coming passenger train, and succeeded in stopping it before it reached the wreck. The grateful passengers made up a purse of $500 for him.

Fire destroyed Aukam & Co.'s shirt factory at Troy, N. Y., valued at $75,000, and Jenks & Co.'s flouring mills at Sand Beach, Mich.; loss, $50,000.

Small-pox has broken out in a tenement in Grand street, New York, four cases having already developed. The source of the malady is unknown. During the week there were 216 deaths from small-pox in Montreal.

The small-pox epidemic is unabated at Montreal, and the provincial authorities have ordered a general vaccination.

A wrecking crew of twenty men from St. Johns at work on a stranded vessel off the Dominion coast were drowned during a gale.

FOREIGN.

Disastrous rains and consequent floods are prevalent in Southeastern Spain.

Eight persons who were arrested at the great Socialist meeting in London Sunday have been fined and sentenced to brief terms of imprisonment for resisting officers. William Morris, the poet, is under arrest for assaulting the police during the hearing of these cases.

Eastern dispatches report that Prince Alexandria of Bulgaria has arrived at Philippopolis, and the Bulgarian flag floats over that city. It is officially announced at Constantinople that Turkey will resort to arms to restore the statu quo. A general levy has been ordered in Bulgaria, and it is rumored that the armies of Austria, Greece, and Servia are being mobilized. A revolt is imminent in Albania and Macedonia. Gen. Dragalski, commander of the Roumelian militia, is under arrest. The Austrian Government disclaims any intention of annexing Bosnia and Herzegovina. The signatory powers are in active correspondence regarding the existing complications. The English and continental stock markets are depressed and panicky.

Mrs. Weldon, the English vocalist, has been released from prison, having served a six months' term for libeling a London theatrical manager. Her admirers celebrated the event by an enthusiastic demonstration in Trafalgar Square.

Since the outbreak of cholera in Spain there have been over 100,000 deaths from the disease.

Spain's apology for the insults to the German Embassy at Madrid has been accepted by Prince Bismarck.

A cable dispatch says that such immense crowds attended a concert given by Christine Nilsson at Stockholm, Sweden, that seventeen persons were crushed to death. The accident occurred after the concert and while Mme. Nilsson was singing from the balcony of the Grand Hotel. The crowd numbered 30,000 at the time of the accident.

Constantinople dispatches state that "Turkish troops have had a skirmish with the Roumelian forces on the Mantza River. The latter are tearing up the railways on the frontier and fortifying the roadways. Serious disorders are reported from Macedonia. In a circular to the powers, Prince Alexander announces the union of Bulgaria and Roumelia. The Porte has protested to the signatory powers of the treaty of Berlin against the union, and announced that it will take measures to enforce its rights. A demonstration against the annexation of Bosnia by Austria has been made by students at Belgrade. The situation is regarded as critical at all the European capitals."

Three Afghan regiments have left Cabul for Herat.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

According to an enumeration just taken, the population of Des Moines, Iowa, is 32,469, an increase of 10,061 since 1880.

Strong opposition to the proposed sale of the lands known as the "Oklahoma and Cherokee strips" has developed among the Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians.

Joseph Fisher and his three children were burned to death in their farm dwelling near Waubeck, Iowa. A dispatch from Altamosa, Iowa, gives the following particulars of the shocking affair:

About midnight Mr. Fisher was aroused by the crackling and glare of flames, which were making their way through the lower portion of the house and enveloping the stairway. Taking a infant child from his wife's arms he attempted to descend the stairway with it, but was driven back by the fire and smoke. A second effort also failed; then he attempted to cross a small corridor and enter the room where the other two children slept to rouse them, but was suddenly overpowered by the smoke, and fell to the floor with the child in his arms and utterly unconscious. His wife endeavored to wake him from this deadly stupor, but it was in vain. With the energy of despair the wife burst into the room where the children were sleeping, intending to throw a feather bed out upon the ground and drop the children upon it. She was also overcome by the heat and smoke, and when her senses returned she found herself lying upon the ground near the smoldering ruins of her home, bereft of husband and children. The charred remains of Mr. Fisher and the infant child were found in the ruins, but no trace of the bodies of the other two children has been discovered.

The President has appointed the following-named Presidential Postmasters:

Thomas Hardeman at Macon, Ga., vice Wm. W. Brown, resigned; Charles B. Draper at Oconomowoc, Wis., vice Warham Parks, resigned; B. D. Meek at Eureka, Ill., vice F. B. Jeanhert, resigned; John S. Cottrell at Fort Scott, Kansas, vice T. F. Robiy, resigned; T. S. Reefy at Elyria, Ohio, vice T. E. Bishop, resigned; F. D. Durton at Batesville, Ark., vice J. S. Thomas, resigned; Wm. L. Williams at Melrose, Mass., vice Susan E. Eastman, resigned; Adrian Foote at Ashland, Mass., vice James H. Jones, deceased; E. A. Pueschal at Bakersfield, Cal., vice H. A. Wickwire, deceased; Oliver T. Dale at Monticello, Ind., vice W. J. Hull, suspended; P. D. Stevens at Sacramento, Cal., vice Chris Green, suspended.

An effort will be made at the approaching convention of the Irish National League of America to raise $225,000 to enable Mr. Parnell to guarantee ninety members of Parliament £100 each annually for five years.

In an address before a great crowd at London Mr. Chamberlain said he would never become a member of a Cabinet which did not adopt reform measures. Newman Hall's complimentary reference to the royal family brought forth a storm of derision which lasted several minutes.

In the Dakota Constitutional Convention it was decided to let the first Legislature arrange for submitting the question of woman suffrage to the people.

The President has appointed the following Collectors of Customs: Charles C. Sweeney, for the District of Galveston, Tex.; Otto L. Threlkeld, for the District of Saluria, Tex.; J. G. Cocke, for the District of Brazos de Santiago, Tex.

A rather curious letter was received by the President the other day. It calls upon him to resign by Oct. 2. The writer signs himself, "Henry M. Kerp, President-elect of the United States, Phil. Dr., M. D., professor of military and civil jurisprudence, National Military Home, Virginia." He addresses the President as "Grover Cleveland, acting President," and says: "Your functions are no longer required. All acts made by you after Oct. 3 will be null and void." He attaches to the letters orders numbered from 2162 to 2170 to each of the Cabinet officers, addressing each as "Acting Secretary." To Secretary Bayard the writer tenders his thanks for the faithful performance of his duty, but cautions him not to "pay too much attention to these scribbling newspaper critics," and requests that the Secretary will have no direct diplomatic intercourse with any British subject, nor their Spanish or Russian allies. He calls upon Gen. Black to resign "Sept. 19," and closes with: "Dieu et mon droit."

Maj. Edward Brown, a prominent lawyer of Boston, who is charged with heavy embezzlements from clients, has disappeared from that city, and is supposed to have gone to Canada.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Hillsdale College has between 350 and 400 students.

—The Pioneer says that work on new buildings is now in progress in all parts of Manistique.

—From fifteen to twenty head of cattle die weekly in Detroit from what is known as Texas fever.

—"Billy" Burns, the notorious burglar, has been sentenced at Detroit to fifteen years in the penitentiary.

—The first plat of Howell village was recorded Nov. 10, 1835, and there is talk of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary.

—Latest London market reports show that Michigan white wheat commands two cents a bushel there more than other American wheat.

—W. L. Hutchinson, of Rogersville, has 100 swarms of bees, and his product of honey this year will be 4,000 pounds, 1,000 pounds of which has already been sold to Chicago parties.

—Michigan charges any railroad $500 which shall employ as engineer, dispatcher, fireman or brakeman a man who is not theoretically and actually a total abstainer from intoxicating liquors.

—At Birch Run, Saginaw County, the two-year-old son of Thomas Johnson, while playing with a revolver, discharged the weapon, the ball going through the head and killing him instantly.

—Robert Crawford, father of James Crawford, of Armada Township, died last week on the farm where he had lived over fifty years. Mr. Crawford is said to have read the Bible through sixty-five times.

—Probably the largest sale of wool that has taken place in Southern Michigan for many years was consummated at Ann Arbor recently. A firm of that place sold to an Eastern party 320,000 pounds of wool in one lot, from which they realized $100,000. The wool, when loaded, will make a train of thirty-four cars.

—The only change from local time to standard time is a slight change either in the mental habits or the actual habits of the people. There is no mystery about it. People in Detroit must either eat, sleep, or go about their business half an hour earlier as regards actual noon and midnight, or accustom themselves to doing those things at a half hour previous to the former hour of doing them. In two weeks they will not be conscious of the change. It is of little importance either way.—Free Press.

—James Farm, who lives at Greenwood, in the upper peninsula, wants the broom for the best bear-shoot. He was out early last Sunday, saw a large she-bear, and, aiming carefully at a vital point, fired. The brute dropped, and when he got to the place where she lay dead, he was surprised to see a cub behind her, also dead, killed by the same ball. Later in the day he shot another cub, killing that also with one ball. If it had been any other day than the Lord's Mr. Farm would have doubled his already good record.—Detroit News.

—About one year ago the Pacific Express Company was robbed at Peru, Ind., the express messenger being gagged and valuables taken. A reward of $1,500 was offered for the arrest and conviction of the robbers. Detective Pat O'Neil, of Detroit, was employed on the case, and succeeded in bringing to punishment the perpetrators, D. W. Downer, "Little Al," and Bert Lewis, the express messenger. Payment of the reward having been refused, E. F. Conley, of Detroit, brings suit against the Pacific Express Company for $2,000 damages, being the reward, with interest and expenses. The suit is a novel one, being probably the first of its kind.

—People who get their idea of the sawmill from the establishments outside of the lumber regions have little idea of the capacity of the mills in which lumber is manufactured. One of the great mills in the Michigan lumber district will handle from 1,000 to 1,500 logs every day. The mills will probably average 5,000 logs a week or 20,000 logs a month. All the ingenuity and energy of the lumbermen has been directed to the quick handling of these logs or the rapid turning of the rough material into lumber. They have so far succeeded that each mill will turn out from 80,000 to 110,000 feet of lumber every day. Every contrivance that can aid the men in handling and turning the logs or in turning out lumber has been pushed to wonderful perfection.—Inter Ocean.

—Dr. George Whitfield Fish, ex-United States Consul to China and Tunis, and a well-known resident of Flint, died at his home in that city, of pneumonia. He was 70 years old. Dr. Fish was a native of Kortright, Delaware County, N. Y., and came to Flint in 1839 after having obtained a medical education in Eastern schools. In 1850 he went to Panama as surgeon for the Panama Railroad, and in 1859 went to China, where he was appointed Consul at Ning-Po. In this connection he was present at the storming of Ning-Po by the Taipings. At the breaking out of the civil war he enlisted as surgeon in the Fourth Michigan Cavalry. He was taken prisoner by the Confederates at Stone River. Returning from the war, where he was one of the party who captured Jeff Davis, he started the Saginaw Daily Enterprise, and became successively Collector of Internal Revenue for the Sixth District of Michigan, State Senator, and Trustee of the Flint Asylum.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Fidelity.

So long ago! It seems but yesterday
We stood beneath the quivering stars to part;
He hopeful as a man, my woman heart
Faint with foreboding. "Love," I hear him say—
"Let you bright stars be witness while away
That I am true, for doubting doth impart
A pain more grievous than the passing smart
Of separation." I am old and gray,
But still I wait and watch the stars at night.
I've ceased to hope, I have no voice for prayer,
I cease to dream his form doth glad my sight,
I only love and trust. The stars are there
And he is true." And love will unite
Our sundered souls, or here or otherwhere.

She Misunderstood Him.

He had an auburn-haired girl, and promised to take her out riding. She met him at the door when he drove up, and he exclaimed, "Hello, ready?" She misunderstood him, and they don't speak now," —Norristown Herald.

Taking a Couple of Horns.

Smith purchased a "muley" cow and drove her home yesterday evening. The animal was a curiosity to his children.

"Oh, what a tow!" exclaimed little three-year-old; "it dot no horns."

"Papa has 'em," said five-year-old.

"Why don't 'e put 'em on 'e tow?"

"I don't know. I heard him say he had swallowed a couple of horns afore breakfast, and I guess they are inside of him now. Mamma told him he woud swallow the cow afore six weeks."—Newman Independent.

Women as Yardsticks.

One cause of the difference between the poetry of Asia and Europe is found in the different positions of women. The justice done to women is, as a rule, an accurate gauge of the intellectual development of a country. Our own country is the greatest exception to this rule; China is one of the best examples of it. That country, with the possible exceptions of India and Egypt, is the oldest civilized country known. It has always degraded its women, and it is the only great nation that mutilates them. The partial justice, the courtesy, shown women in Europe is traceable to Greek literature, to Roman law, and to the influence of the old Tentonic religions and customs. The worship of the Virgin was one of the strongest influences that elevated women in Europe. This any one who dips into the literature of the middle ages will see plainly enough.—John Swinton's Paper.

They Waited for the Bell.

"All women are alike in their fear of the cars," said an Illinois Central conductor. "They carry their caution to absurd extremes. That reminds me of a little story: Down in the southern part of the State we have put up at road crossings some of the old-fashioned signs, 'Look out for the cars when the bell rings.' At one of the crossings the other day two women came up, driving an old horse hitched to a buggy. They looked all about and couldn't see any cars, but happend to read the sign. 'Stop,' said one, 'I hear a bell.' They both listened, and, sure enough, they heard a bell tinkling. One of the women got out, and, amid considerable excitement, took hold of the horse's bridle. The other one tightened her grip on the lines, set her jaws, and prepared for the worst. They looked anxiously up the track for the train, but still couldn't see it, though they could hear the bell a little plainer than before. They waited and waited. Five minutes passed, then ten, and still no train. The old horse went to sleep, while the women's nerves, from long straining, threatened to throw them into hysterics. Nearer and nearer came the bell against which the sign warned them, and so they stood still. In about a quarter of an hour an old brindle cow came walking down the pasture by the side of the track, chewing her cud and monotonously jingling her bell. One of the women cried from nervousnes, and the other one got mad at the railroad company, and said they were old monopolies, anyhow."

Casting Pearls, Etc.

It is perhaps no exaggeration to say that two-thirds of the life of the average woman is spent in picking up and putting in order what other people throw down or scatter about, and this tiresome, disagreeable work she is expected to perform day after day, and year after year, with as much serene sweetness as if it were her chosen and most delightful occupation.

"To keep things tidy and make home attractive" to the husband is the law laid down by the sapient Solons of the other sex, but a corresponding law requiring the husband to be merciful and considerate toward his wife in not making unnecessary work for her, has not yet been written. And why should not the voice of public sentiment be lifted up against the man whose careless habits often give the most order-loving woman the reputation of being a poor housekeeper notwithstanding all her labor and painstaking? I have known husbands good and kind in every other particular, who, in ten minutes could turn a room upside down so effectually that it would take an hour to put it in order; a coat thrown over the back of a chair here, a wet towel tumbled down in a hunch there, a pair of boots kicked off and left lying where they could most conveniently be stumbled over—but it is needless to particularize since almost every housewife in the land can fill out the list ad infinitum.

One lady of my acquaintance has a husband who possesses a decided penchant for disrobing and dressing himself all over the house. Being a sociable sort of fellow, he walks about from room to room chatting or humming a tune during the process of making his toilet, leaving behind him in each apartment some delicate souvenir of his presence, such as a pair of dirty socks or a discarded shirt collar, while with an eye to artistic effect he has frequently thrown his soiled linen across the piano stool in the parlor. Of course all the blame attaches to her, and she is forthwith set down as a wretched slattern, if unluckily her lord's garments should not be discovered and removed before the advent of visitors. I have long thought there ought to be some mode of torture devised for the man who deliberately carries in a rim of mud on his boots, to dry, be crushed and ground into the sitting-room carpet for his pale, weak-backed wife to sweep out again; or that other most detestable trick of spitting on the oil-cloth or fender which she must get down on her knees to clean. Ugh! The guillotine, of course, would be a quick and sure method of getting rid of such specimens of the genus porcine, but the poetic sense of justice which demands that like be met by like would lead the feminine mind to impose on the aggressor the daily task of washing the aromatic spittoons which the tobacco chewer delights to fill, sweeping and dusting, picking up and putting in place the same articles a dozen times a day, such as children's hats, hoods, gloves, spools of thread, scissors, books, newspapers, and a thousand and one other articles that are constantly and mysteriously getting out of sight, and which of all the people in the house only the wife is supposed to keep track, to say nothing of being compelled to carry in his mind the exact whereabouts of every old hammer, screw and tool on the premises, as well as to be able to tell on the instant in what particular cupboard and on what particular shelf the smallest and most trivial article is kept. I fancy even the strongest and most muscular of the sons of men would become deliciously hollow-cheeked, stoop-shouldered, and broken-backed, yellow and wan-looking under a steady regimen of this kind for about ten years. Antifat would no longer be required by the fleshiest and most rotund among them, for it has been proved there is no surer method of removing flesh and displaying all the angles of one's natural frame-work than close attention to this exhilarating exercise. He would find that this playful routine, while it created a demand for strengthening plasters and nervines, also has a soothing, sweetening effect on the temper, and in all probability he would gain a fuller understanding of those inexplicable moods which men usually set down as a woman's "whims" or "notions."

That a good deal of this exacting task of the masculine law-givers is merely assumed to create the impression that men are pinks of neatness, is evidenced in the fact that with the daily example of a tidy, dirt-despising wife in their homes, men still persist in keeping such dusty-begrimed offices, shops and places of business as many of them do—nay, it forces on the thinking mind the conviction that their love of dirt is innate. I do not deny that every man occasionally goes through a form of cleansing his business premises, but, in general, his idea of "cleaning up" consists in spilling water in spots over the floor and smearing the mud thus formed against the legs of the chairs and other furniture by a few dexetrous strokes of the broom. He may go so far as to slap or blow the dust from books or other articles of which he intends to make immediate use, but to raise his muscular arm to bring down the festoons of cobwebs that adorn the walls, or with a damp cloth remove the accumulated layers of fly-specks that encrust the window-panes—such an idea never enters his manly brain. In the face of these facts is it not slightly "cheeky" for the stalwarts belonging to the society for the prevention of kindness to women to keep up the cry and harp on the theme of the "wife's duty to make home attractive to the husband by keeping it tidy?" "Oh! Inconsiscency, thy name is—Man!"—The Interior.

"LEARNING to read the English language," says Frederick A. Fernald, in the Popular Science Monthly, "is one of the worst mind-stunting processes that have formed a part of the general education of any people. Its evil influence arises from the partly phonetic, partly lawless character of English spelling." He further says: "The spelling of each word must be learned by sheer force of memory. In this work the pupil's reasoning powers can not be utilized, but must be subdued, while his memory is sadly overworked. In the affairs of the child's daily life the logical following out of rules is rewarded. In learning to spell it brings him only discomfiture and bewilderment." And again: "On the other hand, the child has been expected to develop strong logical facilities. Thus, a boy who had long been at the foot of his spelling class was one day given the word ghost, and, making a desperate attempt at the sort of spelling he had oftenest heard succeed, he spelled it g-h-o-g-h-j-s-t. This bringing upon him shouts of laughter, he said, with clinched fist and tearful eyes: 'You needn't laugh; you all spell homelier 'n that!'"

As a young man, late at night, was sitting by his window for a chance to hurl a missile at the cats that worried him, a neighbor passing by said to him, "I suppose you have an object in view in sitting up there so late?" "Yes," was the reply, as he held up a bootjack; "and I also have an object in hand ready for the other object."

HAPPINESS is often at our side, and we pass her by; misfortune is far off, and we rush to meet her.

REVOLT IN ROUMELIA.

An Extraordinary Movement Conceived and Executed Without Bloodshed.

Grave European Complications Likely to Arise—An Appeal from the Porte.

[London dispatch.]

The populace of Philippopolis, the capital of Eastern Roumelia, almost to a man rose in rebellion yesterday, and seized the Governor General, deposed the government, and proclaimed a union with Bulgaria. A provisional government was established. The revolt was so well planned that no disorder or bloodshed occurred, everybody being in sympathy with the movement except the government officials. The foreigners in the city are perfectly safe from harm, as is also the property of foreign residents. Immediately after the organization of the provisional government the militia was sworn in, taking the oath of allegiance to Prince Alexander of Bulgaria. It is generally believed in diplomatic circles that Russia arranged the programme of the rising and suggested the union with Bulgaria. No definite statement can be made at present as to what action the signatory powers to the treaty of Berlin will take respecting the matter.

Eastern Roumelia was created by the Congress of Berlin, 1878, and was given an autonomic government, though forming an integral part of the Turkish Empire. The Governor General was appointed by the Porte, subject to the approval of the treaty powers.

It is stated that Prince Alexander of Bulgaria has been assured of the support of Russia, Germany, and Austria. He will send an army to Roumelia, and will defy the Turks. The Sultan of Turkey has appealed to the powers to enforce the treaty of Berlin. It is not believed that Lord Salisbury will interfere. The Liberals applaud the action of the Roumelians.

[Philippopolis dispatch.]

The insurgents in Eastern Roumelia, acting under orders of the provisional government, have occupied all the strategical points on the Turkish frontier, blown up all the bridges which would likely be used by a force advancing from Turkey to the relief of the deposed government, and destroyed the telegraph wires leading into Turkey.

The Bulgarian army has been mobilized, and a corps has been sent to the Roumelian frontier. Prince Alexander has proceeded to Philippoplis and has appointed M. Straunsky as commissioner. M. Straunsky is now President of the Roumelian provisional government.

[Paris dispatch.]

It is feared here that the Roumelian trouble will lead to a general European imbroglio. The East is most inflammable, and serious results are anticipated.

VOICES FROM THE GRAVE.

Singular Experience of an Ohio Woman Whose Husband Has Been Dead Twenty Years.

[Washington telegram.]

A telegram from Toledo relates the story of a farmer in Monclova, Ohio, who died and was buried thirteen years ago but is still writing to his family. The Sunday Capital prints a story quite as remarkable, as follows: "A very remarkable case has come to my attention through a friend in the Pension Office, which furnishes incidents for a novel as powerful as any Dumas or Eugene Sue ever used. In 1864 a Lieutenant from an Ohio village was killed in one of the battles in Virginia and his body was sent home, buried with military honors and a handsome monument erected over it by the citizens of the place. Thousands of people paid their tributes of honor to the young hero and looked upon his face as the body lay in state in the Town Hall. He left a widow to whom he had been married only a year, and for more than twenty years she has been trying to get a pension; but, although she keeps fresh flowers upon her husband's grave, she can not prove that he is dead. The records in the Adjutant-General's office are perfect, and affidavits can be furnished from thousands of people who saw and recognized his lifeless body, but every few months she receives a letter from him written in a hand as familiar as her own. Two letters never come from the same place; now they are postmarked in Colorado, then in Texas, then in New York. Once she got a note from him dated at Washington. He appears to know what is going on at home, and always alludes to local occurrences with a familiarity that is amazing. He sends messages to old friends and gives her advice about business matters which it seems impossible for a stranger to know. She can not answer these ghostly missives, because he never gives any clue to his whereabouts, and no detective has been able to find him. Her friends believe that the writer is some crank or malicious person who takes this way to annoy her, and the distress the poor woman suffers cannot be measured by any other human experience. Long ago she ceased to open envelopes which came with the familiar address, but sends them sealed to her attorney, who uses every possible means to secure a clue to the identity of the writer. The only circumstances to suggest that it may possibly be her husband are the penmanship and the familiarity the writer shows with the lady's private life, but how he could keep himself posted is another mystery that cannot be solved. Several times the writer has intimated that he might soon pay her a visit, but the next letter always contains an apology for not having done so. The woman has suffered agony of mind beyond description, and her life has been ruined by this horrible mystery, but of late she has become more resigned, and would neither be surprised nor disappointed if her husband should some day walk in at her door."

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

An Area Equal to that of Ireland Disposed of Every Year—A Tabulated Statement.

[Washington special.]

For the past four years the United States has given away or sold off its public domain, and of course this means almost entirely given away, one Ireland per annum. The area of Ireland is between 20,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres, and that is almost exactly the amount of public domain disposed of in the years 1883 and 1885. It is greater than the amount disposed of in 1882 and considerably less than the amount disposed of in 1884. As compared with the previous year the disposals of public lands in the fiscal year just closed show a decided falling off, but there is a small increase over the enormous figures for 1883. The disposals of public lands in 1884 were affected by propositions to repeal the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert land acts, to amend the homestead act, and to forfeit some of the railroad grants. The fear that charges would be made in the land law that would make it more difficult to get possession of land for nothing impelled everybody who was thinking of claiming any part of the national estate to do so at once. Thus some of the disposals which would ordinarily have been made this year were made last, and the total amount of public lands disposed of in 1884 was run up to twenty-four million, or about six or seven million more than in the preceding or succeeding year.

It is only by comparison with some known areas of territory that one can get any idea of the way the national estate is passing into the hands of private persons, mostly, of course, settlers. Dakota contains 95,000,000 acres. Of this, 35,000,000 acres, equal to the State of Illinois, have been disposed of in the past nine years. Taking in two years more, the investigater will find that the amount of public land disposed of by the Government in eleven years is greater than the area of Spain, but a trifle less than the area of France or Germany, and one-fourth as great as British India with its 200,000,000 inhabitants. The amount of land disposed of in the last eleven years is 200,000 square miles, an area eighteen times as great as Belgium, which sustains over 5,000,000 inhabitants. The areas disposed of in some of the States, given approximately, during the past nine years are as follows: Wisconsin, over 3,000,000 acres; Michigan, nearly 2,500,000; California, nearly 6,500,000; Kansas, 14,500,000; Minnesota, over 9,000,000; Nebraska, over 13,000,000; Oregon, over 3,000,000, and Washington Territory, nearly 5,000,000 acres; Alabama, nearly 3,000,000; Arkansas, nearly 3,000,000; Louisiana, over 3,000,000; Mississippi, 1,500,000, and Florida, 2,500,000 acres. Both last year and the year before, more land was disposed of in Dakota than in any other State or Territory, but in 1885 the Empire Territory did not stand so far ahead of her sisters as she did in 1884.

The table appended shows that in the last year four and a half million acres were disposed of in Dakota, over three millions and a half in Nebraska, and over three millions in Kansas. In California more land was disposed of in 1885 than in 1884. In Dakota the disposals for 1884 were nearly three-fold those of 1885. In Kansas there was an enormous increase from a million and a third acres in 1884 to over three millions in 1885. The disposals in Minnesota show a falling off of a million acres, while there is an increase of a half million acres in Nebraska. Of the 20,113,663 acres of Government land disposed of last year, 7,415,885 acres were disposed of under the homestead act, 4,755,005 under the timber-culture act, 3,558,914 acres were taken as railroad selections, and 3,912,450 acres were sold for cash. The homestead entries show but very small falling off from 1884. The timber-culture entries also show but a small diminution. The cash sales show a reduction of 2,500,000 acres.

For the Government lands disposed of there was received $7,686,114, and for the Indian lands sold $933,483. The land sold at cash sales brought an average of $1.19 per acre, and the land disposed of at public sales brought $4.41½ per acre. The homestead entries in 1885 numbered 50,877, a falling off of 4,168 from 1884.

The timber-culture entries show an increase of about 4,000 in number. Mineral lands show a decrease of 344 entries and an increase of 5,900 acres, and there is a decrease of sixteen entries and 116,360 acres in coal lands. The following table gives the aggregate number of acres disposed of in each State and Territory in 1884-85:

	Acres.		Acres.
Alabama	250,991	Mississippi	111,000
Arizona	278,174	Missouri	291,277
Arkansas	244,582	Montana	1,112,140
California	1,295,909	Nebraska	3,638,381
Colorado	662,661	Nevada	171,430
Dakota	4,547,749	New Mexico	164,981
Florida	282,515	Oregon	788,287
Idaho	284,903	Utah	184,853
Iowa	11,679	Washington	1,016,117
Kansas	3,030,816	Wisconsin	218,436
Louisiana	181,043	Wyoming	552,967
Michigan	80,511
Minnesota	624,379	Total	20,113,663

The aggregate given above includes fractions of an acre in the case of each State and Territory omitted in the table, but does not include 881,850 acres of Indian lands sold.

A SOUTHERN KANSAS STAMPEDE.

Effect of the Ruling of Judge Brewer in Regard to 77,000 Acres of Land.

[St. Louis telegram.]

The decision of Judge Brewer of the United States Circuit Court in the suit of the United States against the Southern Kansas Railway Company, declaring 77,000 acres of lands heretofore held by that company to be wrongfully held and now a part of the public domain, has created the wildest land excitement ever known in Southern Kansas. As soon as the decision was made known in Southern Kansas men in wagons, in buggies, and on horseback came in great numbers from Chanute, from Wilson, and other counties to Woodson and also Greenwood County and commenced staking off claims, saying that Judge Brewer's decision declared all lands heretofore held by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway to be Government land. They are building shanties on many quarters and breaking sod so as to perfect the claim. They have even stuck their stakes and broken ground on the lands which were entered by the scrip and the patents for which were on record before either the Santa Fe or Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railways were organized.

EXIT EATON.

The Resignation of the Civil Service Commissioner Accepted by the President.

The Executive, in Reply, Says the Civil Service Law Must be Observed.

[Washington telegram.]

The letter of Dorman B. Eaton to the President, resigning his position as a member of the Civil Service Commission, and the reply of President Cleveland accepting the same, were made public to-day. Mr. Eaton's letter, which is dated July 25, says the writer had, several weeks before that time, determined to tender his resignation, but that he would not urge its acceptance until such time as the President might find convenient to make a new appointment to the place. Mr. Eaton points out that, prior to the passage of the civil service law, Jan. 16, 1883, he had held under three earlier Presidents, and was then holding, under President Arthur, a position closely analogous to his present one. During all that time he had served without compensation, and when the time arrived for executing the provisions of the law he did not feel called upon to make any further sacrifice of his private interest for the cause of civil-service reform. President Arthur, without any intimation to him, then appointed him a Commissioner. He would have declined the office, but was urged not to do so by many friends of reform. Certain persons charged that he had promoted the act from selfish motives, and these same parties now stood ready to charge that his refusal to accept the position of Commissioner was a cowardly shrinking from the failure which was sure to follow any attempt to execute the civil-service law. Under these circumstances he accepted the office with the declared purpose of remaining hardly more than a year, within which time it was expected the most difficult part of the work would have been accomplished. At the end of that time the new law had secured the commendation of the President, united the party in power, and secured from a committee of the House of Representatives a report commending the commission as "intelligent, non-partisan, and conscientious." A few months later he was about to insist upon being relieved, when friends dissuaded him, urging that, as a new party was coming into power, his resignation would be looked upon as fleeing from the peril of a crisis. No declaration of his confidence in the reform policy of the new administration would have freed him from the damaging plausibility of such a charge, and he determined to remain in office until the reform policy of that administration had been clearly developed. That time had now arrived, as must be admitted by all candid men. The few changes made in the rules had but added to their justice and efficiency, and there had appeared no reason to suppose that the merit system had not been welcomed by the President and by all members of the Cabinet as a great benefit to the public service, a great influence for honesty in politics, and a great relief to the head of the office. Mr. Eaton says he wishes to leave no doubt of his absolute faith in the continuing triumph of a reform policy.

President Cleveland's letter of reply is as follows:

"WASHINGTON, Sept. 11, 1885.

"Hon. Dorman B. Eaton:

"MY DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your letter tendering your resignation as a member of the Board of Civil Service Commissioners. I cannot refrain from expressing my sincere regret that you have determined to withdraw from a position in the public service where your intelligent performance of duty has been of inestimable value to the country. The friends of civil service reform and all those who desire good government fully appreciate your devotion to the cause in which you early enlisted, and they have seen with satisfaction that your zeal and faith have not led you to suppose that the reform in which you were engaged is unsuited to the rules which ordinarily govern progress in human affairs, or that it should at once each perfection and universal acceptance. You have been willing patiently to accept good results as they step by step could be gained, holding every advance with unyielding steadfastness. The success which thus far attended the work of civil service reform is largely due to the fact that its practical friends have proceeded upon the theory that real and healthy progress can only be made if the people who cherish pernicious political ideas, long fostered and encouraged by vicious partisanship, are persuaded that the change contemplated by the reform offers substantial improvements and benefits. A reasonable toleration for old prejudices, a graceful recognition of every aid, a sensible utilization of every instrumentality that promises assistance, and a constant effort to demonstrate the advantages of the new order of things, are the means by which this reform movement will in the future be further advanced, the opposition of incorrigible spoilsmen rendered ineffectual, and the cause placed upon a sure foundation. Of course, there should be no surrender of principle nor backward steps, and all laws for the enforcement of the reform should be rigidly executed; but the benefits which its principles promise will not be fully realized unless the acquiescence of the people is added to the stern assertion of a doctrine and the vigorous execution of the laws.

"It is a source of congratulation that there are so many friends of civil service reform marshaled on the practical side of the question, and that the number is not greater of those who profess friendliness for the cause and yet mischievously and with supercilious self-righteousness discredit every effort not in exact accord with their attenuated ideas, decry with carping criticism the labor of those actually in the field of reform, and, ignoring the conditions which qualify every struggle for a radical improvement in the affairs of the Government, demand complete and immediate perfection. The reference in your letter to the attitude of the members of my Cabinet to the merit system established by the civil service law, besides being entirely correct, exhibits an appreciation of the honest endeavor in the direction of reform and a disposition to do justice to proved sincerity which is most gratifying. If such treatment of those upon whom the duty rests of administering the Government according to reform methods were the universal rule, and if the embarrassments and perplexities attending such an administration were fairly regarded by all those professing to be friendly to such methods, the avowed enemies of the cause would be afforded less encouragement.

"I believe in civil service reform and its application in the most practicable form attainable, among other reasons, because it opens the door for the rich and the poor alike to a participation in public place holding. And I hope the time is at hand when all our people will see the advantage of a reliance for such an opportunity upon merit and fitness, instead of a dependence upon the caprice or selfish interest of those who imprudently stand between the people and the machinery of their government. In the one case a reasonable intelligence and the education which is freely furnished or forced upon the youth of our land are the credentials to office; in the other the way is found in favor secured by a participation in partisan work oft times unfitting a person morally, if not mentally and physically, for the responsibilities and duties of public employment. You will agree with me, I think, that the support which has been given to the present administration in its efforts to preserve and advance this reform by a party restored to power after an exclusion for many years from participation in the places attached to the public service—confronted with a new system precluding the redistribution of such places in its interest—called upon to surrender advantages which a perverted partisanship had taught the American people belonged to success, and permitted with the suspicion, always raised in such an emergency, that their rights in the conduct of this reform had not been scrupulously regarded—should receive due acknowledgment, and should confirm our belief that there is a sentiment among the people better than a desire to hold office, and a patriotic impulse upon which may surely rest the integrity of our institutions and the strength and perpetuity of our Government.

"I have determined to request you to retain your present position until the 1st day of November next, at which time your resignation may become operative. I desire to express my entire confidence in your attachment to the cause of civil service reform and your ability to render it efficient aid, and I indulge in hope and expectation that, notwithstanding the acceptance of your resignation, your interest in the object for which you have labored so assiduously will continue be on the ground to which you surrender. Yours very truly,

If you receive a circular from New York stating that "an organ is to be sent you in order to introduce it in your locality, but that 4 dollars must be sent to pay freight," don't send it. It is a ten-cent mouth-organ.

On Sept. 26 the Chicago Herald issued a supplement, dated 1985, purporting to be a copy of the paper as it will appear one hundred years hence. It contains some wild imaginations,—a few of its features outstripping Jules Verne's wildest stories.

On a recent Sunday, the New York World contained three pages of advertising matter for Frank Siddalls, the Philadelphia soap manufacturer, in payment of which Mr. Siddalls wrote his check for $1,606.27. Of that issue of the World over two hundred thousand copies were circulated.

During the recent storm, when Lake Michigan waves ran so high, Dave Bradbeer succeeded in making an excellent photograph, showing the north pier with waves running over it and an angry, foamy sea in the bay beyond. The scene contains many points of interest and instruction to amatuer painters.

Milwaukee Wis., Sept. 24.—Private vices received here to-day reported that the schooner Onward, ashore at Gill's Pier, and the R. J. Skidmore, at Leland, had been stripped and abandoned as total losses. The Bay de Noquette Lumber Company's scow ashore here, was also abandoned today. She was valued at $2,500.

The Traverse Journal last week, devoted over a column to Rev. W. R. Stinchcomb, exposing some real estate transactions which are very damaging if true. The Michigan conference deemed the charges unworthy of consideration, and reapointed him presiding elder of this district. It is possible the Journal may have to prove its charges or pay for the "fun."

There is now a project on foot for opening a canal from Torch lake to Grand Traverse bay, and we have been informed by good authority that a company has been formed in Boston for that purpose with a capital of $100,000, and a charter applied for. Should this country be so fortunate as to get this much talked of canal, it would then be open for vast manufacturing enterprises, and all the great forests on the banks of the in land lakes and rivers of this country would be utilized, thereby giving employment to hundreds of men.—[Herald.

The Detroit Free Press celebrated its 50th anniversary on Monday, Sept. 28th, by issuing a sixteen page sheet, and giving a history of its struggles and triumphs during the past half century. The Free Press has the honor of being a lineal desendant of the Detroit Gazette, the first paper printed in the territory; of having issued the first daily in the territory; of having used the first steam press, and the first perfecting press; and of being the first to adopt almost every important improvement in the art of printing. And to-day, it stands in the front as a complete and reliable newspaper.

Protection is a fascinating word; it sounds nice when applied properly in the interest of the weak. In its very nature it is a beneficence that pleases the mind and accords with the highest sense of honor. Protection that shields the effeminate and weak, the oppressed and careworn, that takes care of the orphan and widow, the infirm and decrepit, is one of the highest human virtues. It it not so, however, with the political protection asked by the monopolists of the country. This protection is for the strong and is against the weak. It puts money into the pockets of the rich and takes it out of the pockets of the poor. It is against the organic law of our country, and imposes burdens on the many for the benefit of the few. Its supremacy is oppression and slavery to the masses.—[Bellville (Ill.) Democrat.

Silver Hoards.

Washington Capital.

There is an argument in favor of the coinage of silver and the use of it as money which has been little considered in the discussion of the subject, and yet is one that will have no unimportant effect upon the welfare of the nation if the proper course is taken. Few appear to have noticed the effect produced upon the saving habits of a people by the kind of money in use among them. In our opinion, silver is the favorite money with the thrifty poor. It is well adapted to hoarding. Gold is too valuable: its coins are too small when reduced to the limits of the possible savings of the poor. The most attractive coin for the hoard is the silver dollar or its equivalent.

Paper money is unfit for the hoard because of its destructibility. Besides, paper money never appeals to the acquisitive and secretive sense as does the bright, hard, enduring coin. Many men, and many more women, will handle a silver dollar with a caress, where a paper dollar would fail to excite a feeling of regret at parting with it. The world's modern history is full of the bad effects produced upon nations by an inflation of the paper money, but no one ever heard of a people bewildered by an expansion of its gold and silver money.

A story has recently been printed which points this moral: A merchant's wife asked him for a check for a thousand dollars, with which to buy a lace shawl. He did not give her a check, but instead sent her a thousand silver dollars. She had never seen so much real money together in her life. She was shocked at the idea of giving all that silver for a filmy shawl that she did not need, and asked permission to invest it instead of spending it.

This is to the point. On a smaller scale a million of people would be affected in the same way. It would be worth fifty millions a year to the wealth of the nation if the bulk of the money that passes through the hands of the workers was in metal instead of paper. Two millions a month could easily be absorbed in hoards after the people had begun the process.

It is also a mistake to suppose that because the people in the cities prefer paper to coin that anything like a majority of the people of the country have a prejudice against coin. The weekly wages of the millions do not weigh them down. When bankers and brokers say that "the people do not want silver," they mean the people with whom they deal. They know nothing of the wishes of the real people—the producers, those who create the wealth, which makes it possible for bankers and brokers to exist.

At the close of the war of the rebellion millions of dollars in coin were discovered to exist in the south, which had resisted the terrible strain of four years of civil war before the hoards which had absorbed them could be broken up. Only the absolute destruction of the paper money known to the people brought out the coin savings. Nine-tenths of it was found in the possession of the freedmen. It was then calculated that twenty million in silver had thus been in the possession of slaves, representing their hoardings under most adverse circumstances.

It is undoubtedly true that the trading classes and the idlers of the United States prefer paper money. Those who live upon the earnings of others, those who live by managing the affairs of others, those who live upon the necessities of others, are annoyed by the weight of the "cart wheel dollar;" but the man who tills the fields, who wields the hammer, who bends his back in the mine, does not feel the weight. Pay the laborer in silver and he will not object. He will spend the bulk of it because he must, but some of it will stick to his hard hand or to that of his thrifty wife. It will be put by for the rainy day, when the mere representative of money, the paper dollar, would slip through the fingers.

A Miniature Free Press.

One of the neatest pieces of advertising ever seen in Detroit is the miniature copy of the Free Press of August 9, the work of the Moss Engraving Company, of New York. By the aid of a magnifying glass the account of Grant's funeral can be read. His portrait is also faithfully produced in miniature. A page of "wants," containing over 16,000 words is reproduced in the space of thirty-two square inches. On the inside of the the four page sheet is the schedule of advertising rates.—Detroit Free Press, Sept. 20, 1885.

It Won't Do, Gentlemen.

The quinine manufacturers of the east have combined, with the intention of forcing congress to restore the duty on that necessity to health and life, especially in a country in which the virgin soil lavishly and simultaneously responds with those resources that both support and destroy human life.

When quinine was placed upon the free list there were but five firms in the country that manufactured the article, while they gave employment to but 500 men. It was predicted that the repeal of the duty on the drug would wipe them all out of existence. But it has not done so. It has simply reduced their enormous profits. It was also predicted by the protectionists that the repeal would cause the price of the article in the United States to largely advance. The reason given was that the foreign, in the absence of home manufacturers, would have a monopoly of the trade, and consequently, supreme control of our market. This prediction has also been completely falsified. When quinine was placed on the free list the price was $3.40 per ounce, and at times higher. To-day the price ranges from 65 to 70 cents!

The fact is the culture of the cinchona bark has received of late years an extraordinary impulse in India, while we now get the benefit of its consequent low price in common with the states of western Europe. If, however, the Philadelphia and New York manufacturers of the drug succeed in debauching congress into passing their scheme of restored duties we shall be paying the old prices for quinine, while all the rest of the world would be enjoying the present, or perhaps lower, figures.

In the meantime the benefits that have resulted from placing quinine on the free list have become so apparent that at least one Philadelphia protectionist journal (the Telegraph) denounces the attempt of the manufacturers to reimpose a duty of 25 per cent on the imported article as a "bold-faced" imposition.—[Chicago News.

Favorable to the Democracy.

The Center, Michigan organ of the prohibitionists says: "A prominent republican officeholder said last Monday: I have repeatedly stated during the past three months that President Cleveland is giving the country a better exposition of republican principles (that is, the principles voiced by republican platforms), than the republican have ever given during the entire twenty-four years they were in power. I refer especially to civil service reform, retrenchment in public expenses, and real honesty of administration. And then, as to the southern vote, I believe that within two years there will be a freer ballot in the south than there ever has been since the republicans began their work of reconstruction.' In quoting this man's language we stop not to inquire whether he is right or wrong, just or unjust in his conclusions. We repeat his remarks simply in illustration of the wonderful disintegration of political thought now going on in our country."

The Port Huron Times says Cleveland's election was an accident. Haye's selection was not—it was a crime. The success of Grant over Lee was incident of the war, and many other scenes might be attributed to circumstances; but all of them, like the election of Cleveland, were brought about in the right manner. The only accident about the latter was that the office was not stolen from him.

Enterprising Grasshoppers.

"Grasshoppers!" exclaimed an old engineer; "did I ever see any grasshoppers? Should say I did. In 1874 I was running a locomotive on a passenger train out in Nebraska. One day we was comin' east, when we run into a swarm of 'hoppers. There wasn't a breath of air stirrin', and so they were all on the ground. There wasn't nothin' left standin' around there but the telegraph poles an' wires, an' the poles were beginnin' to wabble. The hoppers were so mad when they tackled the wires an' found they couldn't eat 'em that they gnashed their teeth and the wires was a continual streak of fire. Of course the track was covered with hoppers a foot thick, an' there wasn't no use trying to go ahead. We shoved into 'em several times with the throttle wide open, but we couldn't get more than a train-length. Pretty soon I run out of water, an' we had to pull the fire from the box. There we was, stuck, fifteen miles from the nearest station, with a foot o' grasshoppers on the track an' a cold engine. Encouragin', wasn't it? Why, we were afeard of our lives. If the 'hoppers had had to stay there twenty-four hours there wouldn't a-been anything left o' that train but the iron-work. Woodwork, upholsterin', passengers—everything would have disappeared. But in about an hour a gentle breeze struck up, and we saw a dark cloud comin' from the rear. It was the 'hoppers sailin' with the wind. Then those round us began to rise, an' we couldn't see the sun. Pretty soon it was so dark we couldn't see nothin', and we lit the headlight. All of a sudden I discovered something. What d'ye suppose it was? Well, sir, we was a-movin'. Yes, we was a-goin' right along with the 'hoppers. They was pushin' the train. As far back as we could see there was a solid mass of 'hoppers all pushin' as if they were paid for it. In ten minutes we was makin' thirty miles an hour, and as our time card called for only twenty mile we finished our run on time without a bit of fire in the box or a drop o' water in the biler. This sounds kind o' strange, I know, but you must remember that them grasshoppers are mighty enterprisin' fellows when they git-a-goin'." Chicago Herald Train Talk.

Postal Changes After July 1.

On July 1 the following important changes will be made in the rates of postage:

1. Any article in a newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by writen or printed words, without increase of postage.

2. All newspapers sent from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission at the rate of 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof, the postage to be prepaid.

3. The weight of all single-rate letters is increased from one-half of one ounce each or fraction thereof to one ounce. The same increase of weight is allowed for drop letters, whether mailed at stations where there is a free delivery or where carrier service is not established.

4. A special stamp of the value of 10 cents may be issued, which, when attached to a letter, in addition to the lawful postage thereon, shall entitle the letter to immediate delivery at any place containing 4,000 population or over according to the Federal census, or within one mile of the post office coming within the provisions of this law, which may in like manner be designated as a special delivery office; that such specially stamped letters shall be delivered between 7 a. m. and midnight; that a book shall be provided in which the person to whom the letter is addressed shall acknowledge its receipt; that messengers for this special delivery are to be paid 80 per cent of the face value of all the stamps received and recorded in a month, provided that the aggregate compensation paid to any one person for such service shall not exceed $30 per month, and provided further that the regulations for the delivery of these specially stamped letters shall in no way interfere with the prompt delivery of letters as provided by existing law or regulations.

E. S. Hawkes arrived home from Virginia on Monday. When he started, he was hardly able to ride, but as he came north he rapidly gained in strength. His description of the chills and fever correspond closely with the old fashioned Michigan ague of thirty years ago.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL, in its last issue, gives a list of new buildings erected there during the past two years which aggregates the neat sum of $131,150. Charlevoix is a thriving town beautifully located, and the JOURNAL is a faithful exponent of its resources.—L'Anse Sentinel.

Eaton Rapids Journal: Mr. Bedford, wife and mother, of Charlevoix, Mich., were the guests of Mr. "Bert" Field last week. During their sojourn they made the Journal office a call in response to our call at their thriving little city during the editorial convention last summer. And, by the way, Mrs. Bedford's father [Richard Cooper, of the Fountain City House,] provided dinner on that occasion for as many of the excursionists as his house would hold, and of which ye humble editor was two. It was a "square meal" you bet.

If after reading your JOURNAL you would wrap it up and mail it to some distant friend, you might possibly induce some one to come and locate in our fair county. We know from several years' residence that we have a good county, yet there are thousands who do not, and in order to reach and acquaint them with this fact it is necessary to put the truth before them. You can do this in no better way than to send your JOURNAL abroad after reading them. Try it, and thus show that you take a lively interests in trying to promote the interests of our county, by thus influencing and inducing others to come and settle amongst us and enjoy the fruit of the land.

A. D. Cruickshank has moved into his new house, though not yet fully completed. When finished, he will have a house for comfort. The location commands the outer harbor and most of the town, and from the tower can be seen most that is of interest in the inner harbor and business part of town. He has built to exclude the wintry blasts from Lake Michigan, on a foundation that will never tremble. The main building is two stories, with a tower in the southeast corner, and a one story wing on the west. The arrangement is for convenience, and calculated to give plenty of sun light to all parts of the house. The dining room, parlor, and parlor bedroom occupy the front of the lower story, with kitchen and wood house west of the dining room. A good stone cellar is under the kitchen, and a cistern is to be built at the northwest corner. The chamber is not yet finished. The wood-work finish will be birds-eye maple, and some of the pieces are very handsome. Mr. C. has given this work his personal superintendence from the beginning, and nothing has been omitted which could add to the comfort of the family.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the Second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall, that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County, in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

AN IRISH SCENE.

BY S. MOORE.

One night, Barney Daly and Johnny Malone,
Tim Deegan, and two of the Cooneys
Sat down to a nice little spree of their own,
In dacent old Judy Mulrooney's.

The order was given, the liquor brought in,
And the glasses arranged on the table—
"Here's your health, Barney Daly, so let us begin,
And drink the good stuff while we're able."

"More power, Tim Deegan; come, give us your fisht?
It's yourself that knows how to please
Barney."
"Come, now, Mr. Daly, and just howld your whisht,
And give us no more of your blarney."

"A round more for me," cries out Johnny
Malone,
Says Judy, "I'll make you a wager
That this is a dirrop of the real Inlishown,
That ne'r saw the face of the gauger."

"Arrah, Judy," says Johnny, as sleek as a mouse,
"I know you are reckoned a poteen!
But the water was not very scarce in the house
On the day that you christened the potheen."

"Not a betther than that ever enthered my door,
Nor a drop that would moisten you quicker,
So empty your glasses, and order in more,
And show that you love the good liquor."

"Come, Ned, you and Tim haven't stood treat to-night,
So call in a round and be dacent,
And show that the Cooneys can do what is right,"
Said Tim, with a look so complacent.

"Here, in with more liquer," replied Tim and Ned,
"For never a one of the Cooneys
Was caught in a mean thing, or put into dread,
Or turned out of Judy Mulrooney's."

So the drinking went on, and they shouted and sang,
Attending meanwhile to their smoking;
There were flashes of wit, and a good deal of slang,
And rather too much pointed joking.

"Arrah! Tim, do you mind of the last Lammas fair,
When you fought with young Mickey Mulheron,
And shouted for help like a pig in despair?
Faix, I'm thinking he gave you your fairin'."

Then Johnny Malone gave the table a thump,
And shouted, "Hurrah for the Cooneys!"
And then the whole party got up with a jump,
That night in poor Judy Mulrooney's.

And they rushed at each other with venomous rage,
While smash went the tumblers and glasses,
And they worried each other like bears in a cage,
And shouted and roared like wild asses.

Tim Deegan hit Johnny Malone on the nose,
And floored him as flat as a flounder,
And dealt both the Cooneys a few weighty blows,
With a fist like a thirty-two pounder.

They fought and they tumbled o'er tables and stools,
And used jugs and jars and shillelahs,
For the Cooneys were never too choice in their tools
When carving the heads of the Daleys.

Some joined in the fray, but the cream of the joke—
('Tis a picture of facts that I'm writing)—
Although they got nothing their wrath to provoke,
They fought for the fun of the fighting.

It happened, however, that no one was killed,
Tho' every one there was well battered,
And a great deal of blood in the parlors was spilled,
And their clothing was dreadfully tattered.

And these were all neighbors and intimate friends
Till drink came their reason to smother,
And changed them from brothers to fools and to fiends,
To hate and destroy one another.

In vain the reformer may tell of his schemes,
And write about Erin's disorders;
His plans will be futile and baseless as dreams,
Till drink be expelled from her borders.

UNCLE SI'S FAMILIAR EPISTLES TO THE YOUNG.

1—"A Life On the Ocean Wave."

"DEAR UNCLE SI: Pa wants me to be a minister, but I want to be a sailor, and get to be a sea-cap'n, and sail all over the world. Would you be a sailor, if you was me?"

This is the beginning, and all that need be published, of a note received a few days since from a lad of 14, as he states; and to which I reply, as follows:

So you wish to be a sailor, my boy; become a sea-ranger, a Jack-Tar, an "old salt," a "shell-bark" of the vasty deep, eh, your father wishing to make a parson of you? You prefer to go down to the sea in ships and do business upon the great waters to going up into the pulpit and doing business as an expounder of theology, eh? Well, there is a great disparity in the wishes of your father and yourself, my lad. Many would look upon it as a step from the sublime to the ridiculous, in one who, rather than be a pulpiteer, would go forth to be a toiler of the troublous seas; but, under the circumstances—you desire to be a rover on the bounding billows—I don't look at it in that light, my boy, and for this reason: No one whose heart beats in unison with the tumultuous heavings of the vasty deep, can ever delve successfully in the somber depths of theology. With your heart floating out in the surging sea, the rest of your corporeal parts would be as out of place in the pulpit as a bull in a china shop; therefore you had better leave the pulpit to him who feels he has a "call" in that direction, and go your way upon the raging main.

But, my boy, have you thought sufficiently of "a life on the ocean wave, and a home on the rolling deep?" or were you caught by the inspiriting song—"A Life on the Ocean Wave"—which throws a glamour over the domain of the shark and the octopus, and divers scaly submarine toughs, which glamour, when abroad on said domain, you will never discover in a century of Sundays, sail you where you will or where you may?

It is all very well to sing of a life on the ocean wave, when comfortably fixed on terra firma—the song is a rousing one, and stirs the blood and fires the imagination; you can feel the spray as it comes swooping over the ship's bows and cools your fevered cheek; you can hear the patter of the reef points, the swash of the sea as it swirls under the counter, the clatter of the sheets and halyards, the groaning of the timbers, the creaking of the spars, the rattle of the chains, the shrieks of the gale, and a score of other sounds, a medley of melody in your auricular appendages, when imagination is fired by the song—but it is shekels to shingles that it is never sung aboard ship by the old or young "salts" thereof. No, my boy, they know what "a life on the ocean wave" is; that the glamour of romance is not spread thereon like honey on a buckwheat; and if they ever sing, it is of something else—something they know nothing about, probably, where the romantic, and not the realistic, can get in its work, as in the case of "landlubbers" who sing of a "home on the rolling deep," of which they have no more conception than a soft shell crab has of a "hard-shell" baptistry.

You hope and aspire to be a "sea cap'n," my lad. Good enough, my dear boy. To be a sea captain, understanding navigation, and able to sail a ship from one to any given other point on the face of the globe, is to be something greater than a captain of militia, albeit, the latter thinks himself of immensity, immense; but, my boy, remember this: That long is the way and rough the road from the forecastle to the quarter deck, and that but few "get there" of the many who are called to the sea. However, there are more "first-water" sea captains, proportionately, at any rate, than there are "shining-light" pulpiteers of the Beecher blaze, say, and if you have sand in your craw, and are determined to "get there," the chances are in your favor, perhaps.

Sea captains, my dear boy, are not made as generals were in our late unpleasantness—as Gens. Butler, Banks, and others—by a scratch of the pen, but are forced to go through a very unsavory course of sprouts, in a majority of cases, and when they reach the quarter deck they generally make it as hot for those under their command as they found it themselves when subordinates, and thus they get revenge, if not on those who whacked them about with belaying-pins and marline-spikes, nevertheless revenge, which is said to be sweet, you know.

If you think "a life on the ocean wave" is a soft snap, my boy, and that there is no place like "a home on the rolling deep," evict such thoughts from tenancy in your mind at one fell swoop, as it were, and get right down to hard-pan at once. Rub the glaze off the picture, which your imagination paints, and look at said picture in its true colors. Look at the "flashing sea" of your imagination with realistic eye, my lad, and you will learn that all that flashes—she "flashes" only at times, you know, having moods and spells, like a woman—will learn that all that flashes is not gold; that she has leaden hues and iron strength; if a "sleeping beauty" to-day, a raging vixen to-night; that you can't place your shekels upon her with any confidence, she being as fickle as a "Boston Beauty," and quite as spiteful and merciless when in one of her "moods."

But now, my lad, let us get down to business. Let us suppose you have shipped as cabin-boy on board the good ship Saracen. Well, you are cabin-boy; and what else, eh? Why, the slave of the captain and officers, the bete noire of the czar of the caboose, the ship's cook, and the butt of an ungodly crew. I write from conviction, the crew of a ship being nothing if not an ungodly gang, owing, doubtless, to their being widely astray from the teachings and influence of the "Salvation Army" seven-eighths of the time, and unable to "catch on" to any extent during the one-eighth they are ashore. Well, the time comes when you can be a cabin-boy no longer—cabin-men are those who win their spurs "before the mast"—and you must give up the cabin for the fo'c's'le or retire from the sea. Bound to blaze as a Jack Tar you ship "before the mast," when the nautical curriculum opens to you its widest doors. A green hand "before the mast," the well-seasoned old salts make it as interesting as possible—for themselves if not for you—and, until you become in a measure seasoned, you will find exhilaration in a sailor's life, if not content; pepper pot, if not persimmons. The most uncomfortable bunk is allowed you. If there be any difference in the salt-horse, B. C. hardtack, tobacco, plum-duff, without the plums, be sure that the difference will be adjusted to your advantage, my lad. To make it plainer, if need there be, let me say that if turkey (figuratively speaking) and crow come to the festive board in the fo'c's'le, it will be turkey for them and crow for you every time, until the day, if ever it comes, when you can sullivanize your way to the turkey and other solid comforts to the fo'c's'le pertaining.

Time rolls on, months and years, and after this most unsavory course of sprouts you are billeted as third mate of a merchantman. You are out of the "gang" now, but are in for the second mate's civilities, generally tendered with a belaying pin and brass knuckles, the first mate and captain not disdaining to pay their respects to you frequently with a word and a blow, the blow generally a little ahead of the word, or coincident therewith, you being held responsible for all the shortcomings of the ungodly gang of the fo'c's'le, your superiors never, never failing to do their duty in the premises, vi et armis, as I have set forth, not so much on account of said shortcomings as to impress indelibly upon your understanding the fact that they are your superiors, and don't you forget it!

After a rugged life of years, perhaps, as third and second officer, you get to be first, and there for years may hang on the ragged edge of promotion, a captaincy coming to you in the end or not, as fate declares. There is compensation in this, however, that the longer your promotion is delayed the more savagely can you vent your spite and spleen upon the second and third officers, thus maintaining an equilibrium, as it were, or balance of power, so to speak; not letting your hand forget its familiarity with the belaying pin, even when the captaincy is secured.

Now, my lad, if you like this unfinished picture in crude oil of "life on the ocean wave," this marine view of affairs, whose tide you must perforce take at a very low ebb, roughing it long against head-winds and cross-cut seas—this is metaphor, but the reality is before you on the "rolling deep"—ere you catch on to the flood which leads to the goal to which you aspire; if you are prepared to wrestle with seasickness, the champion cussedness of all that flesh is heir to, which is pretty certain to tackle you—it gets on to many sea-farers every time they enter upon a voyage—when you will want to go home very badly, or be "chucked overboard," you don't care which; if you hanker for pre-adamitic hard-tack, by courtesy yclept "shipbread;" if you yearn for the toothsome lobscouse, the "salt-horse" of leathery toughness, the rancid mess pork, and other pleasantries of the fo'c's'le's festive board; if your soul's in arms, as it were, and eager for the roaring gale when seas run mountain high, anon to tumble into caverns sheol deep; if you sigh for the rollicking roll and pitch of the disabled ship in the trough of the angry sea; if you pine for the hospitable lee shore, off which the breakers chant a gleeful welcome; if you long for the excitement consequent upon the ship going to pieces in said breakers, with a life (if you save it) of seclusion on a desert isle for weeks or months, raw fish and crabs your only menu; or, to vary matters, if you don't object to the ship taking fire in mid-ocean, rather liking the idea of taking to the boats in the open sea, thereon to drift for days under a broiling sun, with hunger and thirst getting in their work on the internal economy of your corporeal system, death or cannibalism staring you in the face; if you itch for the dull routine and dreary monotony of a month's drifting in the "doldrums;" in short, if you are prepared to brave the hard fare, hard labor, and hard masters you will find on shipboard—if you like the now well-nigh finished picture, in "distemper," of "a home on the rolling deep"—the best thing you can do is to seek that "home" as quickly as possible, for you will never be "at home" in any other calling. Albeit, you would be "all at sea" in the pulpit, yet is the pulpit no place for you, my lad. This is only a paradox, you understand, the business end of which, in your case, points toward the sea, whither you should make your way at once.

"Yes, my boy, sail in and be a sailor—if you can't get a billet as a horse-car pilot—and sail on to a sea captaincy, which you can snatch from the hand of fortune if you have the "sand," and the quicksands of adverse fate do not gather you in. But, my boy, before you decide to "sail in," read "Two Years Before the Mast," and ponder well the same. If that work, and the picture I have tried to limn for you, suffice not to deter you from "sailing in," then sail at once and stand not upon the order, nor your father's wish, which, carried out, would spoil a good sailor, perhaps, in the making of a poor parson.—Uncle Si, in Chicago Ledger.

A WOMAN accidentally went to church with two bonnets on her head—one stuck inside the other—and the other women in the congregation almost died of envy. They thought it was a new kind of bonnet, and too sweet for anything.

PAINTING is silent poetry, and poetry a speaking picture.

In the Woods.

When men pass from city to country they pass from the themes of thought and sentiment common to the large assemblages of human beings, and find themselves raising new inquiries and forming new attachments in the arena of trees and grass. It is a question of absence and presence—an absent city, a present woods—a far-away noise and excitement of a metropolis, an immediate society of deep lake, infinite verdure, silent rocks, the life of bird and plant. In this change of circumstance the mind empties itself of the contents of former days and is at once filled with new subjects of meditation, and while in the city the preacher goes to his pillow wondering what he can say to his flock next Sunday, here he composes himself to sleep by wondering what kind of a bird is the famous "whip-poor-will." What mind one possesses lays hold of that enigma with just as much earnestness as would mark the same intellectual machinery were it attempting to solve the problem of man's free agency or the eternity of matter. Of course, a man is quite a fool if he will permit a question of birds or fish or plants to give him the mental trouble that should come from thoughts of strikes among workmen or cholera among the people, but it would be difficult to prove that man possesses always the merit of being reasonable.

The whip-poor-will repeats its cry from about eight o'clock each evening until about ten. If one is tired enough to go to bed before ten he can count himself to sleep by these birds. Their cry does indeed sound much like the words which threaten a whipping to poor William. As the masculine quail is said to be forever calling for "Bob White," so with equal truth it may be affirmed that this bird allndes to poor Will. He yells rapidly, perhaps ten cries to the minute, and, like the boarder who compensated for eating rapidly by telling his landlady that he would eat a good while, this night bird calls rapidly and calls long.

It is probable that only the male bird does this yelling, for natural history shows many instances in which the male animal is the noisiest as well as the most fierce.

The "whip-poor-will" possesses a wonderful ability for keeping out of sight of man. He is aided in this effort by the fact that his activity is nocturnal. His work is all night work. His personal appearance is that of a small owl.

Coming in the almost holy silence of the night in the woods, the song of this bird possesses all that charm which solitude confers upon sounds. The sound of toads, frogs, the chirp of the "katydid" and the cricket are made poetic and romantic by the solitude and silence which make such delicate noises so audible. The "baying of the watch-dog beyond the Tiber" gave Byron a sweet pleasure, because it measured the silence of the night and the loneliness of the heart. Here in this matchless retirement some little bird or toad can, from some tree-top as a gallery, throw its little song or speech out upon human ears that are listening a half-mile away. The silence of the world not only makes the little utterance powerful in the air, but it also strings up the heart of man until nothing can appeal to it in vain. In some of these hours of isolation and semi-rapture it seems as though one can almost hear the moon passing through clouds, or catch some notes of the hymn sung by the morning stars when the universe was young.

Nearly all the best proofs of a God are hidden away out in the country. In unexpected moments the fact stands revealed. Lie down on the edge of your boat and look down into the water and mark the beauty and graceful motion of the fish in an element made for them. The water having no contact with city dust or dirt, having boundaries of stone and a floor of pebbles, offers no obstacle to the rays of light, and fish which play fifteen feet below your boat play in your sight. These occupants of the water seem to have as perfect a home in their element as man possesses in the houses on the tree-covered banks. While the mind is thinking of these adaptations the sun sinks and the sky slowly passes through a series of colors, each beautiful. The lake joins with the sky in accepting these hues from the hand of some unseen artist. You will be a peculiar mind, a mind not to be envied, if you can row your boat slowly homeward without being a worshiper and without a deep wondering what other planets there may be which are thus doing the mysterious will of God.—David Swing, in the Current.

AN Englishwoman just home from America sends to the Pall Mall Gazette her opinion that an influx of highly cultured Englishwomen into Canada and the United States would be as great a boon to those countries as it would be a relief to Great Britain. "Although the ladies in the older cities of the North American continent are," she says, "with scarcely any exceptions, superior to English gentlewomen in brain power, in clearness of mental vision, in common sense, in practical, sound judgment, and in general intelligence, yet we miss in them that indefinable charm which always clings to a cultivated European." She has been assured by the Government officials in Canada that if superior women, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five, would come there from England, and submit to the position of domestic service, they would almost be sure to marry well within a short time of their arrival, especially if they go far West. She gravely advises her educated country women to do this.

ANGER may glance into the breast of a wise man, but it rests only in the bosom of fools.

FOOLING WITH THE PHONE.
Strange sounds come floating to my ear,
Sounds with a meaning all unknown,
Sometimes but murmurs soft and low
That ere they pierce my ear have flown.
I hear loud curses mixed with songs,
I hear the lovers sighing long,
Like zephyrs from the South they come,
Sometimes a sob comes, or a groan.
I cannot tell what mean these sounds,
These curses, sighings, songs, and groans,
I simply draw my pay each week,
I'm "Central" fooling with the phones.

Woman's Extravagance.

This talk about woman's extravagance is only accepted as truth because the male man keeps the ledgers and his wife has nothing but a debit in them. It isn't fair. If a man were to deal honestly and squarely and figure up his own expenses and all he gets for them, the woman would rise up before him a perfect angel of sense in expenditure and make him blush.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Tricycles and Dress Reform.

A tricycle-riding woman must turn her attention to dress reform. The present voluminous skirts will strike her as cumbrous and "in the way;" she must wear sensible underclothing, and corsets must be discarded. Here are three small reforms which, if universally instituted, would reduce the death-rate ten per 1,000 among women.—Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

The Secret Order Fiend.

Beware of the secret order fiend. He is one who has a mania for joining every society he hears of. It is a disease which costs a man much time and money and brings him no good. It makes no particular difference to the fiend what order he belongs to, so long as there is something mysterious about it, and it is run on passwords and grips, and meets in very high buildings on hot nights.

When a young man is really crazy to join something, he will hitch on to the Golden Rule Chapters, to the Reconstructed Order of Indians, to the Hypothecated Sons of Cabbage, to the Most Puissant Peruvian Bark Peelers, or to any other that sounds grand or gives a sword-bearer in the concern the most importance on a wet picnic.

Did you ever catch on to a veteran ancient and honorable Odd-Fellow? He is a character. He always looks alike. That is, one looks like another. The veterans in this order have always held office. They are covered with honors and they are harmless. On the ends of their names are the most wonderful collection of initial letters to be found. Spell them out and they are the most Exalted Rulers of the Universe, the Past Grands of Affluent Ideas, the Vice Regent Regulators of Destiny, the Curtain Fixers of the Inner Temple, the Superior Brass Rod Handlers of the Third Veil. When the order gives an annual ball or pienic these men's names and all their titles are printed in blue ink on red programmes. The Chief of Police or Judge of a Supreme Court would look upon one of these titled beings with awe. Hunt them up, and what are they? One is a little shoemaker, sawed off and hammered down, who never speaks loud. Another is a tailor too tired to work, who is always on a committee, and who would make your acquaintance for fifteen cents.

Another order which runs on grips is the Sons of Temperance. The platform of this organization is that getting drunk is sociability and to keep sober one must have company. The Sons allow the ladies, God bless 'em, to be visitors. It is for this that very many shaggy, ugly looking men embrace the order. The brothers of this style of order are apt to be weak, but they brace up on titles descriptive of Worth and Wisdom.

There are also numerous orders put up to tickle the fancy and catch the chivalrous. There are the Knights of Circles, Knights of Modesty, Knights of the Great unknown, Knights of this or that; but mostly are they Knights that keep men down town when they ought to be at home. Little weazen-faced, bow-legged fellows are Knights of this class, and they make people laugh when they march on the streets, though the gay uniforms make them feel good.

The secret order fiend is one who belongs to everything going. When he has spent his time and money he becomes a fraternal vampire. He must live somehow on the order he has fastened himself to. He manages to hold forever what few offices there are that pay salaries, no matter how tired the subordinates have become of seeing his name year after year. A professional secret order office holder is a terrible thing and is to be avoided. So is the fiend who neglects his business, if he has any, on the plea of working for his order. The advantages of belonging to orders are not great. "Going to the lodge" is no longer a good excuse for getting a night out with the boys. It is so thin any woman can see through it. Be a nice little gentleman, and without any secret order monkeying. You may receive a grip of friendship from all hands and hold a password that will bring you welcome in all good society.—St. Louis Whip.

"H. H." as a Critic.

"Never use an obscure phrase or an unusual word when direct language or a simple term will express your meaning," is a principle I have often heard her enjoin.

Mercilessly as she could condemn in generalization, she showed the most delicate consideration when she made a personal application. She often prefaced some little criticism of my work with the remark:

"Now, you won't mind if I call your attention to an expression here that I don't like? I don't find fault with the thought, but here is a word that must be changed. You understand that this is all a mere mechanical matter—just like any other trade. I have had a little more experience than you, and am a little better artisan; that is all. It is nothing but artisanship."

"Oh, Mrs. Jackson! Drop those three extra syllables, and call it art."

"No, artisanship!" she would insist, with emphasis.—Overland.

A Youthful Socialist.

Philanthropist—Here, here. Stop that. What are you doing to your little brother?

"Why does he cry so then?"

"'Cause I took his candy away from him."

"But didn't you have some candy, too?"

"Yes, but I ate it all up."

"That gives you no right to rob your little brother."

"Yes, it do. I am a socialist, I am."—Philadelphia Call.

A Last Resort.

"Let me see," mused the old man, "our daughter Mary is nearly 38. Isn't she?"

"Alas! yes," sadly replied his wife. "I am afraid that Mary is passed by, unless—unless ——"

"Unless what?"

"Unless you are willing to go to the expense of a coachman."—New York Sun.

Different Temperaments.

The value of self-control cannot be overestimated. Rage exhausts to a great degree the vitality of the blood. In fact, it frequently creates bad blood.

With some persons, and more particularly such as are endowed with gilt-edged hair, passion and emotion are rarely ever checked, consequently such persons are apt to lose their heads.

They are the class of lunatics who encourage their passions to burst out into flame whenever a suspender button comes unglued without warning, and then it, the passion, not the suspender button, surges through the blood like a torrent of fire, instead of taking some friend aside to some secluded spot, and asking him to take a pin and anchor the buttonhole of the suspender securely on the site of the missing button.

Other persons remain calm and collected under the most provoking circumstances, as for instance when they endeavor to borrow a dime of a friend, and are told that the latter is not doing a banking business.

There are others who, while outwardly calm, are inwardly a blazing furnace. With their blood raging at fever heat, they will maintain a placid exterior. They never become excited, so frigid is their nature, and maintain the same steady composure when they are invited to an oyster supper that they do when they are told that their immediate female relatives are no better than they should be.

There are several modes of curing a bad temper. If, for instance, a person throws out an insinuation that you are a fool, do not allow your mind to dwell on a remark in which there may be a great deal of truth, but just ask him if he has heard recently from his uncle who is a fugitive from justice. Then he will turn the conversation into more pleasing channels.

Children should be taught from earliest infancy to control their loud cries, by turning their thoughts to some other object than the one desired. They may be quieted by holding up a picture, or a flower, or a boot-jack. The latter object is the best. It should be held behind the infant and moved rapidly backward and forward until the desired effect is produced, although a boot-jack is apt to develop corns on the parental hand that wields it.—Texas Siftings.

Commercial Capabilities of the Congo.

In regard to the commercial capabilities of the country Mr. Stanley says: "It bears within itself nearly all the products required by the necessities of Europe and all the elements that might be needed for its conversion from being an unproductive waste to be a material and moral profit to humanity. Within its bosom it contains abundant copper and iron mines, valuable forests producing priceless timber, inexhaustible quantities of rubber, precious gums, spices, pepper, and coffee, cattle in countless herds, and people who are amenable to the courtesies of life, provided they are protected from the attacks of lawless freebooters and the murderous wiles of the slave-traders. If 200 tusks arrive per week at Stanley Park, or, say $1,300,000 per annum, it would still require twenty-five years to destroy the elephant in the Congo Basin. In my opinion, however, ivory stands but fifth in rank among the natural products of the basin. The total value of ivory supposed to be in existence in this region would but represent 107,500 tons of palm-oil or 30,000 tons of India-rubber. By the most trifling labor of the able-bodied warriors living on the banks of the Noviyoke River, more of either palm-oil, rubber, gum, orchilla weed or cornwood could be produced in one year than all the ivory in the Congo Basin is worth."

The World's Champion.

Mr. Edward Haulan, the great oarsman, and until his recent contest with Beach in Australia the champion of the world, may certainly be looked upon as an authority in eve ything affecting athletic sports. Before leaving Australia for this country, he wrote a letter in which he stated that he had used St. Jacobs Oil with the most beneficial results. He found it a reliable remedy for muscular pains in the arms and limbs, and from his personal experience took great pleasure in recommending it. No stronger proof of the truth of what is claimed for St. Jacobs Oil could be furnished than this, and it will undoubtedly carry great weight with all thoughtful and intelligent people.

The Etiquette of Autograph Hunting.

Senator Evarts has given a law of etiquette to autograph hunters. He says: If stamped and addressed envelopes and a card are inclosed it is a rule that the request shall be heeded—from patriotic motives—because it gives the Government two cents in postage. If one is obliged to go to the trouble of writing both autograph and address, to furnish envelope, card, and stamp, it is not customary for such requests to be accompanied merely by an inclosure of loose stamps. A poet of my acquaintance once told me that his autograph requests supplied him with stamps for all correspondence. Autograph seekers probably found that loose stamps were appropriated without compunction, for they have changed the custom. I do not receive a great many such requests now. They come in great numbers after making an important speech.

No Defense Required.

Some of the country negroes are very ignorant of the law, in proof of which we submit the following:

A gigantic negro, who had crippled up half the police force in their efforts to secure him, was brought from the jail to the office of the Justice for trial. Not observing that the accused had any counsel employed, the Justice asked:

"Don't you want a lawyer to defend you?"

The accused glared at the Justice and, pounding on the table, roared out:

"I don't need anybody to defend me. I kin defend myself against a dozen sich lookin' men as you is. If you don't believe me, come out in the back yard and see if you ain't de man what needs ter be defended."—Texas Siftings.

A Black List

of diseases follows an unhealthy condition of the liver, one of the most important organs of the body. Impure blood, bronchitis, asthma, malarial diseases, consumption, sick-headache, diseases of the skin, kidneys, and heart—all may be traced to faulty action or torpidity of the liver. No other known preparation so rapidly and thoroughly restores a disordered liver as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It is pleasant to the taste, mild but sure in its action, and a gift to suffering humanity from one of the most successful physicians of the age.

"Man's work's from sun to sun;
Woman's work is never done."

Work is a necessity to all; but, upon how many, women especially, does it fall with the burden of the "last straw," and this, because their peculiarly delicate constitutions are so liable to functional derangement. We cannot lessen your toil, ladies, but we can make it easier for you, by making you stronger and better able to do it. Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will relieve you of nervous and other weaknesses, and all the many ills peculiar to your sex.

If those who have never tried that unrivaled vegetable preparation, Dr. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, and are suffering from dyspepsia, bilious, or other fevers, or any disorder of the skin, kidneys or liver, or from impure blood, will receive the testimony of the thousands who have tried the Bitters, and been cured, they will be acting wisely.

VERY IMPORTANT.

A Cold in the head causes much discomfort and annoyance and if of frequent recurrence often produces serious results. The membrane of the nasal passage becomes inflamed and stopped up, an acrid mucous virus is formed, sores form in the head, deafness, headache, and roaring in the ears ensue and the sufferer finally discovers that he has Catarrh. This loathsome disease is by many considered incurable, but never fails to yield to the power of Ely's Cream Balm. This is an article of undoubted merit, not a liquid nor a snuff but a pleasant, cleanly and efficacious remedy which a child can use. It is applied into the nostrils where it is absorbed. It opens the passages, allays inflammation, heals all sores, cleanses and soothes the membranal linings and restores the senses of taste and smell. It gives instant relief; and a thorough treatment will certainly cure. Price 50c. at druggists or by mail.

Eastport.

An Eastport fishing party recently caught a muscalonge over four feet long, which weighed 25 pounds.

Mrs. H. F. Blakely has gone south, visiting friends.

Eastport literary society begins Friday evening, Oct. 2d. Everybody should attend this winter and make it interesting.

The ladies of Eastport have organized a helping hand society, an auxiliary to the Congregational church of this place, with the following officers: President, Mrs. N. C. Dreyer; vice president, Mrs. C. B. Zeran; secretary Mrs. J. R. Child; treasurer, Mrs. J. Newell; executive committee, Mrs. J. R. Child, Mrs. H. Pearl, Mrs. J. Newell. They have an autograph quilt in the course of construction. We also learn that the Congregational Society here intends building a church in the near future.

Events still crowd in upon us. Last Tuesday Miss Nellie Williams of this place and Mr. John Winters, of Milton, were married at the residence of the bride's parents. There were about 100 friends present,—some from Canada,—to witness the ceremony. A very enjoyable time was had. Rev. Mr. Coulter officiated. Many valuable and useful presents were tendered them. The reporter succeeded in getting a piece of the wedding cake. Here's hoping that they may live to enjoy the pleasure and comfort of many Winters.

Two Fortunes.

"Be not among winebibbers; among riotous eaters of the flesh. For the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags." Prov. xxiii, 20-21.

I'll tell you two fortunes, my fine little lad,
For you to accept or refuse:
The one of them good, the other one bad;
Now hear them, and say which you choose.

I see by my gifts, within reach of my hand,
A fortune right fair to behold;
A house and a hundred good acres of land,
With the harvest-fields yellow as gold.

I see a great orchard, with boughs hanging down,
With apples, green, russet and red;
I see droves of cattle, some white and some brown,
But all of them sleek and well fed.

I see droves of swallows about the barn door,
See the fanning mill whirling so fast;
I see them threshing the wheat on the floor—
And now the bright picture has passed.

I see rising dismally up in the place
Of the beautiful house and the land,
A man with a fire-red nose on his face,
And a little brown jug in his hand.

O, if you beheld him, my lad, you would wish
That he were less wretched to see;
For his boot-toes they gape like the mouth of a fish,
And his trousers are out at the knee.

In walking he staggers, now this way, now that,
And his eyes they stand out like a bug's;
And he wears an old coat, and a battered-in hat,
And I think that the fault is the jug's.

For the text says the drunkard shall come to be poor,
And that drowsiness clothes men with rags,
And he doesn't look much like a man, I am sure,
Who has honest hard cash in his bags,

Now which will you have? To be thrifty and sing,
And to be right side up with your dish;
Or go with your eyes like the eyes of a bug,
And your shoes like the mouth of a fish?

Lost Their Lives While Intoxicated.

Fowler, Ind., Sept. 24.—Gus Lingreen, a farmer living in Ambia in this county, was found dead on the track of the Lake Erie & Western railroad this morning, having been cut to pieces by a passing train. He had been drinking heavily last evening.

At East Park, in this county, Wood Burton attempted to jump from a moving freight train and was thrown beneath the cars. He was horribly mangled and soon died. He was intoxicated at the time.

Swing-Skittles.

The good old English game of skittles, perhaps from its constantly being associated with the idea of beer, ranks somewhat low among popular amusements; its chief votaries will be found among the frequent visitors to suburban tea-gardens or of roadside public houses. It is useful in its way as providing opportunities for the display of a certain amount of address, combined with more or less physical exercise, according to the energy of the players; but there is a general roughness and want of nicety about the game which will account for its not having made its way into favor as an adjunct to our country-house gardens, especially as these defects render it ill-adapted for the gentler sex.

The American form of the game, the bowling or ten-pin alley, is a very good improvement. The necessity for physical strength is reduced, while that of skill is increased, thereby making it better adapted for both sexes; but it must be played indoors, or at all events in a covered alley, in order to prevent the "table" from being damaged by exposure to the weather; and, moreover, the weight of the balls and the length of the ground render the construction of this "table" somewhat costly. Further, it is almost impossible to play for any length of time without having a boy constantly at the end of the alley to pick up the pins and send back the balls to the players.

In southern Germany a different form of game is very much in vogue; the ball, instead of being bowled, is swung by a rope suspended from a sort of gallows, and thus returns by its own momentum to the player's hand after every stroke. Nothing in the way of a table is required beyond a small square frame on which the pins stand, and this may be made of stone or wood sufficiently strong to defy the weather. The pins and all the adjuncts of the game can be made by any ordinary village carpenter, and may be left out of doors during the whole summer without taking any damage. A very small space is required, a plot of ground twenty-four feet long with a breadth of sixteen feet being amply sufficient; thus there is scarcely any garden in which a corner might not be found with room enough.

This game is to be seen in the gardens of almost every "Wirthschaft" in the Black forest—gardens that differ very much from those of our punch-houses in that they are frequented and civilized by the presence of the wives and daughters of the men of the lower and middle-classes, who after working-hours spend the long summer evenings in these resorts. Many of the hotels have one of these skittle-grounds attached to them in some shady nook, adding much to the attractions of the lazy life of an enforced sojourn at a German bad; and they are frequently also to be seen in the gardens of private residences, showing that the game is by no means practiced only by the lower classes. It has been long known in England on the toy and miniature scale, and has even in its fullness been sometimes imported here by some of those who have found it an agreeable pastime in Germany; and wherever it has been introduced it has met with favor in the neighborhood.—London Saturday Review.

Industrial Use of Natural Gas.

The practical application of natural gas, as an article of fuel, to the purpose of manufacturing glass, iron, and steel, promises to work a revolution in the industrial interests of America—promises to work a revolution; for, notwithstanding the fact that, in many of the largest iron, steel, and glass factories in Pittsburg and in vicinity, natural gas has already been substituted for coal, the managers of some such works are shy of the new fuel, mainly for two reasons: 1. They doubt the continuity and regularity of its supply; 2. They do not deem the difference between the price of natural gas and coal sufficient, as yet, to justify the expenditure involved in the furnace changes necessary to the substitution of the one for the other. These two objections will doubtless disappear with additional experience in the production and regulation of the gas-supply, and with enlarged competition among the companies engaging in its transmission from the wells to the works. At present the use of natural gas as a substitute for coal in the manufacture of glass, iron, and steel, is in its infancy.—George Wardman, in Popular Science Monthly for June.

Death of Anne Boleyn.

EXECUTED MAY 19, 1536.

The hour is come! Grim walls reluctant seem
To yield their captive to the treacherous block,
And never gift more fair. With royal mien
She greets the vassals of th' inconstant King.
Cromwell, false debtor to her lost estate,
Now triumphs in her fall. But all in vain,
His princely minions watch with jealous hate
For sigh, for falt'ring step, or secret tear,
In somber robes, fit symbol of her woe,
And white, sweet emblem of her innocence,
The victim comes. With tender words and low,
She calms her maidens' grief, then to the court:
"Good people, hither am I come to die,
According to the will of England's King.
To die, and thus to yield unto my lord,
My lord, the King, obedience to his will.
May God preserve your sovereign long to reign
O'er you and yours. To me he ever seemed
A good and gentle prince, a gracious King.
Commend me to his Majesty, I pray,
And say unto his grace that he hath been
Most zealous ever in advancing me,
A private gentlewoman of his realm.
He made me marchioness, he crowned me Queen,
And now he leaves no higher rank of fame,
Since he is pleased unto my innocence
To give the halo of a martyr's crown.
Alas, poor head! Alas, how short a space
And thou wilt make thy pillow in the dust.
But as in life thou didst not merit well
To wear the coronet of England's Queen,
So now in death dost thou desire no less
Than even such a mournful doom as this.
And ye, my damsels, who have ever shown
Yourselves so faithful in my cause—my stay
In this my final hour and agony—
In better fortune ye were loyal friends,
And now in death ye still desert me not,
Would 'twere my lot to recompense your love.
Be of good comfort, faithful to your King,
And to the one whom, with much happier fate,
Perchance in future you may have as Queen.
Esteem your honor better far than life.
And now farewell! 'Tis thus I take my leave;
Thus bid farewell to life, the world—and thee."
The queenly head that for so frail a prize
Had proudly borne St. Edward's jeweled crown,
Drooped low. How softly veiled those wondrous eyes!
A flush of steel—and royalty was free.

DIVING AFTER CORAL.

Queer Creatures that Make Their Home in the Branches of Coral Trees.

"Too much?" repeated a Conch, as he held up a big bunch of coral in the cabin of a schooner near Fulton market. If you had to git it up you wouldn't think so.

"You know," said the man after the would-be purchaser had crawled up the companionway ladder, "some folks git the idee that I bring this stuff on for fun, and give it away. I div a like o' fifty foot for that piece, and that chap wanted to take it for 25 cents."

"So you dive for these specimens?" asked the writer.

"Yes, the best are fotched up that way," was the reply; "but a good many are taken with coral hooks. Me and my brother takes a trip off and on. One of us collects the stuff and the other sells, and between the two, and acting as cook for the steamer, we make it pay.

"Yes, we see some curious sights, but we git used to it. We go to what they call the 'Markeys,' about forty miles or so the west'ard of Key West. You can git coral any time, but the summer's the best; then there is little wind a-blowin', and you can see the bottom in forty foot. In the winter we use a boat with a glass bottom, so we can set and drift along and look down through, and when we see anything git over for it.

"There's half a dozen kinds of coral that are common, and mostly they grow apart and in certain places. What we call branch coral is found all over the flats, where there is sandy bottom, growing kind of low like; but when it gits along toward the edge of the channel the branches grow longer, and look like regular branches of a tree, and matted so thick that you can't see the bottom or git your fist in between 'em. Sometimes, when we want to git out a fine piece of branch, we dive down into the channel, and, I tell you, it's a fine sight. When you git down thirty foot, say, it's as light as day when there's a good sun right overhead, and there you are in front of a wall of these 'ere coral points, a solid front, all of a brownish or olive color. If you git way down to the bottom you'll see crawfish-whips wavin' to and fro. They live under the coral, and on top and in between the black spots are big sea eggs, with spines six inches long. The coral is covered with fishes of all kinds—parrots, angels, yellow tails, and grunts. The fishes have a dozen or more colors, and one kind that I think beats 'em all is pure blue from head to foot. It's only about six inches long, and I never saw them away from the big heads.

"After practice you can stay down three or four minutes, and by swimming along with your eyes open you can git a look at the lot, and then try and break off a branch with a boat-hook of iron. Sometimes we have to go down four or five times to git a piece; then, if it's big, put a rope around it, and haul it up. Most of the small coral can be picked up with a hook that looks like a pair of oyster-hooks, but it's apt to break it, so I generally go overboard when the coral ain't too thick. There's one place I know where for a hundred acres its so thick that there ain't a place to put your foot—one big field of branch coral. The big heads generally grow on the edge of a flat that's covered with grass, right near the edge of the channel, and I can take you to a spot where there's coral heads that are ten foot across and six high. Some of the big ones weigh over one thousand pounds. When they get big they often die away on top, and finally git hollowed out and look like big vases holding angel fishes, crawfish, and a little of everything. You never see the big heads here, because vessels can't get near 'em, and a small boat wouldn't hold one. In water about twenty to twenty-five feet deep we git the best pieces, what they call rose coral. I git them by divin', as they're so small you can't see 'em hardly. I've got bunches not bigger than your hand, and got $10 for 'em. Pretty ain't no name for 'em. The last one I got came near cleaning me out."

"How so?"

"Well," replied the coral diver, "we have a fish on the reef called the stingaree; it's as flat as your hand, with two side wings that move up and down as it swims along. They are about two or three feet wide and six or eight feet long. The tail is just like the lash of a whip, and right where it joins the body there are three strings of bone, one right above the other, five or six inches long, with edges like a saw. They have a way of siuking down to the bottom, and with a shuffle something like that of a hen in the dust, covering themselves with sand. This day I speak of I was drifting along in about three fathoms, layin' in the bout looking through the glass, while my mate was at the oars ready to stop her when I sung out. All at once I clapped my eyes on a beauty head of rose coral, and over I went. I reckon it was about fifteen foot jest there, and I went down with such a rush that I went near the bottom right over the little brown head. I grabbed at what I thought was a bunch of weed, to hold on while I picked up the coral, I got it, and then let my feet down on to the bottom to give myself a shove up, when, blim! blim! came something around my legs, and I'm dogged if I didn't think they were off at the knees, and a big stingaree flew up by me, takin' me on all sides. The next I knew I was in the dingy, but how I got there I didn't know. Bob said he looked over and saw blood in the water and the fish, and thought a shark had me. The fish raised such a dust that for a minute he couldn't see nothing, but he grabbed the grains, then seein' me on the bottom put 'em into my drawers, and hauled me up. I'd fainted, clean gone, as sure as you're alive. I looked like that old fish market over yonder, all streaked with gore. There was a dozen cuts across my legs, jist like a red-hot iron had been put on, and if I'd been alone it would have been a gone case."

"Do you ever have trouble with sharks?"

"I never worry 'em, and they don't worry me, but they're as thick as flies in fly time on the reef.

"Yes, the coral business is tol'able. All the schools and colleges take collections, if they can git 'em cheap enough, and we sell a heap to the seaside resorts. The country people think they came out of the water right along shore; it's all the same to them. The kinds I deal in is brain coral, branch, pepper, leaf, and rose-shaped coral. Floatin' coral brings a big price. It floats after it is bleached, and pepper coral tastes like pepper after it's dead. Then we fetch sea fans, sea eggs, sharks' jaws, gulls' eggs, hawksbill turtles, and a little of everything. Corals sell by the piece from 25 cents to $5.—New York Sun.

The Soprano's Predicament.

In one of the hill towns of old Litchfield county is a soprano of a Congregational church noted for her fine voice. The other Sunday the white-haired old clergyman lined out the opening hymn, and the organist, after a lingering glance at his necktie in the little mirror, cocked his head on one side, slammed both hands down on the keys and kicked at the pedals. The choir stopped laughing and gossiping, cleared their throats, and arose to sing. They struck into the hymn in good style, that is, all excepting the soprano. Not a sound from her musical throat. Her pretty face was a red flush, and her jaws were working convulsively. When it came to her solo part, she was dumb. The choir could not believe their ears, the congregation craned their necks at the choir, and the old gray-headed clergyman pushed his specs away upon his forehead and stared. The choir sang a single verse and stopped. By this time the soprano was at a red heat, and the perspiration on her marble brow had ruined her best Sunday bang. At last, with a final yank, she yanked her teeth apart, and exclaimed in an undertone: "If I ever ketch that Jones young 'un that gave me that hunk of maple taffy I'll break her back."

"Let us pray," said the old gray-headed clergyman solemnly. But everybody within earshot of the choir stopped to grin first.—Hartford Times.

The Engineer thus concludes an article on British and Russian field artillery: "Altogether, then, in material we ought to have some advantage at first over Russia. Nevertheless we maintain that it is by no means the condition of things that ought to exist under the circumstances, because Great Britain has had the peculiar need as a practical question before her for seven or eight years. Surely three screw mountain batteries, one elephant divided gun, and a few doubtful and dangerous rockets, which we feel are very unlikely to be fired, are not an adequate result to show for the unnumbered efforts of the Government departments of a rich and powerful country whose mind is set on holding her own in India."

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Ferdinand Ward, the ex-banker of New York, has been interviewed. He declares that he has been made a scapegoat for the sins of others, and promises to give the public a statement, prepared some time since, showing in detail all the transactions of the firm of Grant & Ward. Gen. Grant, he says, had no knowledge of its affairs.

The Cape May challenge cup was won by the English yacht Genesta.

Coleman S. Adams, cashier of the Framingham (Mass.) Savings Bank, who committed suicide a month ago, was a defaulter to the extent of $228,000.

The Attorney General of New York decides that the State of Georgia is a defaulter, and prohibits savings banks from investing in Georgia bonds.

Jordan, Marsh & Co., the Boston dry-goods merchants, who have been attached by New York cloak manufacturers for $900,000, say the proceedings are the result of a conspiracy in which one of their employes is involved.

Soutter & Co., a well-known banking and brokerage house of New York, assigned, with preferences of about $70,000.

A meteor which caused startling explosions fell on a farm in Jefferson Township, Pa., near the West Virginia line. The stone is ashen in color, streaked with red, and is said to be thirty feet square. People are flocking from surrounding sections to examine the wonder.

At the meeting of the Northwestern Anthracite Coal Association, at Erie, no change was made in the price of coal for October, and the product for the month was fixed at 650,000 tons.

WESTERN.

Judge Powers, of Provo, Utah, instructed the Grand Jury that a separate indictment could be found for each day during which a polygamist had lived with more than one wife since the passage of the Edmunds act.

A citizens' meeting at Seattle, in Washington Territory, adopted strong resolutions in favor of the vigorous enforcement of the Chinese restriction act, deploring the presence of the Mongolians, and urging the use of all lawful means for their removal.

Christine Lagrange, a young woman, committed suicide by poison at Neenah, Wis. In her dying moments she confessed that while driving home from a dance with John Kerwin, aged 21, he dragged her from the buggy and violated her person, and that she could not outlive the disgrace. Kerwin was arrested.

Hog cholera is doing much damage in the vicinities of Red Wing, Minn., and Janesville, Wis.

At Saybrook, McLean County, Ill., Dr. Harris shot and killed Dr. Barton. Both were prominent practitioners in that locality.

Judge Chipman, of the Detroit Superior Court, in a decision just rendered, holds that newspapers are not privileged to print complaints filed in court, and in so doing must assume the responsibility for all the allegations contained therein.

For unlawful cohabitation, Bishop Hiram B. Clawson was sentenced at Salt Lake City to six months' imprisonment, $300 fine, and costs—the full extent of the law.

Patrick Hartnett, a Cincinnati wife-murderer, was hung at the Ohio Penitentiary at Columbus. The fall resulted in almost total decapitation, the head hanging to the body only by a small strip of skin at the back of the neck. The scene was a most sickening one, and it was with great difficulty that the executioners could summon courage to take the body down. Hartnett killed his wife Jan. 31, 1884, in Mount Auburn, a suburb of Cincinnati.

Frank S. Covey, a bookkeeper of Joliet, has unexpectedly fallen heir to an estate valued at from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, left by his paternal grandfather, a Kentucky planter.

Rosenfield & Kaufman, clothiers, of Cincinnati, assigned, with preferences of nearly $40,000. The liabilities are estimated at $100,000 and the assets at $50,000. Russell Hinckley, banker and mill-owner, of Belleville, Ill., has suspended. His indebtedness, which is heavy, will, it is believed, be fully covered by his assets.

The Wisconsin State Convention of the Woman Suffrage Association, in session at Whitewater, elected the Rev. Olympia Brown, of Racine, President; Mrs. N. James, of Richland Center, Vice President; Mrs. W. J. Tripp, of Whitewater, Secretary; and Miss DeMunro, of Milwaukee, Treasurer. The convention listened to papers by Alyra Collins on school suffrage, and by Dr. Munro on the dress question, and to an address by Prof. H. B. Maxon, of the State Normal School at Stillwater, on the obstacles in the way of woman suffrage. The Rev. Mrs. Brown also made an address on the prospects of the movement.

At a crossing near Brightwood, Ind., a collision of trains occurred, one man being killed and fourteen cars demolished. The financial loss approximates $10,000.

SOUTHERN.

Imports of merchandise for the year ended Aug. 31 reached $571,235,943, against $657,871,316 for the previous year.

A horrible tragedy was enacted at Austin, Texas, in which a negro man and three negro women were brutally murdered by having their skulls crushed with an ax. They were servants in the family of Mr. W. B. Dunham, editor of the Texas Court Reporter, and occupied a shanty in the rear of his premises. The names of the victims are Orange Washington, his wife (known as Grace Vance), Patsie Gibson, and Luchida Boddy. From the testimony and surrounding circumstances it appears that the assassin entered the room of the sleeping occupants through a window, and before any of them awoke succeeded in striking all four of them on the head with an ax. The author of the bloody deed, a negro named Doc Wood, was pursued and arrested.

The Postmaster General has decided to continue the steamboat mail service between Louisville, Ky., and Evansville, Ind. The contractors have agreed to reduce the charge for this service $5,000 per year, making the annual expense $10,000.

Four negroes, one of them a woman, who were accused of several murders, were taken from jail and hanged by a mob, in Chatham County, North Carolina. The cell doors were broken down and the four negroes were each put on a horse with a disguised man astride behind. The men made no outcry, save to protest their innocence, but the moans of the woman were heart-rending. A mile was quickly traveled, and the cavalcade stopped in a grove. The negroes were tied hands and feet and made to stand upon their horses. They were given five minutes to make confessions and to pray. They protested their innocence to the last, and as they prayed the horses were driven out from under them, and they were left hanging to the tree.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Manning has ordered that all moneys due or to become due to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for Government transportation be covered into the Treasury and applied toward the extinguishment of the indebtedness of that corporation to the Government.

The Postmaster General decides that the salaries of postal employes can not be attached for debt.

Statements prepared at the Treasury Department show that the amount of silver dollars put in circulation directly from the mints during the past two or three months is nearly double the amount similarly coined during the corresponding period of last year. The issue from the mints during the week ended Sept. 26 was $736,577, as against $455,895 issued during the corresponding period of last year.

A Washington dispatch says: "Advices were received from Capt. Lee, agent in charge of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in the Indian Territory, that a number of cattlemen showed no disposition to remove their herds. The number of cattle thus held on the reservation is several thousand, and some trouble is anticipated in effecting their removal. Thus far no force has been required, and over half the herds unlawfully present have been driven off. Capt. Lee has a troop of cavalry with him, and to-day he was authorized to use any forcible means that he might deem best to effect the departure of the trespassers."

POLITICAL.

Ex-Congressman Flower has declined the Democratic nomination for Lieutenant Governor of New York.

General E. S. Jones, of Binghamton, has been chosen to fill the vacancy on the New York State Democratic ticket, caused by the refusal of Mr. Flower to run for Lieutenant Governor. General Jones commanded the famous Sixth Massachusetts Regiment which was attacked in the streets of Baltimore, April 18, 1861, while on its way to the defense of Washington. This was the first blood shed in the civil war. He subsequently raised the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, and served with distinction in the Army of the Gulf. He was brevetted Brigadier General for meritorious services on the field. He ran for Congress against Thomas C. Platt in 1874, but was defeated, and was again beaten two years later for the same office by G. R. Dwight. He is regarded as a business man purely and not as a politician.

The Massachusetts Greenback State Convention assembled at Boston and nominated by acclamation the following ticket: Governor, James Sumner, of Milton; Lieutenant Governor, James M. Bullum, of Lynn; Secretary of State, H. W. K. Eastman, of Lawrence; Treasurer and Receiver General, Walter Harmon, of Boston; Auditor, A. H. Wood, of Lunenburg; Attorney General, A. S. Hull, of Hudson. A platform was adopted which announces adherence to the principles set forth at the National party convention at Indianapolis; declares that all action transferring power for the coinage and issue of money to persons or corporations should be revoked; that the withdrawal of legal tenders of small denominations is a vicious attempt to annoy the people and disturb business, and is a violation of the law; favors frequent elections and rotation in office, and condemns the attempt to create an aristocracy of office holders under pretense of civil-service reform; condemns also as unnecessary long sessions of the Legislature, and sets forth that legislation for the better protection of wage-workers is demanded. Universal suffrage is favored, with the removal of all barriers which limit in any degree the right of suffrage, and the re-enactment of the secret ballot law is demanded.

The President appointed James T. Healy Assistant United States Treasurer at Chicago, to succeed Gov. Beveridge; James Blair, Postmaster at Grand Rapids, Mich., and Edward A. Stevenson, of Boise City, Governor of Idaho Territory.

President Cleveland has decided that candidates for the positions of weighers and gaugers in the customs service must undergo examinations under the civil-service rules.

Professor Agassiz declines the appointment of Superintendent of the Coast Survey. President Cleveland informed Surgeon General Hamilton that he would be retained in his present position. Dudley O. Watson has been appointed Collector of Customs at Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Massachusetts Republican Convention, in session at Springfield, placed the following ticket in the field: Governor, George D. Robinson; Lieutenant Governor, Oliver Ames; Secretary of State, Henry B. Pierce; State Treasurer and Receiver General, A. W. Beard; Auditor, Chas. R. Ladd; Attorney General, Edgar L. Sherman. Senator Hoar, who presided over the convention, made a lengthy speech, in which he said that his party, although in favor of restoring peace and harmony between the sections, would insist upon the right of all loyal citizens to free discussion, unobstructed suffrage, and an honest counting of their votes. The platform indorses the civil-service laws and urges the extension of their principles to all the business offices of the Government; demands the suspension of silver coinage; the enactment of a general bankrupt law, and the vigorous enforcement of the Edmunds bill in Utah; favors reductions or reforms in the tariff which may not be inconsistent with the doctrine of protection, and appeals to an "aroused public conscience" to prevent further suppression of the negro vote in the South.

A convention of colored men of Virginia met at Lynchburg. M. V. Beckley, of Richmond, delivered an address, saying the convention had not assembled as Republicans or Democrats, but as citizens of Virginia, claiming the right of freemen. He hoped their deliberations would demonstrate that they were worthy the citizenship. The convention adopted resolutions renouncing allegiance to the Republican organization, and proclaiming absolute independence henceforth in political matters.

R. G. Dun & Co. report 2,123 failures in the United States for the quarter ending Sept. 30, with $23,820,000 liabilities, against 2,343 bankruptcies and $56,000,000 indebtedness for the corresponding period in 1884. During nine months of 1885 there have been 8,165 failures, with $97,000,000 liabilities, against 7,856 failures and $181,000,000 liabilities for the same time in 1884.

Shocking destitution and suffering prevail among the half-breed women and children on the Saskatchewan River, in consequence of the killing, flight, or imprisonment of the male population. The missionaries have shared all their provisions with these people, and they are doomed to starvation unless speedily relieved.

A Montreal special says: "Everything is still quiet and no danger is at present feared, but some of the rioters have expressed their determination to keep quiet while the volunteers remain under arms, and to renew the attack as soon as there is any laxity in the present precautions. The returns at the health office show forty-two deaths from small-pox in the city yesterday, six in St. Jean Baptiste, six in St. Cunegonde, two in Cote St. Louis, and one in St. Henri. There were 184 deaths from small-pox in this city during the last four days, besides fifty-one in adjoining municipalities."

FOREIGN.

The coming Parliamentary elections in Great Britain and Ireland continue to be the principal matters to which the people are devoting their attention. The Liberal Association has instructed its candidates to avoid, as far as possible, discussion of the church disestablishment. It is, however, being forced upon them by parties attending their meetings.

HOADLY AND FORAKER.

Correspondence Between the Democratic and Republican Candidates for Governor of Ohio.

[Columbus (Ohio) dispatch.]

Judge Foraker, Republican candidate for Governor, in his speech at Paulding, yesterday, became exasperated over the fact that some Prohibitionists asked him to define himself on the temperance issue, and immediately announced that he would challenge Governor Hoadly to a discussion on the issues of the campaign. This was on the ground, as he claimed, that Governor Hoadly had been instrumental in having the questions put to him by outsiders while he was speaking at different points. The following correspondence in relation to the matter has been made public:

COLUMBUS, Sept. 25.

Hon. Thomas E. Powell, Chairman, etc.:

DEAR SIR—As Gov. Hoadly, through certain allies of your party calling themselves Prohibitionists, has seen fit to propound questions to our candidate for Governor at long range, I am authorized to challenge him to a discussion of the issues of the campaign with Judge Foraker, at such times and places as may be agreed upon by us. Yours very truly, A. S. BUSHNELL, Chairman.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 26.

Hon. A. S. Bushnell, Chairman, etc.:

Your letter has just been received, in which you claim that the Prohibitionists, as allies of our party, have propounded certain questions to your candidate for Governor. The Prohibition party is not an ally of the Democratic party. We are against them and the Prohibition party. They, on the other hand, are against us and for prohibition. If Judge Foraker will declare whether he is an ally or an enemy to the Prohibition party, whether the is in favor of prohibition or against, we will be pleased to meet with you and the Chairman of the Prohibition State Executive Committee and arrange for a discussion by all three candidates upon this and all other questions involved in the present canvass. Yours truly, T. E. POWELL, Chairman.

COLUMBUS, Sept. 26.

Hon. Thomas E. Powell, Chairman, etc.

DEAR SIR—By your favor of this afternoon I am pleased to see that you do not deny that Gov. Hoadly, through Prohibition allies, has been engaged in the small work of propounding questions to our candidate for Governor. From your well-known truthfulness I did not suppose you would have the hardihood to do this after the occurences at Paulding on yesterday, where the undignified scheme was exposed. Under all the circumstances, I do not wonder that you even condescend to crawfish for the purpose of keeping Gov. Hoadly from meeting a manly antagonist in a manly manner. Yours very truly, A. S. BUSHNELL.

COLUMBUS, Sept. 26.

To Hon. A. S. Bushnell.

DEAR SIR—Your last favor has just been received. Gov. Hoadly has not been engaged in the work of proposing questions to Judge Foraker, through Prohibitionists or any other persons, nor has the Democratic party done so. Our candidate however, has the courage to answer all questions put to him on the stump or through the public press. If your candidate has not equal courage it is not our fault, but your misfortune. If you can induce Judge Foraker to answer the questions plainly put to him in our last letter, or if your committee will answer them for him, we will be pleased to meet you and arrange for a joint debate, as indicated in our answer. Yours respectfully, T. E. POWELL, Chairman.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 27.

Hon. Thomas E. Powell, Chairman Democratic State Executive Committee:

DEAR SIR—I have just received from Judge Foraker the following, which explains itself. In accordance therewith, I hereby repeat his challenge for a joint discussion with Gov. Hoadly, and request an early conference for the arrangement of details.

A. S. BUSHNELL, Chairman.

DAYTON, Ohio, Sept. 26.

Hon. A. S. Bushnell, Chairman:

DEAR SIR—I telegraphed you last night from Paulding, asking you to challenge Gov. Hoadly to a joint discussion of the issues involved in this campaign. I knew nothing of what has since transpired until this moment, when, on my arrival, I am handed telegraphic copies of the correspondence that has passed between the committees. Because of the circumstances at Paulding leading to the challenge, I desired a debate between Gov. Hoadly and myself, but the Democratic committee seem unwilling to consent, except upon condition that Dr. Leonard be also brought into the discussion. You have already declined a debate between Dr. Leonard and myself, and I have no control of him; but you are hereby authorized and requested to immediately repeat my challenge to the Democratic committee, and say to them that, if Gov. Hoadly insists upon the aid of Dr. Leonard, I waive all objection to his coming into the discussion. But I challenge him to come upon the invitation of Gov. Hoadly, and that Gov. Hoadly will share his time with him. If this be accepted, please arrange at once for a series of meetings. I suggest not less than four. Very truly, etc., J. B. FORAKER.

SMALL-POX.

Terrible Ravages of the Disease in Montreal.

[Telegram from Montreal:]

There is no abatement in the small-pox epidemic here yet, but there are hopes that the new measures coming into operation of compelling all to be vaccinated and those suffering from the disease to be isolated, will lessen the mortality. The daily deaths in city and suburbs last week averaged forty-five. There are 130 patients under treatment in the civic hospital. The greatest energy on the part of the health authorities, both provincial and city, is being employed, with the assistance of leading merchants and clergy of all denominations, to get the malady under control. The sanitary laws passed by Parliament for combating the epidemic, and which give arbitrary powers to the Board of Health, have been invoked, and special Stipendiary Magistrates are to sit daily to enforce the rules submitted by the local board for stamping out the scourge. A large force of doctors employed by the Health Board will commence a systematic vaccination from house to house all over the city on Monday, and all who refuse will be brought before the Magistrates and fined.

A GOOD START.

A Candid Review, from an Independent Standpoint, of the First Six Months of the New Administration.

[From the Nation (New York).]

Six months have elapsed since Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated. The first half-year always strikes the tone of a new administration, and the occasion suggests a review of what has been accomplished between the 4th of March and the 4th of September.

First and most important of all, it has been demonstrated, to the comprehension of even the blindest partisan, that the public interests are as safe in the hands of one party as in those of the other. The superstition which had come to possess a large proportion of Republicans, that the accession of Democracy to power would involve the ruin of the country, has been forever dispelled. It seems almost incredible now that, only a few months ago, there were hosts of men who fully and sincerely believed that the election of Mr. Cleveland meant the bankruptcy of the Federal Treasury by the payment of "rebel claims," the "loss of all the fruits of the war," and such a general political, financial, and moral upheaval as would "set the nation back twenty years." Popular government is a failure if a party which comprises a majority of the people cannot be trusted to govern the whole people. Six months ago a considerable percentage of the public held this most discouraging view of a century's trial of the American experiment. To-day the man who should begin ranting about the country's going to ruin because the Democrats were in power would simply be laughed at, even by the Republicans whom he formerly duped most badly. To have thus restored faith in government of the people, whatever servants they may employ to do their work, is in itself a great achievement.

Next to the dread of national ruin was the apprehension of a "clean sweep" of the officeholders, and the consequent demoralization of the civil service. Six months have sufficed to remove this apprehension. One-eighth of Mr. Cleveland's term has expired, and only about one-eighth of the Republicans whom he found in place have been succeeded by Democrats. The civil-service law has been maintained in spirit as well as in letter, and among the 40,000 positions which it covers in the departmental service at Washington and the large custom-houses and postoffices throughout the country, removals have, as a rule, been made only for cause—the few exceptions having aroused such criticism that the performance is not likely to be repeated. Among the chiefs of division and heads of bureaus, whose places do not fall within the "classified service," a very large proportion of the experienced and efficient incumbents have been retained. Not one change has been made among such officials in the State, War, or Navy Department; only fifteen new appointments have been made to these positions in the Treasury, with over seventy such places, and nearly all of these changes were demanded for the improvement of the service; removals have been rare in the other three executive departments. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which has more places not subject to the civil-service rules than all the departments combined, and which has been a sink of patronage ever since its establishment some twenty years ago, has been committed to a pronounced civil-service reformer, who has cut off sinecures right and left, and thus reduced its running expenses one-half, while he has increased its efficiency. The State Department made no more changes in consulates under Mr. Bayard during the first four months than under Mr. Blaine during the same period preceding Garfield's assassination, and changes have been even slower in the last two months. A considerable number of Consuls appointed by Republican Presidents, whose records are found to justify their retention, have been assured permanence, and Secretary Bayard has made it understood that fitness rather than political influence is to govern the filling of Government places abroad. The most important postoffice in the country has been continued in the hands of the man who brought it to its present high state of efficiency, and many hundreds of Republican incumbents in other lucrative postoffices are serving out terms which run well into the future. There are about 2,300 postoffices which are filled by nomination of the President and confirmation by the Senate. As all such offices have a term of four years, appointments to the whole 2,300 must be made in the course of four years by reason of the expiration of term alone. Appointments to fill vacancies caused by death, resignation, or removal for good reason would carry the average number of normal changes in this class of offices during a half year up to fully 300. Mr. Cleveland has made only 524 appointments of postmasters. There are about 49,000 fourth-class offices filled by the Postmaster General, and under Arthur appointments to these offices were made at the rate of nearly 12,000 a year, or almost 6,000 in six months. Since the 4th of March changes have been made in 6,309 of these offices, the Republican average not having been maintained while Mr. Hay had charge of this business, although it has been much exceeded by Mr. Stevenson during the last few weeks. It is thus clear that in an eighth of a Presidential term only about an eighth of the offices have been changed. In other words, so far from a "clean sweep," the changes have not been very much more numerous than has been the rule when the same party remained in power. The new appointees have been almost exclusively Democrats, although there have been notable exceptions to this rule outside the cases of Messrs. Pearson and Graves. The Commissioner of Pensions has made changes in about a quarter of the 2,200 examining surgeons, but he has given the minority one member of each board of three, although his predecessor appointed only men of his own party. The high average of the new officials as a class is most clearly shown by the iteration of the bad points of a few, like Higgins, Pillsbury, and Troup, upon which the opposition press perforce concentrates its criticism.

The check which it has put upon the spoils doctrine is the chief merit of the administration thus far. But while the disposition of the offices has naturally occupied the larger share of their time, the President and his Cabinet have already done enough to establish the character of the new regime in its other relations. Its distinguishing feature is the conduct of public affairs upon business principles. The various branches of the Government are being overhauled with a view to the suppression of wasteful methods, the abolition of sinecures, the reform of abuses. The wisdom of a change has already been vindicated by the discovery that under the unquestioned rule of one party the public service has fallen into ruts, lapsed into shiftless habits, and even degenerated into corruption, which nothing short of a revolution in control could overcome. In its relations with the Indians, its dealings with the trespassers upon the public lands, its treatment of naval contractors, the administration has introduced new rules of action, based upon adherence to law and regard for the public interests, rather than upon the consideration long shown to political favorites and powerful financial interests. The strongest impression which it makes upon the public mind is that of a body of men who, though strong partisans, are making a sincere effort to redeem all their pledges. The administration has made blunders and been justly criticised for them; indeed, no administration ever found the people in so critical a mood. But the verdict of all candid men must certainly be that it has made a good start in its first six months.

The Facts About Mullen.

The Republican papers of the irreconcilable stripe have been making a great ado over the pardon by President Cleveland of Lieut. Mullen, of Cincinnati, who was tried and condemned to imprisonment by the Federal (Republican) court. John Sherman, too, howled about it in his speech opening the campaign. Governor Hoadly in an interview gives the facts in the case as follows:

"Last election day, 150 negroes were brought over from Covington, Ky., to a place kept by 'Hoghead John' in Cincinnati, for the purpose of repeating at the polls in the interest of the Republican party. This fact was notorious. Mr. Mullen and his aids grabbed the whole 150, and by this prevented at least 1,500 illegal votes from being cast. The capture of the men was not effected without serious trouble, but it is yet to be shown that Mr. Mullen in any way overstepped the authority with which he was vested. It is true that I signed the petition for his pardon; it is also true that I went to see President Cleveland personally in his behalf, and of both these things I am proud."

Republican Blunders in Ohio.

The continual struggle of the Republicans has been to accomplish two objects—first, to get that troublesome question (prohibition) out of the campaign; and, second, by alternate abuse and persuasion to win the Prohibitionists away from the practical indorsement of their own theories at the ballot-box. You can not talk with an intelligent Republican on the streets today who does not candidly admit these facts, and we do not refer to them now to discuss them at length, but only to put into cold type our conviction that the blunders of our enemies have made the path of the Ohio Democracy to victory straight and smooth. We do not say that the path is an easy downgrade or even a level. It is an upgrade, and it will take effort to climb it, but Republican blunders are thick along the pathway wherewith to chock our wheels.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"The Enemies It Has Made."

President Cleveland, in his purpose to keep the public good in his eye, manages to run against a large assortment of private interests. The ocean steamship companies cannot have their subsidy; the cattle-barons must get out of the Indian lands, and must pull down their fences; the land-grant railroads must not impose on settlers; political bosses are kept from looting the offices, and the army and navy pets must take their share of service. The latest sufferer is the express company, which claims that the Government is taking fat contracts out of its mouth by transporting coin in a Government vessel instead of sending it as freight. This style of administration may not be popular among those who feel the shoe pinch; but, in the historic words of Gen. Bragg, the people ought to love it for the enemies it makes.—Washington Star.

THE difference between John Roach and the Government is only $20,000, and the recent course of the Navy Department, it is believed, will hardly account for the failure. Perhaps the correct explanation of it is that Mr. Chandler drew out his interest in the concern to invest in his recent unsuccessful campaign for the United States Senate.

BAD FOR THE MORMONS.

The Mexicans Don't Want Them, and a Judge in Utah Bears Heavily Upon Them.

[Paso del Norte (Mexico) dispatch.]

The Mexicans have begun active warfare against polygamy, and people of all shades of politics, as well as the Catholic Church, are arrayed against its introduction upon Mexican soil. An emphatic demand has been made upon President Diaz to cancel the grant of 100 sitios of land recently granted to Brigham Young, Jr., in the northern portion of the State of Chihuahua. The Catholic priests are demanding that the terms of the agreement, which stipulate that the Mexican laws must be fully complied with, shall be enforced as they are in the United States. This operates against the Mormons now in Mexico, and unless they strip themselves of a plurality of wives they will have to vacate Mexican territory. The Catholic Church, which is the prime mover in this opposition to the introduction of polygamy upon Mexican soil, is backed by a strong public sentiment, especially in the Northern States, and should Brigham Young, Jr., succeed in locating another colony of Mormons he will have not only rigid laws, but a social and religious element to encounter which would make the United States a more congenial climate for his "Latter Day Saints." The press of the Republic and the politicians have also taken up the cudgels against the Mormons, and assert that in addition to the pernicious social evil of the saints other and more serious trouble might result to the republic through their colonization. Regardless of the grants made by President Diaz, the edict has gone forth in Mexico that the Mormons must go.

[Provo (Utah) dispatch.]

Judge Powers, in his charge to the Grand Jury of this district, instructed them that a separate indictment could be rendered for each day which a polygamist had lived with more than one wife since the passage of the Edmunds act. The penalty for each indictment is six months' imprisonment and $300 fine.

THE CORN CROP.

Probable Yield in the Ten Leading Producing States.

[Chicago special.]

The corn crop of the United States having passed the critical stage, and whatever of danger menaced the cereal from frosts being now ended, owing to the maturity of the grain, the Farmers' Review of this city has called in reports from its 1,400 correspondents, giving the area and probable yield in every county in the ten leading corn-producing States, and has compiled from these a close estimate of the approximate yield of the crop of 1885. These estimates have been based on a comparison with the yield of 1884, taking the figures of the Agricultural Bureau at Washington for the yield of last year. The reports of the correspondents include not only the approximate actual acreage, but also the percentage of condition as compared to last year, and the percentage of increase or decrease in acreage. This was done to approximate as closely as possible to the actual output, the correctness of which method was demonstrated very fully in the estimate of the wheat crop on June 1 by this bureau, and to which figures all the recognized statisticians, including the Government bureau, have gradually approached. In Indiana, Illinois, and Kansas the ground plowed up, owing to the ruination of the winter wheat crop and devoted to corn, is closely computed. In the comparison by States the returns show that Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, and Mississippi have a slight increase in acreage over 1884, and Wisconsin is the only State showing a decrease but both Minnesota and Wisconsin show a decrease in condition and Missouri also shows a slight decrease. The other States all reveal an improvement, and in Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana the improvement is marked.

This results in the following comparison by States of the probable yield in the ten States named:

	1884. Bushels.	1885. Bushels.
Ohio	85,393,000	131,500,000
Indiana	101,757,000	125,708,000
Illinois	244,544,000	294,219,000
Iowa	252,600,000	296,805,000
Missouri	197,850,000	189,360,000
Kansas	168,500,000	188,720,000
Nebraska	122,100,000	137,362,000
Minnesota	23,630,000	21,148,000
Wisconsin	26,200,000	21,209,000
Michigan	26,022,000	30,185,000
Total	1,251,596,000	1,436,236,000
Excess over last year		184,640,000

On the basis that the States and Territories outside of the ten named will produce as much corn as they did last year, or 543,400,000 bushels, and this would seem to be assured from a study of the reports, it will give a total crop of 1,979,636,000 bushels, from which total it is safe to estimate that the yield will not vary in any appreciable degree either way.

A DUEL TO THE DEATH.

Two Men Clasp Their Left Hands and Shoot Each Other to Death.

[St. Louis (Mo.) special.]

Information comes here that a most desperate tragedy occurred near the village of Cottonwood Point, in this State, on Friday night. Two intoxicated strangers got into a dispute and then had a rough-and-tumble fight over the weight of a bale of cotton, but they were separated by bystanders. Shortly after, however, the men soon renewed their fight, and mutually agreed, in order that neither should have an advantage over the other, that they should clasp their left hands together and fight only with their right hands. Thus arranged, each man, with a revolver in his right hand, began the bloody work. Seven shots were exchanged, and one of the men fell dead with four bullets in his head and breast, while the other sank to the ground, bleeding and dying from two or three desperate wounds.

ILLEGITIMATE births are steadily on the increase in France, the figures being 68,227 in 1880, 70,079 in 1881, 71,305 in 1882, 74,213 in 1883, and 75,754 in 1884.

Using a Fan for a Garment.

Did you suppose that clothes were always for warmth and fans for coolness? Well, then, you are mistaken. Your theory is sound in the main, but the ball belle reverses it. She goes to the gay gatherings of dancers, bare-breasted, in the fashion sanctioned by polite usage. From shoulder to shoulder, and from neck to a perilously low point, she has no covering whatever. It is clear as can be that her garb has no reference to warmth. She is by it exposed at her most sensitive area to cold. Every draught of air threatens her with pneumonia, and each change from the temperature of a room to that of a colder one menaces neuralgia or rheumatism. In this quandary she bethought herself of making her fan a paradox. She employs that article of adornment, flirtation and refrigeration for still another purpose. She gets a big one constructed of feathers on the outside; or else a lace affair which looks as airy as her own corsage; but the inner surface is covered with swan's down, under which is a thick wadding. Armed with that sort of a fan, like the shield of a Joan of Arc, she defends her breast against the darts of Death. If a door is opened to let in cold air on her while she is engaged in a quadrille, she spreads the fan closely on her bosom, and thereby is instantly as much dressed as though a high-necked gown, chemise and chamois underwear had been suddenly donned. If in the circles of the waltz she has to pass an open window, the fan is clapped into place. White fur is, in some instances, used for these fans. They are a great comfort during the ball and opera, season, I assure you. But I had to laugh at the unsophisticated fellow, who, the other night, was discussing with a matron the charms of a maiden who sat at the opposite side of the hall.

"She is really so modest," he remarked; "as gushingly as a school girl. See how she defends herself with her fan against the eye of the man who is bending over her."

The fact was that she sat in a breezy spot and was using her fur-lined fan.

"It's the wind she's afraid of," said the matron.

"Bless my soul," the chap ejaculated. "I knew he was a rapid talker, but I didn't imagine he was such a conversational blizzard as that."—New York letter.

Powder and Shot.

Gunpowder is a compound of niter, or saltpeter, charcoal, and sulphur. By consulting Our Curiosity Shop book for 1881 a detailed account of the process of its manufacture will be found. Shot is made in high towers. Bars of lead are carried by machinery to the summit of the tower, and are then melted and poured into perforated pans or colanders. The melted lead falling in drops is cooled in a spherical form, and at the bottom falls into a large vessel of water. Taken from the water, the shot is assorted into various sizes, and is then polished by being put with some pulverized graphite in a rapidly rotating cylinder. The most of the gunpowder in use in this country is manufactured in Pennsylvania. New York produces the greatest proportion of shot.—Inter Ocean.

The republican press is just now crying out loudly against democratic "bossism," as if "bossism" was something terrible. They seem to forget how many "bosses" the republican party had during its era of success. The real trouble, however, is that they are afraid the democratic party will become thoroughly organized and harmonious. Let them howl.

The Law of Libel in Michigan.

A curious libel suit came to an end in Detroit on Wednesday with a verdict of six cents damages for the plaintiff. This was a case in which a newspaper—The Detroit Free Press—in the exercise of what it deemed its duty as a publisher of the news of the day, and according to the universal usage of American dailies had printed a synopsis of a declaration filed in a divorce case in the Superior Court district of Detroit. The Judge ruled adversely to the defendant throughout the proceedings. He enunciated it as the law that the publication of a declaration or complaint filed in court on the commencement of a suit is not privileged, and held that the newspaper which published it must prove the truth of the declaration or suffer in damages if it fails to do so; that it must justify in order to escape punishment. We believe this is the law laid down in the books and bequeathed to this generation by the harsh and unfriendly precedents of the English courts, made in many instances by judges who themselves deserved to suffer, or perhaps had suffered, the castigations of the pamphleteers of their day. It seems, however, from the verdict of the jury in the Detroit case and in several others which have recently been decided, that in practice the law is not so stupid and vindictive as the judges of some of the courts would like to have it. Juries, when composed of reasonable and dispassionate men, will not impose cruel or unusual punishment upon any publisher who, in the course of his business as a collector and disseminator of the news, shall in good faith and without malice print a colorless synopsis of a declaration filed in court in a suit at law.—[Chicago Tribune.

Boston Herald: There is nothing small about the average republican partisan. If his party can hold all the offices for 25 years under its own administrations and retain them under a democartic president he won't grumble. The earth and the fullness thereof will satisfy him for the present.

Indianapolis Times (Rep): Our present tariff is protection run to seed. It is a mass of erudition, and calls for radical revision. A revision of the present tariff does not necessarily mean free trade; it means commercial reform. The tariff should not be reformed in the interest of a theory, but in the interest of business.

MME. PATTI AT HOME.

The Queen of Song as the Hostess of Craig-y-Nos Castle.

The diva is a charming hostess of the castle of Craig-y-Nos, Wales, writes a correspondent to the Philadelphia Press. On her arrival at Liverpool Mme. Patti takes four-wheelers to a special train, which, heading southward, is soon whirling through the loveliest possible country. After a quick transatlantic passage the prima donna can not put up with the regular Welsh train, the pace of that conveyance being, it seems, a sort of market-going jog, with halts made whenever the engineer or guard wants to chat with some of his numerous relatives along the road.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon, Cray Station being near, where we were to leave the train, a roar and a crash were heard away to our right. "That's the Krupp," explained Mme. Patti, and she went on to tell us that the head keeper always fired it in salute when she returned home. At Cray, which is but a mile or so from the castle, we found a dozen or so carriages of every description, from a dog-cart to a landau, in waiting, and a crowd of people, who cheered like a republican rally. I have not had much experience in regal receptions, but I am sure a queen could not have been more heartily welcomed than Patti was by those whom she affectionately calls "her people." There were arches of flowers across the road, more arches at the castle gates, flags flying, flowers filling the air, guns booming, and people shouting, until we began to appreciate the fact that Patti was la diva at her home as well as on the stage. As soon as Patti's carriage turned into the driveway the band struck up "Home, Sweet Home." The tears came into Patti's eyes then, and I remembered her farewell singing of that song in America.

Footmen in livery were stationed on the porch and assisted madame—as I find she is always called here—and her five guests to alight. There was a marked absence of ceremony, and everyone was made to feel at home at once. Wood fires burned in the great open fireplaces, and there were maids and men servants in every room, while the unpacking was going on. At dinner, over which Patti presided with wonderful grace and tact, there were fireworks and music by a band from Swansea, the festivities continuing until midnight. At 9 o'clock the next morning breakfast was served in the conservatory. Madame looked as fresh and happy as a child. No sooner was breakfast begun than the footman brought in the letter-bag, and gave it to madame, who unlocked it and distributed the mail. No excuse is needed for reading letters here—sensible fashion!—and so for a while everyone was busy. Everyone, too, would read out whatever he or she thought would be interesting to the others, so that it was more like a family party than anything else. The morning was chiefly devoted to correspondence and lounging around. After lunch the ladies changed their wrappers for warmer dresses, and the gentlemen donned coats, hats, and gloves, while the horses were being brought around for all to take a drive. Patti started off in her high T-cart, driving and handling the lines like a coachman. Wherever we made our appearance, no matter what they were doing, the people would stop their work and "drop a courtesy." As we drove along the old people would fleck to the doors and dip and drop, while even the babies playing in the road would scurry away, and then bob up and down with the solemnity of marionettes. The lands of Craig-y-Nos must be almost a domain, for in all our drive that day we did not go outside of the courtesying of the Patti tenantry.

The castle of Craig-y-Nos is perched high up on the cleft of a beautifully wooded mountain, and limpid lakes lie in the valley below. The castle is built after the common fashion of all Welsh castles, with low bastions, and what is called a curtain between, that is, a straight line of wall adjoining two semi-circular towers. The walls, which are of the grayish-green slate so plentiful here, are topped with battlements and covered here and there with ivy, while the windows are either arched or gabled. Spreading away in front are the gardens and lawns, all terraced because of the precipitous character of the ground, and so comes gradually down to the little valley along which we had just driven. Through this valley runs a tumbling river, with an unpronounceable name, spanned with pretty bridges and well stocked with fish. The valley opens into the great Swansea valley, while the whole country around is extremely mountainous and abounding in game.

The castle contains twenty-two rooms, none of them very large, but all warm and cozy, as they should be in this climate. Patti's own is hung in blue silk, all the upholstery being to match, while attached to it is a little dressing-room that is complete enough in its appointments for a princess. The drawing-room is charming, and he must be a dull person who could not find something to interest him there. It contains two grand pianos, albums, statuettes, pictures, and offerings from admirers, chief among the latter being an exquisite inlaid cabinet containing gold and silver coronets, with which almost every nation in the world has crowned the diva "queen of song." The morning room contains a picture of the late duke of Albany, with his autograph across the top, and a manly, modest letter begging Patti to accept his picture in return for one she had sent him. In the billiard-room is an immense orchestrion, which is set playing every night after dinner.

The conservatory leads out from the dining-room proper, and this in turn leads to the winter-garden, which I consider the great beauty of the estate. This is a garden of great size, entirely covered in with glass, and containing fountains, graveled walks, and rustic seats. Adjoining the winter garden are the hothouses—one in which nothing but grapes are cultivated, the second devoted to pineapples, cucumbers, and strawberries, and the third for flowers. A short distance from the third conservatory is the gas-house, where, under the superintendence of two men, gas for the whole establishment is manufactured.

Then come the stables, containing ten or twelve horses and carriages and carts of all descriptions, while adjoining each other are an immense flower-garden, kitchen-garden, orchard, a farmyard with cows and chickens of all sorts, and a "pheasantry," which, as its name indicates, is filled with pheasants. You will easily imagine that such an establishment as this is not run without considerable "help." There are, indeed, twenty servants, not including the gamekeepers and gasmen, distributed as follows: Two cooks, two chambermaids, two butlers, five gardeners, two coachmen, two footmen, two stablemen, madame's two maids, monsieur's valet, and the women of the laundry, whose number varies according to that of the guests.

Abundance and good cheer are on all sides, while Patti shows a new and more lovable side of disposition in her anxiety to please everyone alike, and to make all around her happy and at home.

An odd amusement craze is reported from Philadelphia, where it is said that "young ladies and gentlemen go out with table knives, baskets, and tin pails to dig out the weeds from lawns." They are called dandelion parties.

A gentleman in Dickson, Tenn., claims to have in his possession the hammer with which General Andrew Jackson's horses were shod while on his way to New Orleans.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1884, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 295, on the sixth day of August, 1884, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due;

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty ($180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

While in Lansing recently, Rev. C F. Van Auken purchased for the Congregational society of Charlevoix, 208 yards of carpet for the auditorium of the church, which is expected here in a few days. The portion of the floor occupied for socials is to be covered with heavy matting.

A. R. Upright and Isaac Stauffer will use the Shropshiredown sheep purchased of J. S. Philbrick for a beginning from which they expect to supply the county with thoroughbred stock. When crossed with the Leicestershire they give a good fleece and make excellent mutton. They are reasonably hardy, and are believed to be just the thing for this country.

"The Charlevoix county fair held at East Jordan, which is the county seat at present, was not a success. Farmers and others from the western part of the county failed to put in an attendance and the premiums offered were too small to invite exhibitors."—Detroit Journal. If it were generally known who furnishes items for the Journal from this county, the animus of the above would be better understood.

A young people's association was organized at the M. E. church Wednesday evening, a constitution and by-laws adopted, and officers elected. The objects of the society are religious and social improvement. The business and literary meetings of the association are to be held at the M. E. church every Tuesday evening, and the religious meetings at 6 o'clock every Sunday evening. The officers elected on Wednesday evening were: President Jos. J. Goss; vice president, Miss Alice Cochran; secretary, Wm. Stover; treasurer, Miss Sadie Miller.

Death of Mrs. Lewis Miller.

Last Saturday morning our citizens were shocked by the announcement that Mrs. Lewis Miller had been found dead, having apparently fallen down with paralysis of the heart or some kindred disease while about her usual morning work. She had been left but a short time before in her usual health and excellent spirits. She was found by her son Archie about ten o'clock, and though the body was yet warm, life was extinct.

The funeral services were held at the Congregational church on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, conducted by Rev. C. F. VanAuken. The discourse took the form of an answer to the question, "What is life?" using the text: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living," Matt. 22:32.

The attendance was quite large, nearly every seat in church being filled. Numerous floral tributes adorned the casket.

Mrs. Miller was born in Ireland, and was left an orphan when quite young. Having no exact record of her birth, the best information places her age at about 65 years at the time of her death. She was the first white "bride" in the Traverse region, and at the time of her death was the oldest white lady in the region who had resided here continuously since her first visit.

Mrs. Miller has borne six children,—five boys and a girl,—four of whom are still living: Henry, now in Butte City, Montana, Edward, in Traverse City, Archie and Geo. W. in Charlevoix.

Mrs. Miller had many friends wherever she has lived, who will sympathize with the husband and sons in their great bereavement.

The following account of Mrs. Miller's early life and marriage, taken from the Herald's history of the Traverse region, will be of interest in connection with the news of her death.

The first bride who came to the Grand Traverse country on her wedding tour, was Mrs. Lewis Miller, whose maiden name was Catherine Kiley. She was a native of Limerick, Ireland, and, like her husband, had been left an orphan. Somehow she had found her way to America, and then to the outpost of civilization at Mackinac. During Mr. Miller's frequent visits to that place, an attachment had grown up between them which finally resulted in marriage. The wedding took place in September, 1845.

Immediately after the marriage, they set sail in the little sloop Lady of the Lake, for their home in the wilderness. Mr. Miller had chartered the vessel for the occasion, and had loaded her with goods for the Indian trade, furniture, and supplies for housekeeping.

The Lady was but a bit of a craft, but she was a perfect duck on the water, and fleet before anything like a favorable wind. The Fates, however, if the Fates have anything to do with regulating wedding trips, decreed a long and tempestuous voyage. It was the season when the god of the winds, on the northern lakes, delights to ornament their surface with foam-capped waves, and tantalize the impatient mariner with variable breezes and the most disappointing kinds of weather.

The first day, they made the island of St. Helena, where they were compelled to seek the shelter of the harbor. There were a dozen sail or more there, waiting for a favorable change. Several times the Lady ventured out, but was as often compelled to put back. Finally, seizing the most favorable opportunity, she was able to reach Little Traverse. Here she was compelled to remain four days. The newly married couple went on shore, and found comfortable quarters in an Indian House. The woman of the house had been brought up in a white family at Mackinac, and being able to understand the wants of her guests, was in a degree successful in her kind endeavors to make their stay pleasant.

Leaving Little Traverse, the vessel reached the mouth of Grand Traverse bay, when she was again driven back. At the second attempt, she was obliged to heave to, in the mouth of the bay, the captain remaining all night at the helm. As Miller came on deck in the morning, dull, leaden clouds obscured the sky, and the air was filled with snow flakes. He proposed to take the captain's place at the helm, while the latter should turn in for a little rest. The captain gladly consented. Once installed in authority, Miller made sail, and let the captain sleep till the Lady was safely moored in the harbor at Old Mission.

A young bride, coming for the first time to the home of her husband, naturally looks with a great deal of interest at the surroundings. Sometimes there is disappointment. There was probably no serious disappointment in this case, but it is a part of the traditional family history, that as Mrs. Miller came on deck, that gloomy September morning, and looked anxiously out upon the scene, beautiful in its gloominess, and saw only the forest-skirted shore and the smoke curling upward from the log-houses of the whites and a few Indian wigwams, the first question she asked her husband was, "Where is the town?"

Mr. Miller's oldest son, Henry L., was the first white child born in the Grand Traverse country.

Historical Society.

The first meeting of this society, as provided for by the constitution, was held at the parlors of Major and Mrs. E. H. Green, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 6th. The attendance was good and much interest manifested. The constitution and by-laws as revised by the committee who were appointed at the last meeting of last year were adopted. The regular night of meeting was by vote of the society changed from Tuesday to Friday evening in each week. The next regular meeting of the society will be held on Friday evening, Oct. 16th, at the parlors of the Bridge Street House. All are requested to be present, as the annual election of officers occurs on that night, for the ensuing year. F. A. EMRY, Sec'y.

Card of Thanks.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the Kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of Indigestion are present, flatulency, dizziness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

JESSIE'S AWAKENING.

BY JENNIE S. JUDSON.

"Rather uncouth, is he not?" asked Whitney DeVane of his cousin Jessie Barnes.

"I had never thought of him as such," answered Jessie; but when a moment later she compared Frank Graves, the subject of their remarks, with this elegant, city-bred cousin, she thought the description might perhaps apply.

Frank lived on the adjoining farm, and Jessie had known him from early childhood.

He had been a constant visitor at her home until since the arrival of the city cousin, when his visits gradually grew less, and now had almost ceased.

Whitney DeVane had neither seen nor visited his country relatives before this summer, but being worn out, as he said, with city life, he had come to spend his vacation with them.

He stated that he was corresponding clerk in a large bank, and that the close, confining labor to which he had been subjected had worn upon his health.

He professed to be delighted with his surroundings and the country air and fare, and evinced by the most flattering manner that his cousin Jessie had made a deep impression on his heart. Jessie had been well educated, and was as pretty and sprightly a girl as the county afforded.

She was quite dazzled by the attention and flattery bestowed by her elegant cousin, and had grown almost discontented with her country life and friends.

Before her cousin's arrival Frank Graves had been her ideal of manly strength, and it spoke much for the change that had been wrought in her that she would have mentally agreed to her cousin's comment that he was "uncouth."

"Thanks, Jessie," Frank had said the night previous, as he bade her good-night at an evening party. "I shall call on you, perhaps, after your cousin's visit has terminated, unless you should have decided to go with him; but not before."

Jessie felt a little sting at this careless reply, and the color rose swiftly to her face at the intimation it contained.

Her cousin leaned gracefully against a tree awaiting her, during this conversation. "Could he have heard Frank's remark?" she asked herself. His manner was unusually tender as they walked home through the moonlight.

"Thank heaven! I've managed to get rid of that boor," the courtly Mr. De Vane said to himself as he entered his room that night; "he promised to be the greatest obstacle to my plans."

Jessie had gone to the woods one day, a short time afterward, to gather ferns to adorn the parlor.

"Whitney admires ferns so much, I shall gratify his tastes," she thought as she plucked the long cool fronds, when a conversation carried on in the road near by, broke upon her musing.

A woman and child stood talking to a man on horseback.

"He has never paid me one cent for his washing this four weeks, Mr. Frank, and puts me off again to-day. Aside from my labor, I have been at the expense of wood, soap, and starch for him, an expense I can ill afford to bear."

"Contemptible creature!" muttered Frank.

"Besides, he has poisoned Annie's mind with his flattery, with the papers he has brought her to read, and with his talk of city life. Do you think it would do any good to speak to Miss Jessie about him? She is always kind."

"I'm afraid not, Mrs. Bennett," replied the man, with a short, unmirthful laugh; "Jessie is more infatuated than Annie, and, I judge, proposes for herself a life of misery by marrying him."

Can't you talk with her, sir? It seems a dreadful pity."

"Talk with her!" bitterly. "I have no influence. I am only a clodhopper compared with her city cousin."

And then their voices were borne away, but what had been revealed to Jessie was enough, for she felt stunned and humiliated.

She hurried home and was glad to hear her father say, "Well, Jessie, I have decided to go to Stanton to-morrow, to make the purchases we have so long talked of, and will take you instead of mother, as she is not feeling well."

Stanton was seventy miles away, and was the place in which Mr. De Vane had stated that he resided.

"We'll, call on Whitney's employers and give them an account of his conduct," he added, laughingly. "Get any letter or messages you may have to send ready to-night, Whitney, as we shall start on the ten o'clock train from the village to-morrow."

Whitney gave a startled glance at this intelligence, but soon assumed his usual self-possessed manner.

"Curse the luck!" he muttered, on reaching his room; "I would have married the girl and got some property in that way, little greenhorn that she is; but if the old duffer goes to Stanton and finds out I've never seen the place, that'll end that matter. So I'll be forced to get at the strong box, where I know he keeps a good pile. The old lady is feeble, and can be easily managed. Frank Graves and his father are away threshing, so there'll be no fear from that quarter. I'll go over to Lehigh to-morrow for my old pal, Charles Douglas, tell the old lady I'll be gone for two or three days, but come back late in the afternoon, and finish up the job."

He left early in the morning, telling Jessie that the sunshine of the house would depart with her presence, and that he did not expect to "live," but merely to "drag out a blank existence" until he saw her again.

A furtive gleam of distrust in the eyes which hitherto had only cast on him admiring glances, served to further confirm his purpose of carrying out his plans that day.

At nine o'clock a carriage drove to the door, a curly head was thrust from the window, then a dainty little foot was seen on the step, and soon a fairy form was rushing up the walk.

"Why, Dollie," cried Jessie, ecstatically, as she hastened on to the porch, "is it really you come at last, and when I least expected you? How glad I am!"

Then ensued a fervent embrace and the interchange of many kisses.

"Yes," said Dollie, breathlessly, "I was in Stanton visiting a cousin, and I would not go back home without coming to see you."

This welcome arrival quite changed Jessie's plans, and it was hastily decided that Mrs. Barnes should accompany her husband, and the two girls stay at home.

They were enchanted with the prospect of a long, happy day to themselves, in which they would talk over old school-days, girlish secrets, new dresses, and many other charming things.

The day passed all too rapidly, and late in the afternoon they betook themselves into the parlor to play duets and sing until the early twilight fell, when supper-getting was in order.

"Don't you feel afraid to be alone, Jessie?" asked Dollie, once.

"Oh, no, mamma and papa will come back on the eleven o'clock train, and we can put a lamp in the port-hole window if we feel alarmed, and Frank Graves will come over. We made that arrangement with each other two years ago, but it never has been necessary to carry it into effect."

"I always carry a little pistol when I travel, and it is in my trunk now; so we can defend ourselves, since you are such an expert in target practice," said Dollie.

A half-hour later a pair of sinister eyes peered at the young girls through the window-blinds, as they still sat in the parlor.

"Jessie and another girl!" was the startled mental comment of the intruder. "Bah, the game is not so easy as I thought. Cursed creatures, what are they doing here? I'll slip out to the barn and tell Charlie how the land lies."

"Jessie, I hear footsteps," said Dollie, in a low tone; "let us go quickly and lock all the house. It may be some tramp who knows we are alone."

The girls acted hastily upon this suggestion, and the front and back doors were closed and barred simultaneously as the two men issued from the barn.

A torrent of muttered curses greeted the sound of the closing doors.

"They suspect something," whispered Douglas. "Are you sure there are but two of them? I heard some one answer from up stairs a while ago when one of them called."

"Oh! well, suppose there are three. I know there are no firearms in the house. Come on; we can manage them."

Twilight had fallen, but the movements of one of the stealthily approaching figures, as Jessie watched it from the side-lights of the back door, were strangely familiar, and her heart sank within her.

Some intuition warned her of what was about to happen. "Dollie, get your pistol, quick," she said, "and I'll get mine. We haven't a moment to lose. I'm sure the house will be attacked."

"I'm thankful I never mentioned to Whitney that I had a pistol," she thought.

No lamps were lighted, and the girls kept their ears on the alert to catch any sound.

"They are on the porch," whispered Dollie, "fortunately the house is not large and can be more easily guarded."

The windows were the first point of attack.

The parlor shutters were turned and a hand thrust through. The window would next have been broken, when suddenly a pistol-shot rang on the air. Dollie had aimed at the casement opposite the hand and hit it squarely.

The enemy was evidently taken by complete surprise by this movement, and for a long time all was still.

Jessie ran swiftly up the steps in this interval and set the signal light in the port-hole window.

"Watch on that side and I will watch on this," was Dollie's command when she returned, "and we may baffle them yet."

The crash of breaking glass at the dining-room window, warned Jessie that that point was being attacked, and she hastily fired.

A terrible oath showed that some mischief had been wrought by the shot, and then all was still.

"There are three of them," whispered Douglas, "one is up stairs guarding that point, and there is a man among 'em; let's give it up, Jack; so much firing 'll bring people."

"Coward!" hissed the other, "I tell you I'll have some money or die."

Meantime, the young girls, sustained by the courage of desperation, watched every loophole. A half-hour of tense expectation elapsed.

"Ah, Jessie, why does not your friend come?" asked Dollie, in an agonized whisper, "I can't hold out much longer."

"They may have climbed the veranda, and turned a window-catch up stairs without our hearing. I'll slip up and see."

"Oh! Jessie, don't, for heaven's sake. I beg you not to go," said Dollie.

But it was too late. Jessie was already speeding noiselessly up the steps.

A struggling ray of light from the signal lamp in the hall window revealed a man in the room opposite rifling the drawers. His back was toward her, but his every gesture was familiar. Paralyzed for a moment by terror she could not moved. Then she flew forward to lock the burglar in; but at the sound he turned and fired, and she fell unconscious in the hall.

"I didn't mean to hurt the little fool," he muttered, "but it couldn't be helped."

"Hist! some one is coming from the outside. I'll get out of this while I can. Little devils, they've delayed and thwarted me after all."

The sound of horses' feet rapidly approaching caused him to hasten; but he was too late. Two men on foot were already in the yard, and after a terrible scuffle he was taken by them, pinioned and led away.

"Open to friends," cried Frank Graves' deep voice as he knocked at the front door.

Dollie, whose terror was almost overpowering from hearing the firing above and the noise in the yard below, dragged herself forward and unbolted the door, then fell fainting at her rescuer's feet.

She was lifted by strong arms, and when a light was obtained was placed upon the sofa.

Frank's surprise was great at seeing a stranger's face upon the pillow, and he rushed to the foot of the steps and called out, "Jessie, where are you?"

No response came, and he ran swiftly up the steps to find the one he sought lying in marble beauty on the floor, while a red stream trickled to his feet.

"He has killed her!" he cried, mad with despair, and lifting her tenderly bore her to the light where he looked in wild haste for her wound.

The pretty arm was all lacerated and torn, but no other hurt could be discovered.

With a great sigh of relief he placed her on the bed, and sent one of the men for a physician.

In the meantime poor, wilted little Dollie returned to consciousness, crying out, "Where is Jessie?" She was tenderly soothed, and was soon able to give an account of the terrible seige they had sustained.

No words would depict the regret and amazement of Mr. and Mrs. Barnes, when they had returned, at what had occurred, nor express their deep gratitude to Frank Graves and those he had brought to the rescue.

"Father and I came home very late," Frank said, "or we would have relieved the poor girls at least a half hour earlier."

"And to think," cried Mrs. Barnes in horror, "that the villain who attacked them, and shot our child, was the man we have treated as a friend and relative for weeks. We learned a part of his perfidy in Stanton to-day, but did not dream the whole."

"If you had been here alone, he would have made way with you, I have no doubt," said her husband, with a shudder.

"Brave girls!" cried Frank enthusiastically, "their pluck and perseverance is worthy of a medal. I can never be thankful enough that I gave Jessie that little pistol, and taught her to shoot."

Dollie soon recovered from her fright, and in a day or two was as bright and sunshiny as ever. But though Jessie's wound was slight and grew rapidly better, she seemed to droop as the days went on.

Frank called every morning, but after a brief inquiry as to her health, devoted himself exclusively to Dollie.

They sang duets together, while Jessie lay listening; they took horseback rides where, from the window, she could see them start; they brought her flowers they had plucked together.

"They were very kind, of course," poor Jessie said to herself, petulantly, "but why should they do everything together?"

Frank had never seemed so manly to her, nor so handsome. His voice had never been so rich and full, nor his manner so filled with strength and tenderness as when she saw him with Dollie.

She felt humiliated at what she imagined his opinion of her to be. "He holds my weakness in contempt, I know," she often thought, "and can never really respect me again," which thought bore for her far more bitterness than the remembrance of her rude awakening.

One day, however, a sudden change was wrought in her, both mentally and physically. It was brought about through a short conversation.

"To think," said Dollie, indignantly, one morning, "that that rascal should have pretended to be corresponding clerk in the bank at Stanton; why, Jessie," with a blush and a drop of the pretty head, "I am engaged to the corresponding clerk in the bank at Stanton myself, and I assure you he is very nice, indeed."

"Engaged!" cried Jessie, rising upon her elbow, while a sudden flush spread upon her cheek; "I thought you were engaged to Frank Graves."

"Oh! no;" with a soft little laugh, "he is in love with—some one else."

Jessie lay down again with quickened breath.

"You know who it is, Jessie. Now don't you think, dear, you made a great mistake in preferring Whitney De Vane to one so noble and manly as Frank Graves?"

"Preferred him!" cried Jessie. "In my heart I never preferred him. I was only foolish and silly, and allowed myself to be dazzled by fine dress, a good appearance, and a plausible tongue. Frank is worth ten thousand such, but he despises me, I know he does, whereupon she burst into a flood of tears.

"Indeed, darling, he does not," cried Frank, coming forward at this juncture and taking her in his arms; "look at me once and see."

"Forgive me for eavesdropping," he begged, a moment later, when Jessie's tears had been kissed away. "Miss Dollie and I have been carrying out a preconcerted plan for days, and I could not resist being present to hear what you had to say in answer to her remarks this morning."

Jessie was too happy not to forgive anything to her handsome lover, and all through the future years she spent with him felt a keen sense of gratitude that she had met her "awakening" at the time and in the way she had, terrible though it had been.

Whitney De Vane, alias Jack Parker, who had once before been convicted, was sent again to the penitentiary, and Jessie never saw him afterward.

The other burglar could not be found.

In a Mexican Restaurant.

From the Military Plaza in San Antonio a half dozen narrow streets branch off. Down the narrowest of these, which seems but a passage-way between the rows of somber houses that line either side—for this is "greaser town"—is a restaurant. The presiding genius of the place is a fat and handsome Mexican, whose unctuous complexion glistens in the glow of the charcoal fire that blazes softly in a cavernous, horizontal slit in the gigantic chimney. It is like no other cooking arrangement that ever was seen, and the method of the chef "is beyond compare." Dozens of shiny saucepans and skillets, set upon the coals, crowd the opening very much like invalided teeth in some great ogre's mouth, and in each of the little skillets and saucepans is the portion for one person.

The treasures of earth could not induce that oily cook to consolidate his dishes, and more especially to fry more than one egg at a time in his egg-pan; his laws are fixed and unalterable, and he regards the protests of his guests against cold eggs served in congealed oil with Mexican indifference.

Thirteen plates for the thirteen waiting customers stand ready to his hand, and the long-handled frying-pan makes thirteen separate journeys with thirteen separate eggs, the while that two assistants, a degree dirtier, oilier, and less fat, chop onions and grate cheese, which are spread finally over the chilled eggs and cold oil and placed before the hungry people, whom a day's anticipatory fast has prepared to accept anything with gratitude. In lieu of a fork a very flat pancake, called a "tortilla," is doled out to each one. Years of practice are required for the successful manipulation of this most useful article, which, when you have done with as a scoop and have diligently and successfully chased the particles of food in the sea of oil that fills your plate, you are expected to eat as a final course—a most cleanly and labor-saving arrangement.—John McIntyre, in Home Journal.

Contagion by Mail.

The possibility of the communication of contagious diseases by mail has more than once been proven, but a physician of Watertown, N. Y., reports a case which should be underscored. A little girl dying with scarlet fever wished to send a dying kiss to a little friend. She pressed her lips to a letter which her mother was writing to a relative, and a circle was drawn around the spot that was kissed. The letter passed through the mails, and the little friend received the message of love by kissing the circumscribed spot on the letter. What could be more natural and affectionate? Shortly afterward the child was attacked by the scarlet fever and died, and as it was the only case in the place the physician believes that the contagion was communicated by the letter. Cases have been reported of the transmission of contagious diseases in books that were read by sick persons. No time nor distance serves to destroy the germs of contagion, and there is some reason to believe that paper is quite as likely to absorb them as clothing and other porous materials. One who has seen the infinitesimal germs of disease multiplying under a microscope can readily understand how a single germ, though only one twenty-thousandth of an inch in length, communicated by a letter or a paper or a book, may carry disease or death in its train. People receiving letters from places known to be infected with small-pox or scarlet fever or diphtheria would do well to take their own precautions against contagion. Fumigation with sulphur is generally effective to kill the germs. Better, perhaps, is exposure to steam-heat. Heat of the degree of boiling water is death to all microbe life.—Springfield Union.

Plain Coon Hunting.

"Raccoon" may do with people who never saw one of these animals, but those who hunt them are not going to use the word. What would you think of a man who would invite you to go a "raccoon hunting" with him? You would know at once he was a dude. But when you see an old-time darky, with one gallus on, a horn worn smooth with long use, a sharp ax sticking out at his shirt-collar behind, a business-looking half-hound that puts on no airs, a bob-tailed, yaller-cur, considerably scarred up, and a half-grown pup that he carries along "to see if he won't larn some sense," you may know that he means business. He is going a "coon hunting."—Spartanburg (S. C.) Spartan.

MONTREAL'S MOB.

The Canadian City the Scene of a Fearful Anti-Vaccination Riot.

A Howling Mob Wrecks Health Offices and Public Buildings—Residences Fired.

[Montreal special.]

Montreal was the scene of a violent riot this evening as the result of the movement for compulsory vaccination. The French-Canadians have shown strong opposition to compulsory vaccination since the start, and trouble has been feared. The English were determined, however, that no more delay would be allowed, and decided at once to carry compulsory measures into force. A branch office was started in the East End, and orders were given to-day to begin the thorough vaccination of all persons in the French-Canadian quarter. At an early hour this morning the office was opened. A crowd at once began to assemble, and the building was soon surrounded. Several French-Canadian citizens addressed the gathering, which was becoming more and more riotous, and advised pacific measures. A squad of police was called out, and toward afternoon the mob dispersed, threatening, however, to return in the evening. They kept their word.

At seven o'clock to-night the building was surrounded by a noisy, threatening crowd of French-Canadians, who began operations by storming the Health Office, smashing all the windows, and creating a general havoc.

The mob next went to the residence of Dr. Laberge, of the Medical Health Office, stoned it, and shouted defiance. On marched the mob, gathering in numbers as it went, its objective point being the City Hall.

The authorities had by this time got wind of the mob's intentions, and the fire-bells sounded a general alarm, calling the whole police force from the various stations to the Central Station at the City Hall. The mob arrived, however, before the police had mustered, and took possession of the streets around the hall. Showers of stones were rained upon the building, and many windows were shattered. The police were still in the stations, and, as usual, a delay occurred before they were ordered out. When they first reached the street they had only their small wooden batons, which were utterly useless on the mob, which continued its work of destruction, moving completely around the building.

An order was given to arm the force with muskets, but the men, strange to say, were kept standing in the station while the mob continued its work outside. Several of the policemen and the Mayor's brother armed themselves with revolvers and blazed away from the door of the station, silencing the mob on that side. On the other side, however, the work was kept up, and the health officer got a severe handling. A large number of people were here undergoing vaccination, and had to fly from the mob.

In the midst of the din a cry was raised, "To the newspaper office!" and in a few minutes the crowd, now numbering several thousand, had formed into line and were on the way. The mob marched down the principal streets, singing and shouting, and made for the office of the Morning Herald, a large five-story building on Victoria Square. Their number was considerably increased on their way, and they surrounded the newspaper office several thousand strong. The building, which occupies a prominent position, was brilliantly lighted up, and formed a good mark for the rioters. The windows were soon smashed, and the rioters took full vengeance upon the paper, which has been the most active and plain-spoken about the French-Canadians.

For over half an hour the mob had it all their own way, the police remaining inactive in the station while the work of destruction was going on. While engaged at the newspaper office the rioters gave expression to various threats, and said they would show the English whether it was they or the French who would rule the city. The English were roundly abused, and a number of violent scenes occurred. When the police did arrive on the scene the mob again formed and marched back through the streets to the East End, where they held a mass meeting, and after several inflammatory speeches proceeded to the homes of several of the doctors and stoned them.

The rioters before dispersing went down to one of the objectionable vaccinator's houses and fired it. The fire brigade were hastily summoned, and extinguished the fire before any damage was done. When the riot was at its height the cries were frequently raised, "Burn the city!" and "Down with the English!"

That such a thing as the small-pox should serve to awaken race hostility is indeed remarkable; but the fact is that it has been the cause of more bitterness than even the most serious subject of quarrel. To state the case very simply, the French in Montreal have been harboring and breeding the small-pox with apparent indifference to the loss of life it was causing, and complete indifference to its effects upon the English population. The English have suffered to a small extent from the ravages of the disease—poor Sir Francis Hincks fell a victim to it through infection carried to his house by a servant—but their business losses as the result of the prevalence of the epidemic have been most serious. The French would not vaccinate, were reluctant to lend themselves to any sanitary measures, but preferred to fight the disease, if at all, by pious observances and ceremonies.

A gentleman on the Citizens' Committee to-day proclaimed that there were at least 4,000 cases of small-pox in the city. The opening of the Theater Royal has been indefinitely postponed on account of the epidemic. The health officials are encountering the most determined opposition in their work of placarding, especially in the East End of the city, and several arrests have been made.

SENATOR PALMER.

His Response at the Banquet of the Army of the Cumberland.

The Soldier as a Schoolmaster—Michigan's Just Tribute to General Grant.

Below we give in full the remarks of Senator Palmer at the Army of the Cumberland banquet in Grand Rapids:

MR. CHAIRMAN: My toast is a peculiar one. The committee having the banquet in charge it seems had selected sentiments to be responded to by each of the distinguished speakers, on the ground probably that they knew whereof they should speak, and they had run out of material when they got down to me. All of you gentlemen favored by a mark to shoot at, in the way of a toast proposed, had much to do with the great struggle, the outcome of which has resulted so happily for both sides.

Why the committee did not give me Cincinnatus, I do not know, unless it was because I was more given to turning other people's swords into pruning hooks rather than my plow-share into a sword. However, they told me to take what was left, or in other words to "go as I pleased." Graeco-Roman, catch-as-catch-can, or collar and elbow. So I took "The soldier as a school-master." Some of you may not recognize its appropriateness, although you must confess that you have performed one part of the role of the jolly old pedagogue—you had a habit of whipping the boys.

We have been taught by the books that war was destructive, that schoolmasters were the creatures and promoters of peace. We have been told that the pen was mightier than the sword, a saying which implies that they are two rival and not congenial forces. The cloister and the camp have been regarded as typifying the antipodes of human life, and yet the pupil of Socrates—the man who perpetuated and developed the philosophy of his master, the man who gave his whole life to metaphysical study and dreamy meditation—said that the men who fought at Marathon and Salamis were the schoolmasters of all Greece. What he meant is a matter of inference, but we may educe from his surroundings that he wished to impress upon his people that the devotion of the 10,000 who met and defeated eleven times their number at Marathon was an example more ennobling and more lasting than all the speculations of the academy; than all the eloquence of the Agora. He meant more; he undoubtedly meant that their example showed that the refinement and culture of Athens had not enervated her sons—that while other Grecian states had consented to become tributary to the Persian King, the men who won these victories knew what independence and nationality meant and proposed to maintain them—that the true soldier, the man who fights for a principle, knowing what he fights for and why he fights for it, is the man who not only has been trained in the gymnasium but has listened in the schools. He must also have referred to that spectacle of other leaders generously giving away their right of command that Miltxades might lead them on that fateful day.

What Athens achieved after that fight is a matter of history. How Phidias designed—how Praxiteles chiseled—how Parrhasius painted—how one man ruled by the force of his genius, has given to this period a distinctive appellation as the "Age of Pericles."

The men whom Plato called the schoolmasters of all Greece have become more—they have become the schoolmasters of Christendom. The blood-shed there has flowed down in a broad stream for nearly twenty-four hundred years; has irrigated all lands where education has dug channels, and baptized every hero who has fought for his native land, from Brutus down to the volunteer who left the little schoolhouse at his country's call to fight in the war of the great rebellion.

It is possible, in the short time which propriety will permit me to take, to cite but few instances. There was Winkelried, who "made way for liberty" by grasping nine spear points to his heart at Anspach; Sydney, who passed the cup of cold water to the wounded soldier, saying "Thy need is greater than mine;" Hofer shot to death at Mantua; Hampden who gave his life for liberty at Chalgrove; Ney holding single-handed the Russian army at bay at the gates of Wilna, by the terror of his name and afterward picking up the babe whom its mother had thrown away in her despair, and carrying it in his arms to a place of safety; Nathan Hale who lamented that he had but one life to give to his country; Washington at Valley Forge; Mad Anthony Wayne at Stony Point—all these are lessons given by the heroes of the past which educate not only for war but for the duties of peace.

They illustrate self-sacrifice, self-denial, patriotism, piety, daring, loyalty, fidelity, long suffering, the qualities which more than others dignify humanity.

It was these or like instances of noble qualities which prepared our nation for the sublimest exhibition of all these traits, in the war of the great rebellion. The majority of men are not educated by books, they are educated by deeds. Not by mental processes alone, but by the ideals which the heroes of all time have created. The saying that the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church is not more true than that the blood of patriots is the cement of the state. To whom is this country not dearer now than it was before 300,000 men had given their lives for its redemption? This appeals to old and young alike—but the great lessons which have been taught in the last twenty-four years, and which will be taught as long as men shall cite Marathon and Salamis, will be that, although armies are powerful, ideas are still more so, and that armies are glorious in proportion to the beneficence of the ideas which they attempt to enforce.

It will be told in the future as it has been in the past that not until the bring on the flag was a single preparation made for the gigantic struggle which followed, and that then men sprang from every field and every factory to avenge the insult; that wives sent their husbands, mothers their sons, sisters their brothers, maidens their lovers, and all for the flag. But what the child will ask, for the flag? Why should so many men die because they fired on the flag? Then he will be told that the flag means something more than the combination of beautiful hues which delights his youthful eyes. It means the dignity of labor, equal rights, good government, progress for him and his fellows, security of person and property. It means that wherever he may go the flag will cover him as with a shield. He will be told that the flag to be powerful for all these objects must be jealously guarded; that no insult must even be tolerated without reparation being demanded and enforced. He will be told that this was the reason that two millions of men dared wounds, suffering, sickness, and death; that for this men and boys charged up the glacis at Vicksburg "mid iron rain and leaden hail;" for this men laid down their lives by thousands at Antietam and Gettysburg; for this men went to their death in the crater at Petersburg; for this black men vindicated their rights to be called men at Wagner and Fort Pindson; for this Andrews and his companions died an ignominious death at Atlanta; for this thirty thousand men accepted death by famine and disease at Andersonville! What school-masters so efficient as these?

As men in the far East have worshipped the Sun, not for itself but as a representative of the power, the law, the beneficence of which it was an emblem, so will the child of the future be taught as we of to-day have been taught what the flag represents and why it should be venerated. Every battle, every ambush, every soldier's grave, whether in the Government cemeteries or hung with garlands at home on Decoration Day, is an object lesson never to be forgotten. Every crippled soldier is a monitor; every poetic phrase, like "The March from the Mountain to the Sea," kindles the imagination and spurs the boy to know all about that dramatic and fateful procession. The battle lyric, "Sheridan's Ride," which immortalizes the horse and adds laurels to the rider, if there were room for them, when it says:

"With foam and with dust the black charger was gray,
But the flash of his eye and his red nostrils' play
Seemed to the whole great army to say,
I have brought you Sheridan all the way
From Winchester down, to save the day," makes the child wonder if the Centaurs of old did not have their origin in scenes like this enacted in the Shenandoah Valley on that morning. Every phrase like Logan's at Shiloh, as he rode a fair mark up and down the lines, "Death, boys, but dishonor never," thrills the boy like the blast of a trumpet. The band played that heroic tune, "Marching Through Georgia," quickens his pulse. The widow in mourning for husband or sons tells him that men have died and women must weep, and all for that which we call country.

But this is not all, Mr. Chairman, that the soldier of the great rebellion has taught the youth of our land—it was feared by the timid of our people that they who had avenged the insult to the flag had become demoralized by the vices of the camp; that their disbanding menaced the well being of the state. How groundless were those fears! They came back to us, and we never should have known of their coming but for the joys at seeing them and the blessings of increased prosperity which they brought us. They came like the summer rains on our great lakes, which add to their volume but do not detract from their purity. They taught us that men who fought for the flag knew what the flag represented, "respect for law and subordination to authority."

It is said that when Cromwell's Ironsides were disbanded on the return of Charles II. they melted away among the body of the people, only to be identified thereafter by the excellence of their work, so that it became a proverb, when any labor in any avocation was done in a superior manner, that "this must have been done by one of Cromwell's men." I think this is true of the soldiers of the rebellion. We find them everywhere, in humble vocations as well as positions of honor and trust, and, whether it is because they are dignified by their service or because only the best among us served, the average of their conduct and their achievements has been higher than that of the same number of civilians. It has been said that arms ennoble a man. It is certainly true that arms borne in vindication of a principle attract the noblest or ennoble those whom they attract.

Unhappy is the time when heroes are developed, but thrice unhappy the country which cannot supply them when the times demand. Happy the country which, like ours, found in her peril heroes "thick as the leaves of the forest when the summer is green."

It is impossible for history herself to perpetuate the lessons of devotion, loyalty, and self-sacrifice in every case, but individually and collectively we have enough to educate the future.

Among them all, one has just been called hence who, possibly more than any other, embodied the qualities which should characterize the American soldier and civilian and American youth. Great as he is considered to-day, I believe the future will assign him a higher place.

There have been as great conquerors: There have been as great statesmen; there have been as great civilians, but I know of no character in history who combines the three in so great a degree of excellence. Perhaps in no other country was such a character possible. Never self-seeking, he was dragged from obscurity by the needs of his country. With more than the tenacity of Wellington he wrested victory from the jaws of defeat. "His temper, iron-like, grew by blows." When strategy could avail he showed an ability equal to any of the great captains of the past. He never challenged destiny, and therefore met no Moscow, no Leipsic, and no Waterloo.

Without malice and devoid of hate he nevertheless was implacable as fate in the prosecution of his duty. Triumphant as a conqueror, he treated the vanquished not as a foe but as a friend.

As a statesman, when he might have distinguished his administration by fanning an international wrong into a war which would have enabled him to grasp a territory one-half as large as his country, he said "let us have peace," and brought about an international court for the settlement of differences.

Beset by the difficulties be n of a transition state between war and peace, with the people demoralized by a depreciated currency and all the evils which a gigantic war entails upon commercial interests, surrounded by conspirators desiring to use him for their own advantage, his only fault was a virtue carried to excess, fidelity to his friends, real or supposed

In accord with the best sentiment of the country, in sympathy with the wants, the hopes, the fears, and the distress of the people, he nevertheless interposed amid the adverse clamor of the multitude the iron hand of his veto to prevent improper legislation.

Descending—or ascending—from his high office to become the first citizen of the world, with honors heaped upon him in such profusion that he would have been smothered in flowers had he been an ordinary man, he retained his Spartan simplicity, with all the Christian graces of St. Francis de Assizi.

And yet his mission as a schoolmaster of the American people would have been incomplete if he had ended his career in the twilight of its brilliant day, with no clouds save those which would have enhanced the effect of the picture.

He was destined to tread the wine press alone. Stripped of his fortune, his family impoverished, his friends sacrificed, his confidence betrayed, his great name trampled in the mire of a great city—all these, leagued with deep disease, could not abase the simple heroism of his soul. A Spartan in his stoicism, a Roman in his observance of law, a Christian in his charity and in his faith, it was given him to illustrate as a whole those virtues which many men have possessed in part, and to throw out in bold relief those qualities which should distinguish the ideal American citizen.

It will require another age, Mr. Chairman, to analyze and criticise justly General Grant's character, and when that time comes I hope he will be portrayed with all his faults, that men may feel a closer sympathy with him on the ground of the possession of common weaknesses. Whatever of frailty scrutiny may detect, whatever perversion of acts cynicism may assert, whatever ulterior motives malignity may impute, I feel assured that he will stand in history

Like some tall crag that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Mr. Chairman, it was well worth all the treasure that the war swallowed up, that it should have developed such a character. The heroes and demigods of antiquity were made out of much less and coarser material. No cruel act, no ungenerous word, has ever been attributed to him.

This simple man will be for centuries, I believe, the head schoolmaster of the American people; and if the men of Marathon and Salamis were the schoolmasters of all Greece I assert confidently that our soldiers of the war of the great rebellion are the schoolmasters for all time.

—Senator Palmer, of Detroit, has been prowling about the old homestead at Ashford, Ct., where he was born, and has shipped thence a large number of old household relics, with which he will fill a log cabin which he has built on his grounds at home. The astonished rural expressman told the sender that "the hull lot ain't worth the express cost, stranger." Small trees of every available kind on the old place are to be taken up and transplanted about the log cabin, also huckleberry and blackberry bushes, and, to complete the minature New England, the millionaire Senator even thinks of shipping a carload of genuine New England rocks from the old farm to the smooth and stoneless West.

INVALIDS' HOTEL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE

No. 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Not a Hospital, but a pleasant Remedial Home, organized with

A FULL STAFF OF EIGHTEEN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS,

And exclusively devoted to the treatment of all Chronic Diseases.

This imposing Establishment was designed and erected to accommodate the large number of invalids who visit Buffalo from every State and Territory, as well as from many foreign lands, that they may avail themselves of the professional services of the Staff of skilled specialists in medicine and surgery that compose the Faculty of this widely-celebrated institution.

NOT ALWAYS NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.

By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases just as successfully without as with a personal consultation. While we are always glad to see our patients, and become acquainted with them, show them our institutions, and familiarize them with our system of treatment, yet we have not seen one person in five hundred whom we have cured. The perfect accuracy with which scientists are enabled to deduce the most minute particulars in their several departments, appears almost miraculous, if we view it in the light of the early ages. Take, for example, the electro-magnetic telegraph, the greatest invention of the age. Is it not a marvelous degree of accuracy which enables an operator to exactly locate a fracture in a submarine cable nearly three thousand miles long? Our venerable "clerk of the weather" has become so thoroughly familiar with the most wayward elements of nature that he can accurately predict their movements. He can sit in Washington and foretell what the weather will be in Florida or New York as well as if several hundred miles did not intervene between him and the places named. And so in all departments of modern science, what is required is the knowledge of certain signs. From these scientists deduce accurate conclusions regardless of distance. So, also, in medical science, diseases have certain unmistakable signs, or symptoms, and by reason of this fact, we have been enabled to originate and perfect a system of determining, with the greatest accuracy, the nature of chronic diseases, without seeing and personally examining our patients. In recognizing diseases without a personal examination of the patient, we claim to possess no miraculous powers. We obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the practical application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. And it is to the accuracy with which this system has endowed us that we owe our almost world-wide reputation of skillfully treating lingering or chronic affections. This system of practice, and the marvelous success which has been attained through it, demonstrate the fact that diseases display certain phenomena, which, being subjected to scientific analysis, furnish abundant and unmistakable data, to guide the judgment of the skillful practitioner aright in determining the nature of diseased conditions. The most ample resources for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of every invalid, however distant he or she may reside from the physicians making the treatment of such affections a specialty. Full particulars of our original, scientific system of examining and treating patients at a distance are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," By R. V. Pierce, M. D. 1000 pages and over 300 colored and other illustrations. Sent, post-paid, for $1.50. Or write and describe your symptoms, inclosing ten cents in stamps, and a complete treatise, on your particular disease, will be sent you, with our terms for treatment and all particulars.

SIGNS OF DISEASE.

MARVELOUS SUCCESS.

OUR FIELD OF SUCCESS.

NASAL, THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES.

Recognizing the fact that no great institution dedicated exclusively to the treatment of chronic diseases, would meet the needs of the afflicted of our land, without the most perfect, complete and extensive provision for the most improved treatment of diseases of the air-passages and lungs, such as Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, we have made this branch of our institution one of the leading Departments. We have every kind of useful instrument for examining the organs involved, such as rhinoscopes, laryngoscopes, stethoscopes, spirometers, etc., etc., as well as all of the most approved kinds of apparatus for the application of sprays, fumigations, atomizations, pulverizations, inhalations, and all other forms of approved medicinal applications.

We publish three separate books on Nasal, Throat and Lung diseases, viz.: A Treatise on Consumption, Laryngitis and Bronchitis; price, postpaid, ten cents; A treatise on Asthma, or Phthisic, giving new and successful treatment; price, postpaid, ten cents; A treatise on Chronic Nasal Catarrh, price, postpaid, two cents.

DISEASES OF DIGESTION.

Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Obstinate Constipation, Chronic Diarrhea, Tape-worms, and kindred affections are among those chronic diseases in the successful treatment of which our specialists have attained unparalleled success. Many of the diseases affecting the liver and other organs contributing in their functions to the process of digestion, are very obscure, and are not infrequently mistaken by both laymen and physicians for other maladies, and treatment is employed directed to the removal of a disease which does not exist. Our Complete Treatise on diseases of the Digestive Organs will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

KIDNEY DISEASES.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and kindred maladies, have been very largely treated, and cures effected in thousands of cases which had been pronounced beyond hope. The study and practice of chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the urine in our consideration of cases, with reference to correct diagnosis, in which our institution long ago became famous, has naturally led to a very extensive practice in diseases of the urinary organs. Our specialists have acquired, through a vast and varied experience, great expertness in determining the exact nature of each case, and, hence, have been successful in nicely adapting their remedies for the cure of each individual case.

The treatment of diseases of the urinary organs having constituted a prominent branch, or specialty, of our practice at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, and, being in constant receipt of numerous inquiries for a complete but concise work on the nature and curability of these maladies, we have published a large illustrated treatise on these diseases, which will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

BLADDER DISEASES.

INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, Gravel, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Retention of Urine, and kindred affections may be included among those in the cure of which our specialists have achieved marvelous success. These are fully treated of in our illustrated pamphlet on Urinary Diseases. It includes numerous testimonials from well-known people. Sent by mail for ten cents in stamps. Send for it at once.

STRICTURE.

STRICTURES AND URINARY FISTULÆ.—Hundreds of cases of the worst form of strictures, many of them greatly aggravated by the careless use of instruments in the hands of inexperienced physicians and surgeons, causing false passages, urinary disease, and other complications, annually consult us for relief and cure. That no case of this class is too difficult for the skill of our specialists is proved by cures reported in our illustrated treatise on these maladies, to which we refer with pride. To intrust this class of cases to physicians of small experience, is a dangerous proceeding. Many a man has been ruined for life by so doing, while thousands annually lose their lives through unskillful treatment. Send particulars of your case and ten cents in postage stamps, for a large, illustrated treatise containing many testimonials.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

Epileptic Convulsions, or Fits, Paralysis, or Palsy, Locomotor Ataxia, St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or inability to sleep, and threatened insanity, Nervous Debility, arising from overstudy, excesses, and other causes, and every variety of nervous affection, are treated by our specialists for these diseases with a measure of success heretofore regarded as impossible. See numerous cases reported in our different illustrated pamphlets on nervous diseases, any one of which will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps, when request for them is accompanied with a statement of a case for consultation, so that we may know which one of our Treatises to send.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.

So alarmingly prevalent are those chronic diseases peculiar to females, and so famous have our institutions become for their cure that we were long ago obliged to create a special department, thoroughly organized, and devoted exclusively to the treatment of these cases. The physicians and surgeons in this Department have made these delicate diseases their sole study.

Hundreds are brought to our institutions from far distant States on beds, and they go home well and strong. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Every important case (and we get few which have not already baffled the skill of all the home physicians) has the benefit of a full Council, composed of skilled specialists. Our Department and rooms for ladies in the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute are so arranged as to be very private, and free from the annoyances so common in other institutions. Send ten cents in postage stamps for our large Complete Treatise on Diseases of Women, illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates.

PILE TUMORS.

PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, and other diseases affecting the region of the lower bowel, are largely treated, and with marvelous success, by specialists, who give their whole time to the study and treatment of this class of affections. We never fail to cure pile tumors, however large. When the patient can come here for treatment, we will guarantee a cure.

Fortunately for suffering humanity, a method of treatment has been perfected and thoroughly tested in our institutions, by which in from six to fifteen days radical and perfect cures of the worst forms of piles are effected without causing any severe suffering. Send ten cents in stamps for our large illustrated Treatise on Piles.

RUPTURE.

Hernia (Bruech), or Rupture, no matter of how long standing, of what size, or what the age of the patient may be (if not under four years), is speedily and radically cured in every case undertaken by our specialists, without the knife, without dependence upon trusses, without pain, and without danger.

THROW AWAY TRUSSES. There is no longer any need of wearing clumsy, awkward, chafing, old trusses, which, at best, give only partial relief, which never cure, but often inflict great injury and induce inflammation and strangulation, from which thousands annually die.

NOT SAFE. There is no safety in depending upon any kind of truss, though, no doubt, every man who has suffered the agonies of a strangulated hernia, and died, thought himself safe. Both the rupture and the truss keep up a mental strain and induce nervous debility and various organic weaknesses of the kidneys, bladder, and associate organs.

CURES GUARANTEED in every case undertaken. Can any sufferer ask for greater inducements than these?

Notwithstanding the great number of ruptures treated in the three years past, many of them of immense size and of such a character that no other plan of treatment could possibly have succeeded, every case to which this perfected system of treatment has been thoroughly applied, has been perfectly cured. Only a few days residence at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute is necessary.

Abundant references, by permission of those whom we have cured, will be furnished to any one wishing to call upon or write them.

An illustrated treatise on Rupture sent to any address upon receipt of ten cents.

DELICATE DISEASES.

Organic weakness, nervous debility, premature decline of the manly powers, involuntary vital losses, and kindred affections, are speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured.

To those acquainted with our institutions it is hardly necessary to say that the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, with the branch establishment located at No. 3 New Oxford Street, London, England, have, for many years, enjoyed the distinction of being the most largely patronized and widely celebrated institutions in the world for the treatment and cure of those affections which arise from youthful indiscretions and pernicious, solitary practices.

We, many years ago, established a special Department for the treatment of these diseases, under the management of some of the most skillful physicians and surgeons on our Staff, in order that all who apply to us might receive all the advantages of a full Council of the most experienced medical men.

WE OFFER NO APOLOGY. We offer no apology for devoting so much attention to this neglected class of diseases, believing no condition of humanity is too wretched to merit the sympathy and best services of the noble profession to which we belong. Many who suffer from these terrible diseases contract them innocently. Why any medical man intent on doing good, and alleviating suffering, should shun such cases, we cannot imagine. Why any one should consider it otherwise than most honorable to cure the worst cases of these diseases, we cannot understand; and yet of all the other maladies which afflict mankind there are probably none about which physicians in general practice know so little.

We fully agree with the celebrated Dr. Bartholow, who says, "I think it a reproach to our profession that this subject has been permitted, in a measure by our own indifference, to pass into the hands of unscrupulous pretenders. Because the subject is disagreeable, competent physicians are loath to be concerned with it. The same unnecessary fastidiousness causes the treatment of this malady to be avoided in private practice."

We shall, therefore, continue, as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration, sympathy, and skill, all applicants who are suffering from any of these delicate diseases.

Our Complete and Illustrated Treatise on these subjects is sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES A SPECIALTY.—Although we have, in the preceding paragraphs, made mention of some of the special ailments to which particular attention is given by the specialists at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, yet the institution abounds in skill, facilities, and apparatus for the successful treatment of every form of chronic ailment, whether requiring for its cure medical or surgical means.

BIRDS-EYE VIEW OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH., SHOWING HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

The above is a geographically correct view (though containing but a small portion of the buildings) of Charlevoix, Mich., a village of over twelve hundred inhabitants, rapidly growing in favor and reputation as one of the most delightful Summer Resorts and safest harbors in northern Michigan. Several lines of steamers concentrate here, connecting at all hours of the day with all surrounding towns, fishing streams, picnic parks, and other places of interest, health, and pleasure. Unequaled inducements are also offered the permanent settler who desires to invest his capital in manufacturing enterprises where it will bring the best results. The resources of the county are being developed so as to bring the richest returns.

The following table shows the nature and amount of shipments from the Pine Lake region during the season of 1884, as reported from the custom house in Charlevoix:

Hardwood lumber, feet	14,760,500
Pine lumber, feet	112,000
Lath, pieces	225,000
Square timber, feet	235,000
Broom handles	43,000
Torchlight handles	41,000
Railroad ties	117,000
Cedar posts	47,000
Telegraph poles	2,000
Wood, cords	18,000
Bark, cords	6,000
Pig iron, tons	14,000

This does not include a daily shipment of over 1,000 pounds of fresh fish, which during the present season of 1885 has increased to over 3,000 pounds daily.

During the past two years a large amount of building has been done, which the JOURNAL summarized on September 10th, as follows:

Manufacturing establishments	$35,000
Public Buildings	8,800
Business houses	13,000
Residences	28,650
Charlevoix resort	12,850
Chicago resort	$6,000
Additions and Improvements	3,000
Warehouses and docks	1,500
Barns	1,350
Government work	11,000
Miscellaneous improvements	10,000
Total	$131,150

Eskimo Patience.

The number of years the Eskimo will spend in plodding away at the most simple things shows them to be probably the most patient people in the world.

When we were near King William's Land, I saw an Eskimo working upon a knife that, as nearly as I could ascertain, had engaged a good part of his time some six years preceding that date. He had a flat piece of iron, which had been taken from the wreck of one of Sir John Franklin's ships, and from this he was endeavoring to make a knife-blade, which, when completed, would be about twelve inches long. In cutting it from this iron plate, he was using for a chisel an old file, found on one of the ships, which it had taken him two or three years to sharpen by rubbing its edge against stones and rocks. His cold-chisel finished, he had been nearly as many years cutting a straight edge along the ragged sides of the irregular piece of iron, and when I discovered him he had outlined the width of his knife on the plate and was cutting away at it. It would probably have taken him two years to cut out this piece, and two more to fashion the knife into shape and usefulness.

The file which he had made into a cold-chisel was such a proof of labor and patience that it was a great curiosity to me, and I gave him a butcher's knife in exchange for it. Thus almost the very thing he had been so long trying to make he now unexpectedly found in his possession. When I told him that our factories, or big igloos, could make more than he could carry of such butcher-knives during the time we had spent in talking about his, he expressed great surprise.—Lieut. Schwatka, in St. Nicholas for July.

Warned Against Persian Receptions.

When the Secretary (Bayard) told him that, above all other things, he must steer clear of a public reception by the Persians, Judge Hanna, for the hundredth time, looked puzzled, and, for the thousandth time during the week, said to himself: "Well, I'm d—d." The Secretary explained:

Several years ago, when the Persian Mission was created, a man named Benjamin of Ohio was sent out to draw the $500 per year and to look after the missionaries. The Persians were delighted over the recognition given them by the United States Government. To have a resident Minister was magnified by them into a high honor. Mr. Benjamin was met outside of Teheran and conducted into the city with all the pomp and ceremony of a great procession, in which there were camels and elephants and triumphal cars enough to outfit a score of modern menageries. Mr. Benjamin was banqueted and feted in grand style. After a time he settled down to the humdrum routine of hearing missionaries' stories. One day a Persian diplomat walked into the Legation offices, and with Oriental politeness presented to the astonished Minister a bill for the procession and the entertainment given him. The items footed up over $6,000. Poor Mr. Benjamin received the account, and, with forced composure, told the diplomat it should receive attention. He got the Legation together and asked for advice. Nobody could respond. Perhaps the unfortunate Minister wept over the bill. Probably he prayed over it. Undoubtedly he wished he had never left Ohio. At length, in despair, he forwarded to the State Department the terrible document. There was more consultation and liberal abuse of the Persian idea of hospitality. The upshot was an appropriation from the contingent fund, taking the greater part of it to pay for Mr. Benjamin's reception. For the rest of that year the department was run with due regard to the fact that this Persian investment necessitated reduction of incidental expenses to the lowest possible figures.

The Secretary told Judge Hanna the whole story, and, in concluding, said he trusted that the new Minister would now appreciate the imperative necessity of getting into Teheran without an escort of elephants and camels, and that he would, with Jeffersonian, simplicity, decline to be made a lion by the Persians at the expense of his own Government.—Washington Dispatch.

Wanted to be Sure.

"Do you mean to say I'm a liar?" said a tall man bracing up to a sawed-off specimen about as big as a keg of nails.

"That's just what I mean," replied the little one, standing square on his pegs, and not fluctuating to any appreciable extent.

"Well, that's all right," continued the tall man, not advancing from his original position, "that's all right. I just wanted to be sure whether you meant it or not, for so many men are liars nowadays that really I don't know who to believe. Let's have something to drink."—Merchant Traveler.

Nothing New.

Paul Boyton's prank in placing a dummy torpedo against the British war ship Garnet in New York harbor brings to mind Sergt. Lee's attempt to blow up Lord Howe's flagship, the Eagle, in the same waters in 1776. He used a torpedo-boat invented by David Bushnell, afterward a captain in the patriotic army. It had been tried with success experimentally, and gave promise of being useful in serious warfare. The first opportunity for such use occurred when the British fleet took possession of New York harbor. The Bushnell boat was more like a barrel than a boat. It was of oak, iron banded, and only large enough for one person. When floating upright, the navigator's head was a little above the level of the water. By means of two force pumps, worked by the occupant's feet, the vessel could be made to sink or rise in the water by forcing water out or in, and so changing its specific gravity. Its progress horizontally was governed by two revolving paddles in front, turned by a crank inside. The torpedo was fastened to the back of the boat by a screw, the release of which set in motion a clock connected with a gun-lock and flint. After the predetermined interval of time had elapsed, the clock would strike and ignite the powder.

The torpedo carried by Lee against the Eagle was charged with 150 pounds of powder (some say 130 pounds), and the clock was set to explode the charge in thirty minutes after the torpedo was placed. Lee was towed to the neighborhood of the fleet by a party in whale boats, and then proceeded to attack the fleet alone. He succeeded in reaching the Eagle, a sixty-four gun ship, undetected, and spent a long time in a vain attempt to fasten the torpedo to her bottom with hooks and screws, a band of iron at the edge of the copper sheathing proving an especially serious obstacle. As daylight approached he was compelled to leave the fleet and return to the city. Off Governor's island he was intercepted by a British barge, when, to avoid capture, he exploded his torpedo, escaping from his pursuers during the panic which the explosion excited. If the torpedo had been provided with a strong magnet, the strip of iron which thwarted him would have insured the success of his undertaking, and the use of torpedoes in naval warfare might have been hastened half a century.—Scientific American.

A contribution to an English magazine says that it was formerly the trick of the English countryman to substitute a cat for a sucking pig and bring it to market in a bag, so that he who without careful examination made a hasty bargain, was said to buy a pig in a poke and might get a cat in a bag, and a discovery of this cheat gave rise to the expression "letting the cat out of the bag" as a premature and unlucky exposure.

The art of making paper from wood was carried on long before man ever dreamed of it. On a drowsy summer's day the wasp stows away in his hind leg all the wood fibre he can gather. This he mixes with saliva and forms into a substantial paper covering for his nest.
